In the second year of the Hijrah, Muhammad commenced hostilities against the Quraish, and the first pitched battle took place at Badi. With an army of 805 followers, of whom two-thirds were citizens of al-Madinab, Muhammad routed a force three times the number The following graphic description of the battle of Badr is given by Sir William

Mnir (New ed p 280)
"The valley of Badr consists of a plain, with steep hills to the north and east, on the south is a low rocky range, and on the west rise a succession of sandy hillocks A rivulet, rising in the inland mountains, runs through the valley, producing along its course nume rous springs, which here and there were dug into disterns for the accommodation of tra veilers At the nearest of these springs, the army of Mahomet halted Habal, a citizen of Medina, advised him to proceed onwards 'Let us go,' he said, 'to the farthest spring, on the side of the enemy I know a neverfailing fountain of sweet water there, let us make that our reservoir and destroy the other wells' The advice was good. It was at once adopted, and the command of the water thus secured

"The night was drawing on. So they hastily constructed near the well a hut of palm branches, in which Mahomet and Abu Bakr slept Såd ibn Muådz (Sa'd ibn Mu'az) kept watch by the entrance with his drawn sword It rained during the night, but more heavily towards the camp of the Coreish. The Moslim army, wearled with its long march, enjoyed sound and refreshing sleep. The dreams of Mahomet turned upon his enemies, and they were pictured to his ima-gination as a weak and contemptible force "In the morning he drew up his little army, and, pointing with an arrow which he held in his hand, arranged the ranks The previous day he had placed the chief banner, that of the Reingees, in the hands of Musal, who nobly proved his right to the distinction. The Khazrajite ensign was committed to Hobab; that of the Bani Aus, to Sad ibn Mnådz.

"Meanwhile, dissension again broke out m the camp of the Coreish, on the policy of righting against their kinsmen. Shubs and Otba ('Utbah), two chiefs of rank, influenced, it is said, by their slave Addas (the same who comforted the Prophet on his flight from Tayıf), strongly urged that the attack should be abandoned Just then, Omeir, a diviner by arrows, having ridden hastily round the valley, returned to report the result of his reconneisance 'Ye Coroush,' he said, after telling them his estimate of the enemy's number calamities approach you, fraught Inevitable death rideth with destruction upon the camels of Yathreb (Yasrib) It is a people that hath norther defence nor refuge but in their swords. They are dumb as the grave, their tongues they put forth with the serpent's deadly aim. Not a man of them shall we kill, but in his stead one of ourselves also will be slaid, and when there shall have been slaughtered amongst us a number equal unto them, of what avail will life be to us after that?' These words began to produce a pacific effect, when Abu Jahl, as before, loudly opposed the proposals for peace Turning to Amir the Hadbramite he bade him call to mind the blood of his brother slain at Nakbja The flame was rekindled Amir threw off his clothes, cast quet upon his body, and began frantically to cry aloud his brothers name. The deceased had been a confederate of the family of Sharbs and Otha ('Utbah) Then pride and hosour were They saw that thoughts of peace affected must now be scattered to the winds and they resolved signally to vindicate themselves from the imputation of cowardice rest on them by Ahu Jahl. The army was drawn up a line. The three standards for the centre and wings were borne, according to ancien pri vilege by members of the house of Abd al Dur They moved forward but slowly were the intervening sand nills which the rais had made heavy and fatiguing. The same cause acting with less intensity, had rendered the ground in front of Mahomat lighter and more fron to walk upon. The Coreish laboured under another disadvantage they had the rising sun before them, while the army of Medina faced the west

"Mahomet had barely arrayed his line of battle, when the advanced column of the enemy was discorned over the raing sands in front. Their groutly superior immbers were concealed by the fall of the ground behind and this imparted confidence to the Mosierus But Mahomet was fully alige to the critical position. The fate of Islam hang upon the issue of the approaching battle, Followed by Abu Bakr, he hastened for a moment into the little but, and raising his hands poured forth these carnest petitions, "O Lord, I be seach Thee forget not Thy promise of assistance and of victors. O Lord! if this little band to vanquished idolatry will prevail and the pure worship of thee ceast from on the earth 'The bond, said Abu Bakr, comforting him, will sarely come to thine aid, and will lighten thy countenance with the joy of victory

"The time for action had arrived Maho met again come frith. The cremy was stready close, but the army of Medina remained ctill. Mahomet had no cavalry to cover an advince, and before superior num bers he must keep close because Accordingly the Prophet had strictly fulfidden his followers to star till Le should give 'he order for advance only they were to check any flank movement of the Coreish by the dis charge of arrows The custern was guarded as their pulladram. Certain desperate war note of the Coress sworr that they would drink water from it destroy it or perion in the attempt. Scarcely one returned from the reah enterprise, With signal gallantry, Aswad advanced close to the brank, when a blow from Hames's sword fell upon his leg and nearly severed it from his hody. Still overending himself he crawled inwards and made good his vow for he dis k of the water and with his rom uning leg demolished art of the custom before the sword of Hamsa put an sud to his bie.

warfare, single combats had been fought-at various points, when the two brothers Simiba and Othe, and Wulld the son of Othe still amairing from the words of Abu Jahl, ad vauced into the space between the ermies, and defied three champions from the army of Mahomet to meet them singly Three citizens of Medina stepped forward; but Mahomot, unwilling either that the glory or the hurden of the opening conflict should rest with his allies, called them back, and, turning to his kinsmen said 'Ye sons of Hashim' arise and fight according to your right. Then Oberda (Ubaidah), Hamza, and Ali, the uncle ind consins of the Prophet, went forth Hames were an os rich feather in his breast and a white plume distinguished the helmet of Ali But their features were hid by then armour Otha, therefore, not knowing who his opponents might be, cried aloud, Speak that we may recognise you! If ye be equals, we shall fight with you! Hamza answered, 'I am the on of Abd at Muttallb -Hamza the Laon of God, and the Lion of His Prophet' 'A worthy for exclaimed. Otha 'but who are these others with Hamza repeated then names Otha oplied, 'Meet foes, every one! "Then Otha called to his son Walid, Arese and light? So Walld stopped forth and All came out against him. They were the youngest of the six. The combat was short Walid fell mortally wounded by the sword of All Eager to avonge his son's death, Otha hastened forward, and Hamze advanced to meet him. The awords gleamed quick, and again the Coreishite warrior was slain by the Moslim bon Shaiba alone remained of the three champions of Mecca, and Obeida, the return of the Moslems, threescore year and five now drew near to fight with him Both being well advanced in years, the conflict was less decisive than before At last, Shaiba dealt a sword-cut on the leg of Oheida with anch force as to sever the tendon, and bring him to the ground Seeing this, Hamza and the both rushed on Shaiba and despatched him Oberds survived but for a few days, and was lursed on the march back at Safra

' lun fate of their champions was ominous for the C tersh, and their sprits sank. The ranks began to close, with the battle-cry on the Moslem side of 'Ye conquerors, strike!' ard the highting became general But there were still many of those scenes of individual brivers which claracteries the irregular warsare of Assatic armes, and often impart to them a Han erro interest Productes of valong were exhibited on both sides but the arms of the Faithful was boine forward-by an enthusiasm which the half-hearted Coreish ware unable to withstand

What part Mahomet himself took in the battle is not clear Some traditions represent hun moving glong the ranks with a drawn sword it is more likely (appearing to others) that he contented hupself with inciting his followers by the promise of divine assistance, and by helding out the prospect of Paradise to those who fell the spirit of Omeir, a lad of but sixteen years, was kindled within him as he listened to the Prophet's words Tradition delights to tell of the ardour with which the stripling threw away a handful of dates which he was eating 'Is it these, exclaimed, that hold me back from Partdies? Verrly I will taste no more of them until I meet my Lord! With such words, he drew his sword, and, casting himself upon the enemy, soon obtained the fate he coveted

"It was a stormy wintry lay A piercing blast swept across the valley 'That,' sa l Mahomet, 'is Gabriel with a thousand angels flying as a whirlwind at our foe' Another, and yet another blast —it was Michael, and after him, Scraphil, each with a like angelre troop The battle raged. The Prophet stroped and lifting a handful of gravel, east it towards the Coreish, and oried, 'Confusion seize their faces!' action was well timed The line of the Coreish began to waver Their movements were impeded by the heavy saids on which they stood, and, when the ranks gave way, their numbers added but confusion Moslems followed eagerly on then retreating steps slaying or taking captive all that fell within their reach Retreat soon turned into ignominious flight The Coreish, a their haste to escape, cast away then armour and abandoned then beasts of burden with the camp and sourpage Forty-nine were killed, and about the same number taken prisoners Mahomet lost only fourteen, of whom eight were citizens of Wedina, and aix Refugees

Many of the principal men of the Coreish and some of Mahomot's butterest opponents were slain Chief amongst these was Abu Jahl Muadz brought him to the ground by a blow which cut his leg in two Muadz in his turn, was attacked by Ikrima ('Ikrimah), the son of Abu Jahl, and his arm nearly severed from his shoulder As the mutilated limb hinging by the skin impeded his action. Mundz put his foot upon it, pulled it off, and went on his way fighting Such we've the heroes of Bedr Abu Jahl was vet breathing when Abdallah Mahomet's servant, ian up, and cutting off his head, carried it to his master 'The head of the enemy of (sod!' exclaimed Mahomet. 'God! There is none other God but He!' 'There is no other! responded Abdallah as he cast the bloody head at the Prophet's feet 'It is more acceptable to me, cried Mahomet, 'than the choicest camel m all Arabia

But there were others whose death caused no gratification to Mahomet Abdul Bokh tan had shown him special kindness at the time when he was shut up in the quarter of Abu Talib , Mahemet, mindful of this favour, had commanded that he should not be hermed Abdul Bokhtarı had a companion seated on his camel behind him A warrior, riding up, told him of the quarter given by Mahomet, but added, 'I cannot spine the man behind thee' 'The women of Mecca, Abdul Bokhtarı exclaimed, shall never say that I abandoned my comrade through love of life Do thy work upon us' So they were killed, both he and his companion.

"After the buttle was over, some of the presoners were cruelly put to death. The fol lowing incident illustrates the savage spirit already characteristic of the faith. Omeya thn Kh iff and his son were unable to escape with the fugitive Corcish, and, seeing Abdal Rahman pass, imploied that he would make them his prisoners Abdal Rahman mundful of an ancient friendship, cast away the plunder he was carrying, and, making both his prisoners, was proceeding with them to the Moslim camp party passed, Bilal espied his old enemy-for Omeya had used to porsecute him-and he screamed aloud . Shav him This man is the head of the unbelievers. I am lost, I am lost, if he lives.' From all sides the infuriated soldiers, hearing Bild's appeal, poured in upon the wretched captions, and Abdal Rah man, finding registance impossible, bade them save their lives as best they could Defence was vam, and the two prisoners were imme

"When the enemy had disappeared, the army of Meding was for some time engaged in gathering the spoil Livery man was allowed to retain the plunder of anyone whom he himself had slam The rest was thrown into a common stock The booty con disted of one hundred and fifteen camela, fourteen hor es carpets and other articles of fine leather, vestments, and much equipage and armoni A diversity of opinion alose about the distribution. These who had hely pursued the enemy and exposed their lives in securing the spul claimed the whole, or at the least a sup mor portion while such as had remained chind upon the held of bettle for the safety of the Prophet and of the camp niged that they had equally with the others fulfilled the part using d to them, and trat, having been restrained by duty from the pursuit, they were entitled to a full share of the prev The contention was so sharp, that Mahomet interposed with a mes age from heaven, and assumed possession of the whole booty. It was God who had given the victory and to God the spoil belonged 'They will ask thee concerning Sav, the prev is God's and his the prev Prophet's When fore fear God, and dispose of the matter lightly among youselves, and be obedient unto God and His Prophet, if ye he true Believers -and so on in the same strain Shortly afterwards the following ordinance, which the Mussulman law of prize 1000gnass to the present day, was given forth 'And know that whatsucyer thing re plunder, verily one hith thereof is for God and for the Prophet, and for him that is of kin (unto the Prophet), and for the orphans. and the poor and the wayfarer—if ye be they that believe in God, and in that which We sent down to our Bervant on the Day of Discumination, the day on which the two armies met, and God is over all things powerful.' (See Qur'an, Sarah viii) "In accordance with the divise command, the booty was gathered together on the field, and placed under a special officer, a citizen of Modina. The next day it was divided near Safra, in equal allotments among the whole army, after the Prophet's lifth had been set apart. All shared alike, excepting that the horsemen received each two extra portions for their horses. To the lot of every man fell a camel, with its year, or two camels unaccoutred, or a leathern ceuch, or some such equivalent. Mahomit obtained the famous camel of Abu Jahl, and a sword known by the name of Daul Ficâr (Zu 'i-Fiqâr). The sword was selected by him beyond his share, according to a custom which allowed him, in virtue of the prophetic dignity, to choose from the booty before division, whatever thing might please him most

"The sun was now dechning, so they hastily dug a pit on the battle field, and cust the enemy a dead into it Mahomet looked on, as the hodios were brought up and cast in Ahu Bakr, too, stood by, and, examining their fewures, called aloud their names Otbal Shubal Omeyyal Abu Jahll exclaimed Mahomet, as one by one the corpses were without ceremony, thrown into the common grave 'Have ye now found that which your Lord promised you true? What my Lord promised me that verily have I found to be true Wos unto this people! Ye have rejected me, your Prophet! Ye cart me forth and others gave me refuge, ye fought against me, and others came to my help! O Prophet!' sain the hystanders 'dost thou speak unto the dead?' 'You verily, replied Mahomet, 'for they well know 'hat the promise of their Lord unto them hath fully come to pass?

At the moment when the corpse of Otha was tossed into a pit, a look of distress overcast the countenance of his son, Abu Hodreifa (Abu Hugaffsh), Mahomet turned kindly to him, and said, Perhaps thou art distressed for the fathers fate? 'Not so, O Propurt of the Lord! I do not doubt the justice of my fathers fate, but I knew well his wise and generous heart, and I had trusted that the Lord would have led him to the fath But row that I see him slain and my hope destroyed, it is for that I grieve. So the Prophet comforted Abu Hodzeifa and blossed him, and said, 'It is we'!'

The aimy of Medina, carrying their dead and wounded, retired in the evening to the valley of Otherl, several miles from Bedrand there Mahomet passed the night. On the morrow the prisoners were brought up before him. As he scrutinised each, his eye fell heriely on Nadhr, son of Harish (al Nazribn al Haris). There was death in that glance, whispered Nadhr, trombling, to a hystander. 'Not so,' rephed the other, 'it is but thine own imagination.' The unfortunate prisoner thought otherwise, and besought Musab to intercede for him Musab reminded him that he bad denied the faith and persecuted Bilitters. 'Ah!' said Nadhr, 'had the Coreish made those

a prisoner, they would never have put thee to death! 'Even were it so,' Mush's scornfully replied, 'I am not as thou art, Islâm hath rent all bonds asunder' Micdâd, the captor, fearing lest the prisoner, and with him the chance of a rich ransom, was about to slip from his hands, cried out, 'The prisoner is mine' But at this moment the command to 'Strike on his head!' was interposed by Mahomet, who had been watching what passed And, O Lord!' he added, 'do thou of thy bounty grant unto Micdâd a better prey than this' Nadhr was forthwith beheaded by Ah

"Two days afterwards, about half-way to Medina, Joba, another prisoner, was ordered out for execution. He ventured to expostulate and demand why he should be treated more rigorously than the other captives. Because of thy enmity to God and to His Prophet,' replied Manomet. 'And my little girl!' cried Ocba, in the bisterness of his woul, 'who will take care of her?' 'Hell-fire!' evclaimed the heartless conqueror, and on the instant his victim was hewn to the ground. 'Wretch that thou wast!' continued Mahomet, 'and persecutor! unbeliever

Such was the battle of Badr Inagmificant in numbers, but most memorable in the annals of Islām on account of its important results. It was at Badi that "the Prophet" first drew the sword in the assertion of his claim as a commissioned apostle of the Most High God, and the victory is attributed in the Qurān to the direct intervention of the Almighty. See Sürah in 11 in God, in His Prophet, and in His Book! I give thanks unto the Lord that hath slain thee, and comforted mine eyes thereby

"Ye have already had a sign in the meeting of the two hosts. The one host fought in the cause of God, and the other was initial. To their own eye sight, the infidels six you twice as many as themselves. And food aided with His succour whom He would And in this tially was a lesson for men endued with discernment."

Ai-Barzawi, the commentator, says 8,000 augels fought for the Muslims on the buttle-field of Badr

Muhammad was received in triumph at al-Madinah, but his 10y was interrupted by the death of his daughter Ruqaiyah, the divorced wife of 'Utbah ibn Lahab, but who had been afterwards married to Usmän ibn 'Affän On his return to al-Madinah (A.H. 8), Muhammad found his position much strengthered, and from this time the Qur'an assumes a rude dictatorial tone He who at one time only spoke as a searcher after truth, now demands unhesitating obedience from the whole country of Arabia

The Jews, however, were still unimpressed and were slow to acknowledge Muhammad, although he claimed to be but the teacher of the creed of Abraham Muhammad sanght but a plausible excuse for a rupture with the sons of Israel and an opportunity soon presented itself. A Musim gri was insulted by a youth of a Jawish tribe, and, taking advantage of the circumstance the whole tribe was attacked, proscribed and banished Their houses and lands were confiscated and divided amongst the Faithful In the course of the same year, Ka'b ibn al-Ashraf a Jew, was assassinated because he annoyed the Muslims with his verses About this time, Muhammad married his fourth wife, Hafrah, the daughter of 'Umar the celebrated Khalifah In the early part of the year, al-Hasan, the son of Fatimah and 'Ali, was born

The tidings of the defeat at Badr aroused the bitterest feelings of the Quraish They advanced upon al-Madmah 3,000 strong In ten days the Makkan army reached Zu l-hal-fah, four miles south of al-Madinau, and then moving northwards, they encamped at Uhud, an isolated mountain three miles north east of the city Muhammad, clad in armour, led out his army of 1,000 men, and halted for the night, and at early dawn advanced on Uhud He was soon abandoned by Abdu llah, the chief of the Hypocrites [MUNASI-QUN] with 300 of his followers

Khālid ibn al Walīd a name afterwards famous in Muslim history commanding the right wing of the Quraish, attacked the Muslims, and raised the cry "Muhaminad is slain". The confusion of the Fathful was great, and defied all the efforts of Muhammad to rally them The Prophet him self was wounded in the face by two arrows The Mushms vere completely deteated, but the retreat was abiy conducted by Abu Bakr, Uman and 'Usman, and the victorious Quraish did not attempt a pursuit

account of the battle -

"When the two armies engaged and approached each other, Hind daughter of Utbah, the wife of Abū Suiyan, arose with the women that were with her, and they beat upon the tabors as they followed the men to battle And Hind and 'Well done, ve sons of 'Abdu 'd-Dar well done? Strike ye with every weapon ve possess. And Hamzali the Prophets uncle, fought most valuatly that day and he slew Artah, the standard-bearer of the unbelievers "

"And Abu Kamiyah the Laisite slew Mustab, the standard bearer of the Muslims and whon Mus ab was slain, the Prophet gave the standard of Islam to All the son of Abu Tallb Naw, the archers were too eager for the spoil, and they left the position in which Muhammad had posted them And Khalid, the leader of the unbelievers, came with the cavalry to the rear of the Muslims, and raised a cry that Muhammad was slam. So the Muslims were overcome by the unbelievers. and the Quraish gamed the victory number of martyrs in the cause of Islam who fell at Uhud was seventy The number of the slain amongst the unbelievers was twentytwo The enemy even struck Muhammad. Their stones hit him and he fel! His foreteeth were struck out, and he was wounded in the face. Two nails of the holmet entered the face of Muhammad And Abw Ubaidah pulled one of the nails out of his face and one tooth dropped out, and he pulled out another nail and another tooth dropped out And when Abu 'Ubaidah was taking out the teeth, Sunan Abu Sa'id sucked the blood from Muhammads face and swallowed it Upon which the Prophet said, 'Whoseever toucheth my blood, him shall the fire of hell never touch.

'Then Hind and her companions fell on the Muslims who were slain, and cut off their noses and their sais And Hund out a slice from Hamzah's liver and ate it Then Abū Sufyan, the hüsband of Hind, stuck his spear into Hamsah's body, and cried with a lond voice, 'The fortunes of war are uncertain! The day of Uhud for the day of Badr' Let the idol of Hubal be exalted!' Then Muhammad sought for the body of his uncle. and he found it lying on the ground with the belly rupped open and the cars and nose cut And the Prophet said, 'God hath revealed to me concerning the Quraish Verily, retaliation shall be made on thirty of them for the death of Hamzah, and verily Hamzah Then Muham is now in the seventh heaven mad prayed to: Hamzah, and went to each of the bodies of the slain and prayed for them. Some of the Mushms wanted to carry then dead to al-Madmin but the Prophet said, 'Bury them where they fell,'

Those is an allusion to the defeat at Uhud in the third Surah of the Qur'an "What befell you when the two armies met by God's permission Count not those who are killed in the way of God as dead. They are living with their Lord

The fourth year of the Hurah (A.D 625) opened with the despatch of 500 Muslims against the tribe of Asd, who were making preparations to invade al-Madinah The enemy fled at the appearance of the Muslim troops and the place was sacked

During this year there were several expedi tions Amongst others, one against the Jewish tribe Banti Nazir whose homes were spoiled, and the people bamshed, because they would not accept the mission of the Apostle of God" I bere is an allusion to this event in the second Surah of the Quran A second expedition was also made to Badr, but there was no fighting, although the event is known as the second battle of Bada, for after waiting eight days for an engagement with the Quraish, the Muslims returned in triumph to al-Madinah

It was about this time that Muhammad made two additions to his haram, by marrying Zainab, the widow of 'Ubaidah, who fell at Badr, as his tifth wife, and Ummu Salimal the widow of Abū Sahmah who fell at the battle of Uhud, for his sixth, thus ex ceeding the legal number of four wives, to which he restricted his followers

Muhammad being thi estened by combined contingents of the Quraish, the Banu Ghatfan and the Jewish tribes of Nazīr and Qurgisch, who advanced upon al Madinah with an army of 12,000 men, he, at the advice of a Persian named Salman, caused a trench to be dog round the city, and then msued forth to defend it at the head of $,000 Muslims Both sides remained inactive for nearly a month, when, at last, the Quraish and their allies broke up the siege. This engagement is known in Muslim history as Gazwatu "Khandaq, or the "Battle of the Ditch" Special reference is made to this event in the Quran, Surah xxxiii 9, where the success of the Muslims is attributed to the intervention of God, "who sent a blast and a host that were not seen."

The next expedition was against the lewish tribe, the Banu Quiaizah when Muhammad led an army of three thousand men with thirty-six horse The Jews sustained a siege of some twenty five days, but were at last compelled to capitulate. Their fate was left to the decision of the Prophet's companion, Said, whose sentence was that the male cap tives should be slain, the female captives and children sold into slavery, and the spoils divided amongst the army The Prophet commended the cruel judgment of Sad as a decision according to the judgment of God, given on high from the seven heavens, and about 700 captives were deliberately be headed, in parties in the piesence of Muham mad One of the female captives Rihanah whose husband and male relatives had perished in the massacre, the Prophet reserved for himself This cruel massacre of the Banu Quraizah is commended in the xxxmrd Surah of the Qur'an, verse 25

Before the close of this year, Muhammad married his cousin Zainab The Prophet had previously given her in mairinge to Zaid ibn Harisah, his freed man and adopted son. But upon visiting the house of Zaid and not finding him at home, the Prophet accidentally cast his eyes on Zamub and was so smitten with her beauty, that he ex claimed, " Praise belongoth unto God who turneth the hearts of men even as He will Zamab saw that she had made an impression on the Prophet's heart, and when her has band returned, recounted the cucumstances to him Zaid determined to part with her in favour of his friend and benefactor, and offered to divorce her But the relations of the Araba to their adopted children were so strict, that nothing but a revelation from heaven could settle the difficulty It was to meet this domestic emergency that the Prophet produced the following verses of the Quran Surah xxxiii "6-38 to sanction his own heart's desire .

"And it is not for a believer, man or woman, to have any choice in their affairs when food and His Apostle have decreed a matter and whoever disobeyeth God and His Apostle, erreth with palpable error And, remember, when thou saidst to him unto whom food had shown favour, and to whom thou also hadst shown favour, "Keep thy write to thvself, and fear God, and thou didst hide in thy mind what God would bring to light, and thou didst fear man, but more right had it been to fear God. And when Zaid had settled concerning her to divorce her, we married her to thee that it might not be a crime in the faithful to marry the wives of their adopted sons, when they have settled the affan concerning them. And the behest of God is to be performed. No blame attacheth to the Prophet where God hath given him a permission. Such was the way of God with those prophets who flourished before thee."

The scandal of the marriage was removed by the pretended revelation, and according to the Traditions, Zamab used to vaunt herself as the one wife of the Prophet's harim who had been given in mailiage by God Himself At all events, she exchanged a husband who had a pug nose and was short and ill-favoured for one who was the leading chief of Alabia!

Muhammads numerous marriages (four being the legal number—Sūrah iv 3) were likely to excite the jealousy and opposition of less lavoured Muslims, but an additional chapter of the Qur'an avoided complications, and allowed the "Prophet of God" greater liberty in this respect. See Surah xxiiii 49 "O Prophet, we have allowed thee thy wires whom thou hast dowered, and the slaves whom thy right hand possesseth and any believing woman who has given herself up to the Prophet if the Prophet desireth to wed her a privilege for thee above the rest of the Faithful"

About this time certain injunctions were issued for the seclusion of women and for the logulation of social and domestic intercourse (Surah xxv) These rules were made more stringent in the case of the Prophets own wives, who, in the case of incontinence, are threatened with double punishment (Sūrah xxxii) The jeulousy of the Prophet, who was now getting old was allayed by the Divine command, that his wives should, in the event of his death, never marry again. The obligation devolving on believers, to consort equally with their several wives, was also relaxed specially in the Prophet's favour (Sūrah xlviii)

In the sixth year of the Hijrah several military expedition, were made. Amongst others, to the Banu Quraizah and the Banu Lahyan On his return from the last expedition. Muhammad stopped for a few moments to visit the grave of his mother, and desired to pray for her soul. But a verse from the Quran, alleged to have been revealed on this occasion, forbade his praying for the forgiveness of one who died an infidel. Surah ix 114, 115.

'It is not for the Prophet er the Faithful to pray for the forgiveness of those, even though they he of kin, who associate other beings with God, after it hath been made clear to them that they are to be the immates of Hell For neither did Abraham ask for giveness for his father, but in pursuance of a promise which he had promised to him but when it was shown him that he was an enemy to God, he declared himself clear of him Yet Abraham was pitiful, kind"

Muhammad marched in person against the Banu. I Mustaliq and completely surprised and routed them One thousand camels, five thousand sheep, and a great many women and children, became the spoil of the Mushims One of the female captives, named Juwairiyah, fell to the lot of Sabit ibn Qais, who, as a meritorious act, offered to release her and give her her liberty, for a certain aum. On applying to Muhammad to help her with the money to pay the ransom, he readily agreed to do so, and when she was freed he married her. Thereupon, the Mushims recognised the Banu 'l-Mustaliq as allies Juwairiyah survived. Muhammad forty-five years

At the last stage, teturning from the campaign against the Banu 'l-Mustaliq, 'Ayishah's tent and litter were by inadvertence carried away, while she was for a moment absent, and on her return she found herself in the dark alone Expecting the mistake to be discovered she sat down to await the issue, when, after some delay, one of the followers came up, and finding her in this plight, bade her mount his camel, and so conducted her to al-Madinah. The citizens drew simister conclusions from the circumstance, and Muhammad himself became estranged from 'Ayishah, and she retired to her father's home Several weeks elapsed, when, at length, the Prophet was supernaturally informed of her unocence (Surah xxiv) law was then promulgated which requires four eye-witnesses to establish the charge of adultery, in default of which the imputation is to be punished as a slander, with eighty lashes [QAZAF] 'Ayishah was taken back to her home, and her accusers were beaten

It was during the year A R 6, that Muhammad conceived the idea of addressing foreign sovereigns and princes, and of inviting them to emorace Islam. His letter to the Emperor Herachus has been handed down by fin 'Abbās (Mishkāt, book xvii ch civ), and is as follows.

"In the name of God, the Compassionate the Merciful, Muhammad, who is the servant of God, and His Apostle, to Haraqi, the Qaisar of Rüm Peace be on whoever has gone or the straight road After this I sav, Verily, I call you to Islam Embrace Islam, and God will reward you twofold If you turn away from the offer of Islam, then on you be the sins of your people O people of the Book (se Christians), come towards a creed which is fit both for us and for you. It is this, to worship none but God, and not to associate anything with God, and not to call others God Therefore, O yo people of the Book, if ye refuse, beware! We are Muslims, and our religion is Islam.

Busra that he might convey it to Cassar, but we have no record of a roply having been received

He also wrote to Kasra-Parwiz, King of Persia, but Kasra tore the letter in pieces On hearing the fate of his letter, Muhammad said, "Even so shall his kingdom be shattered to pieces." His third embassy was to Najasih, the King of Abyssima, who received the message with bonour The fourth was to Jarih ibn Matta, the Muqauqis, or Governor, of Egypt Jarih sent a polite reply, and begged the Prophet's acceptance of two beautiful Coptic slave girls. One of these, Shirin, the Prophet gave to Hasean the poet, but he was a supplied to the sent the poet, but he reserved the other Māriyah, for him self In due time, Māriyah presented the Prophet with a son, who was named Ibrahim, the birth of which made the mother a free woman, and placed her in the honourable position of the wife But the Prophet's extreme fondness for the recent addition to his already extensive harm was resented by his numerous wives. 'Ayishah and Hafsah were especially enraged, for the Prophet was in the habit of visiting Mariyah on the day due to one of these ladies. Hafsah, who, being rhe daughter of 'Unar, was a person of great politica' importance took up the matter, and in order to pacify her the Prophet swore solemniv tuat he would never visit Märiyah again, and enjoined Hafsah to keep the secret from the rest of his wives She, however, revealed it in confidence to 'Ayishah! Muhammed was annoyed at finding his confidence betraved, and separated himself for a whole month from his wives, and spent his time in Mariyah's apartment The situation time in Mariyah's apartment was a difficult one, not merely on account of the complications caused in his own domestic circle, but because 'Umar, the father of Hafsah, was a most important political personage in those days. The only way out of the difficulty was to produce a third direct revelation from heaven, which appeared in the Suratu t-Tahrim, or the "Chapter of Prohibition" (lxvi), of the Qur'an, and reads as follows -

Why, O Prophet! dost thou hold that to be forbidden which God hath made lawful to thee from a desire to please thy wives, since God is Lement, Merciful? God hath allowed you release from your oaths, and God is your master, and He is the Knowing, Wise When the Prophet teld a recent occurrence as a secret to one of his wives (se Hafeah), and when she divulged it and God informed him of this, he acquainted her with part and withheld part And when he had told her of it, she said, 'Who told thee this?' He said, 'The Knowing, the Sage hath told it me If ye both he turned to God in penitence for now have your hearts gone astray but if ye conspire against the Prophet, then know that God is his Protector, and Gabriel, and every just man among the faithful, and the angels are his helpers besides Haply if he put you both (se Haisah and 'Ayıshalı') away, his Lord will give him in exchange other wives better than you, Musluns, believers, devout, penitent, obedient, observant of fasting, both known of men and virgina '"

In the Muharram of a.H 7, Muhammad assembled a force of 1,600 men, and marched against Khaibar, a fertile district inhabited by the Jews, and aituated about six days' march to the north-east of al-Madinah. The attack on Khaibar taxed both the energy and skill of the Warrier Prophet, for it was defended by several fortresses. The fort

Qamus was defended by Kınānah, a powerful Jewish chief, who claimed for himself the title of "King of the Jews" Several assaults were made and vigorously repulsed by the besieged. Both Abū Bakr and 'Umar were equally unsuccessful in their attempts to take the position, when the Prophet selected Ali to lead a detachment of picked men famous Jewish waition named Marhab, now presented himself, and chillenged Ali to single combat. The chillenge was accepted and Ali, aimed with his famous sword

Za i-Fiqar, given to him by the Prophet cleft the head of his adversary in twam and secured a victory In 1 few days all the fortresses of the district were taken, and

Khaibai was subjugated to Islam

Amongst the female captives was bufiyah, the widow of the thief Kin mah who had fullen at Qamus One of Muhammad's followers begged her for himself, but the Prophot, struck with her beauty, shrew his mantle over her and took ner to his haim

The booty taken at Khaibai was very considerable and in order to secure the district to Muslim , ule the Jews of the district were exiled to the banks of the Jordan

It was during the Khaibai expedition that Muhammad metituted Mut'th, an abomin able temporary marriage to meet the demands of his army This is an institution still observed by the Shinks but soil by the Summs to have been abelished by Muli immad [MUTAN] It was at Khabar that an at temp, was made, by a lewess muned Zamah, to poison Muhammad She dessed a kid, and having steeped it in deadly porson, placed it before the Prophet, who are but a wouthful of the possened kid when the died visits

Zamab was immediately put to

covered death

The subjugation of the Jowish discrets of Fadak, Wadi 'l Quin and 'Tannah on the contines of Syria tollowed that of Khubar This year, in the sacred month f /1 7 Qa'dah, Muhammad decided to perform the Umrah or religious vistation of Miklah [UMBAH], and for this purpose he left il Madinah with a following of some 4 400 pieu When they were within two days march of Makkah their advance was hacked by the hostile Quraish, and Muhammad turning to the west from Usfan encamped at al Huduby th within seven miles of the sucred city. At this spot a truce was mane, which is known as the treaty of al Hudarbrah, in which it was stipulated that all hostilities should cease for ten voars and that for the future the Muslims should have the privilege unmolested of paying a yearly visit of three days to the Ka bah

After sacraficing the victims at al Hudai biyah, Muhammad an l his followers retuined to al-Madinah

The advent of the holy month Zu'l Qa Jah if the next year (A.H >) was cagerly ex, e cod by Muhammad and his followers, for there secording to the terms of the truce of Hudaibivah they might without molestant i visit the holy city, and spend trice to, in the performance of the accustomed rites The number of the faithful swelled on the approach to nearly 2,000 men, and the Quisish thought it best to retire with their forces to the heights overlooking the valley Seated on his camel al-Qaswa, which eight years be-fore had borne him in his flight from the cave of Saus a hunted fugitive, the Prophet, now surrounded by joyous crowds of disciples, the companions of his exile, approached and saluted the holy shane Eagerly did he press forward to the Ka'bah, touched with his staff the Black Stone, seven simes made the encuit of the holy nouse, seven times journejed between as-bala and al-Marwah, saerineed the victims and fulfilled all the ceremonies of the lesser pilgimage.

While at Makkah he negotiated an alliance with Maimunah, his eleventh and last wift His marriage gained him two most important converts—Khālid, the "Sword of God,' who before this had turned the tide of battle at Unud, and 'Amr, destined afterwards to carry to foreign lands the victorious

standards of Islam

The services of these two important converts were quickly utilised. An envoy from Muhammad to the Christian Prince of Bostia, m byin having been slain by the chief of Mutah-a village to the south-east of the Dend Son-a force of 3,000 men, under his adopted son Zaid, was sent to exact retriou tion, and to call the silending tribe to the faith On the northward march, though they lournt that an overwhelming force of Arabs and Romans-the latter of whom met the Muslims for the first time—was assembling to oppose them, they resolved resolutely to push forward The result was their disastrous defeat and repulse Zaid and Jaffan, a bintbor of 'All fell defending the white banner of tue Prophet Khālid, by a series of manonvres, succeeded in drawing off the army, and con ducting it without further loss to al-Madinah A month later, however, 'Amr marched unopposed through the lands of the hostile t then, recorved their submission, and restored the prestige of Islam on the Syrian fronties Mahammad deeply falt the loss of Zaid and later and cambited the tenderest sympathy for their wicows and orthans

The detect at Mûtah was followed in the south by events of the greatest moment to Muhammad Certain smouldering hostilities bety een tribes inhabiting the neighbourhood of Makkah broke forth about the end of the year These were judged to be infractions of the trenty (some of these tribes being in league with the Quraish), and were eagerly serzed upon by Muhammad as justifying those designs upon Makkah which the success of his arms and the dominion he pos-sessed over numberless tribes in the north, in the Hijaz, and Nijd, now made it easy for him

Having, therefore, determined to attack his not vecity, he announced his intention to his bill wire, and linected his allies among the Bedouin tithe to jo a him on the march to Makkah Mithough he took over; precaution to prevent his preparations becoming known, the news reached the ears of the Quraish, who sent Abn Sufyan to deprecate his anger and to ask him to abandon his purpose Humilistion and failure were the only result of this mission.

On the 1st January, a.D 630, Mnhammad's march commenced and after eight days, through unfrequented roads and defiles, the army, swelled to the number of 10,000 men, halted and lighted their camp fires on the heights of Marru 'z-Zahaān, a day's march from the sacied city. The Prophet had been joined on his march by his uncle al-'Abbās, and on the night of his arrival Abū Sufyān again presented himself, and besought an interview. On the morrow it was granted 'Has the time not yet come, O Abū Sufyān," cried Muhammad, 'for thee to acknowledge that there is but one God, and that I am his Apostle." He answered that his heart still felt some hestancy, but seeing the threatening sword of al-'Abbās, and knowing that Makkah was at the mercy of the Prophet, he repeated the prescribed formula of belief, and was sent to prepare the city for his approach

The Prophet made his public entry into Makkah on his favourite carnel, having Abū Bakr on his right hand, Usaid on his left, and Usamah walking behind him On his way he recited the xivmth Surah of the Qui'an, known as the "Chapter of Victory He then entered the Sacred Mosque and cucuited the Ka bah seven times touching the Black Stone as he passed with his stick Observing several pictures of angels inside the Kathah he ordered tuem to be removed at the same time crying out with a loud voice, "God is great!" He then fixed the Qiblah [QIBLAR] at Makkah, and ordered the destruction of the 360 idols which the Makkan temple contained, himself destroying a wooden pigeon suspended from the 100f, and regarded as one of the desting of the Quraish

On the 11th day of the month of Ramazan, he repaired to Mount as-Safa, where all the people of Makkan had been assembled in order to take the oath of allegiance to him 'Umar, acting as his deputy, administered the oath, whereby the people bound themselves to obey Muhammad, to abstain from theft, adulture, infanticide, lying and backbiting adultary, infanticide, lying and backbiting During his stay at Makkah, Muhammad sont small detachments of troops into the district who destroyed the temples of al-Vizza, Suwa, and Manüt, the three famous idol-temples of the neighbouring tribes. The Prophet had given strict orders that these expeditions should be carried out in a peace able manner and that only in cases of necessity should force of arms be used. Khalid ibn al Walid, however, who commanded 350 men, found himself opposed by the Jazimah tilbe, for instead of saying as they were commanded, "We are Muslima," they said, "We are Sabians", and the impetuous general, whose name afterwards became so delebrated in history, ordered the whole tribe to be slain. Muhammad, when he heard of this barbarity exclaimed, "Oh! my God, I am unnocent of this", and he despatched a large sum of money for the widows and orphans of the slain, and severely rebuked Khālid

The Prophet left Makkah after a fortnight's residence, and at the head of 12,000 men attacked the Banī Şaqif and the Banī Hawāzin. Mālik ibn Ans, the chief of the Şaqif, made a bold stand, and the Prophet rallied his forces with the utmost difficulty but having thrown a handful of dust in the direction of the enemy as a signal of victory, the Muslims renewed the charge, and 700 of the tribe were left dead on the field. This victory was followed immediately by one over the Banū Hawazin, in the valley of Autās (See Surah ix 25, 26)

The ninth year of the Hijiah is known as the year of deputations, as being the year in which the various tribes of Arabia submitted to the claim of the Prophet, and sent embassies of peace to him. It is also remarkable for numerous minor expeditions

Hearing that the Romans were assembling in large force on their frontier, Muhammad determined to attack them it Tabük (a city between al-Madinah and Damascus). The army sent to Tabük was the largest employed in the time of the Prophet, for it is said to have numbered 20,000 and 10,000 cavalry By the time the army had arrived at Tabük the numouned invasion had been proved unfounded. Muhammad, however, utilised a portion of the force by sending it, under the command of Khālid, to Dūmah, where he received the submission of the Jewish and Christian tribes. A treaty with John, the Christian Prince of Ailah, was made, and Ukaidai, the Christian chief of Dūmah was converted to Islām.

The gradual submission of Arabia, and the acknowledgment of the puritual and tem-poral supremacy of the Prophet throughout the entire peninsula, followed Indeed, in the complex system which be had established, the spiritual and secular functions were intimately brended, and involved in each other, and whilst in his humble home at al-Madinah he retained still the simple manners of his carlier years, which, at his time of life, he had probably no inclination to alter, he exer cused all those regal and saterdotal powers which the victorious arms of his heutenants, or the voluntary submission of the most distant provinces of Arable, had caused to be universally acknowledged Tax-collectors were appointed to receive the prescribed offerings or tithes, which generally amounted to "a tenth part of the increase"

The city of at Tä'li, trusting to its natural strength, constituted itself a centre of disaffection, but at last, driven to extremities, and seeing that all the neighbouring tribes had one by one submitted, its chief after a vain attempt to obtain some relaxation in the reless of Islam consented to the destruction of the adored idol al-Lat, and adopted the new faith.

It was during the time of the next yearly pilgrimage (March an G31), that Muhammad issued an important command, the i crowning stone of the system he had raised, i which shows at once the power he wielded. and the strong hold his doctrines had already taken throughout Arabia. Refusing to be present himself during the ceremonies of the pligrimage he commissioned 'Ali to announce to the assembled multitudes in the valley of Mins, that, at the expiration of the fear sacred months, the Prophet would hold him self absolved from every obligation or league with idolaters, that after that year no un believer would be allowed to perform the prigrimage, or to visit the holy places and further, he gave directions that either within or without the sacred torritory, war was to be wagen with them that they were to be killed, besieged, and laid in wait for 'where-seever found" He ordains, however, that if they repent and pay the legal alms, they are to be dismissed freely, but as regards "those unto whom the Scriptures have been delivered " (Jews and Christians, &c ) " they are to be fought against until they pay tribute by right of subjection and are reduced low

"Such, then," says Sir William Mun, "is the declared mission of Islam, arrived at by slow, though mevitable steps, and now imprinted unchangeably upon its banners The Jews and Christians and perhaps the Ma gians,—'people of the book'—are to be tole rated, but held in subjection and under tribute, but for the rest the sword is not to be sheathed till they are exterminated, or sub mit to the faith which is to be ome 'superior to every other religion

About the middle of the year, a here; grief fell upon Muhammad, in the death of his little son Ibrahim

On the return of the sacred month (March A b 682), Muhammad, accompanied by all his wives, selected his victims assumed the pilgrim garb, and set out on what is called Hugaru I-Wada, or "The Valedictory Pil gumage," to the holy places, from which every trace of the old superstition had been iemoved, and which, in accordance with his orders of the previous year, no idolates was to visit Approaching the Ka bah by the gate of the Banu Shaibah, he carefully performed all the ceremonies of the 'Umrah or "lesser Pilgrimage,' and then proceeded to consum mate those of the greater On the 8th of the holy month &u i Hijjah, he node to the Wadi Mina, some thre miles east of Makkah, and rested there for the might Next day, passing Muzdelifth the midway station, he reached in the evening the valley in which stands the grante hill of Arafah. From the summit he spoke to the pilgrams regarding its sacred precincts, sunounced to them the perfecting of their religion," officied up the prescribed prayers, and hurried back to Muz dalifah for the might On the 10th, proceeding to Mina, he cast the accustomed stones, slew the victums brought for sacrif . e, had his head shaved and his nails pared, ordering the hair, &o, to be burnt, and, the ceremonies ended, laid aside the pilgrim garb At Mina, during his three days' stay, he preached to the pilgrims, called them to witness that he had faithfully fulfilled his mission, and urged them not to depart from the exact observerces of the religion which he had appointed Returning to Makkah, he again went through the ceremonies of the 'Umrah, made the circuit of the temple, drank of the well Zamzam, prayed in the Ka'bah, and thus, having rigolously performed all the ceremonies, that his ex imple might serve as a model for all succeeding time, he turned to al-Madinah.

The excitement and fatigue of his journey to the holy places told sensibly on his health, which for some time had shown indications of increasing infirmity In the death of Ibra-him he had received a blow which weighed down his spirit, the poison of Khaibar still rankled in his veins, afflicted him at times with excruciating pain, and bowed him to the giave. His life had been a hard and a stirring one, and now the important affairs of his spiritual and temporal kingdom, and the cares of his large domestic circle, demed him that quiet and seclusion for which he longed.

The news of the Prophet's failing health was scon noised abroad, and tended to encourage his rivals to increased energy of action Three different revolts, each headed by a dangerous competitor, were now on the point of breaking out The first of these was led by Mussilimah, a rival prophet, who now stated that Muhammad had distinctly nominated him as his successor [MUSAILIMAH], the second, by Aswad a wealthy and eloquent tival, with a considerable following [ASWAD] and the third by Tulaihah, a famous warrior of Vajd, who claimed the prophetic office which ran -

' Musashmah, the Prophet of God, to Muhammad the Prophet of God Peace be to you I am your associate Let the exercise of authority be divided between us the earth is mine, and half belongs to the Quiaish But the Quraish are a greedy people, and will not be satisfied with a fair division "

To this presumptuous epistle Muhammad replied .

"Muhammad toe Prophet of God, to Mu sailmah the List Peace be on those who follow the straight road The earth is God s. and He greath it to whom He will Those only prosper who fear the Lord'

The opposition of Musailimah was, however a formidable one, and after Muhammad s death he was slain by Khalid during the

teign of Abn Bakr

The health of Muhammad grew worse, and he now requested that he might be permitted to remain in the home of Ayishah, his beloved wife, an arrangement to which his other wives assented

The account we now give of the closing scenes of Mnhammad's life, is from the graphic pen of Sir William Muir (Lefe of Mahomet, new ed, p 501 et seq), and founded on the traditional histories of al-Wandi's secretary and ibn Hisham

"On the night of Saturday (11 Rabi'u 1-Awwal, 6th June, Ap 682), the sickness assumed a very serious aspect. The fever rose to such a pitch that the hand could hardly be kept upon his skin from its burning heat His body was racked with pain, restless and moaning, he tossed about upon his bed. Alarmed at a severe paroxysm of the disease, Omm Salma, one of his wives, screamed aloud Mahomet rebuked her -'Quiet!' he said. 'No one crieth out thus but an unbeliever' During the night, Ayesha sought to comfort him, and suggested that he should seek for consolation in the same lessons he had so often taught to others when in sickness 'O Prophet!' she said 'if one of us had moaned thus, thou would'st surely have found fault with it 'Yes,' he replied, 'but I burn with the fever-heat of any two of you together' 'Then,' exclaimed one, thou shalt surely have a double reward 'Yes,' he answered 'I swear by Him in whose hands is my life, that there is not upon the earth a believer afflicted with any calamity or disease, but the Lord thereby causeth his sine to fall from him, even as leaves are shed in autumn from a tree' At another time he said, 'Suffering is an expiation for sin Verily, if the believer suffer but the scratch of a thorn, the Lord raiseth his rank thereby, and wipeth away from him a sin.' Believers, he would affirm, 'are tried according to their faith. If a man's faith be strong, so are his sufferings, if he be weak, they are propor tioned thereunto Yet in any case, the suf fering shall not be remitted until he walk upon the earth without the guilt of a single transgression cleaving unto him

"Omar, approaching the hed, placed his hand on Mahomet's forehead, and suddenly withdrew it, from the greatness of the heat 'O Prophet!' he said, 'how violent is the fever on thee!' Yea, verily,' replied Ma homet, 'but I have been during the night season repeating in praise of the Lord seventy Suras, and among them the seven long ones' Omar answered 'But the Lord hath forgiven thee all thy sins, the former and the latter, now, then, why not rest and take thine ease. 'Nay,' replied Mahomet 'for wherefore should I not be a faithful servant unto Him?

"An attendant, while Mahomet lay covered up, put his hand below the sheet, and feeling the excessive heat, made a remark similar to that of Omar Mahomet replied 'Even as this affliction prevailets now against me, so shall my reward hereafter be enhanced' 'And who are they,' asked another 'that affer the severest trials?' 'The prophets and the righteons,' said Mahomet, and then he made mention of one prophet having been destroyed by lice, and of another who was tried with poverty, so that he had but a rag to cover his makedness withsi, 'yet each of them rejoiced exceedingly in his affliction, even as one of you in great spoil would rejoice'

"On the Sunday, Mahomet lay in a very wesk and helpless state Osuma, who had delayed his departure to see what the usue of the sickness might be came in from Jorf to Removing the clothes from the visit him Prophet's face, he stooped down and kissed him, but there was no audible response Mahomet only raised his hands to heaven in the attidude of blessing, and then placed them upon Osama So he returned to the camp

"During some part of this day Mahomet complained of pain in his side and the suffering became so great, that he fell into a state of unconsciousness Omm Salma advised that physic should be given him Asma, the sister of Meimuna, prepared a draught after an Abyssiman recipe, and they forced it into his mouth Reviving from its effects, he felt the unpleasant taste in his month, and cried, 'What is this that ye have done to me 'Ye have even given me physic!' They confessed that they had done so, and enume rated the ingredients of which Asma had compounded it. Out upon you! he angrily exclaimed, 'this is a remody for the pleurisy. which she hath learned in the land of Abyssima but that is not a disease which the Lord will suffer to attack me Now shall ve all partake or the -ame dose. Let not one remain in the house without being physicked, even as ye have physicked me, excepting only my nucle libbas. So all the women arose, and they poured the physic, in presence of the dying Prophot, into each other's mouths

"After this the conversation turning upon Abyssinia Omm Salma and Omm Habiba, who had both been exiles there, spoke of the beauty of a cathedral in that country, called the Church of Maria, and of the wonderful pictures on its walls Mahomet listened quietly to them, and then said, 'These, verily, are the people who, when a good man hath lived amongst them, build over his tomb a place of worship, and they adorn it with their pictures These, in the even of the Lord, are the worst part of all the creation 'He stopped, and covered himself with the bed-clothes. then casting them off in the restlessness and perhaps delirium of the fever, he said. 'The Lord destroy the Tews and Christians! Let His anger he kindled against those that turn the tombs of their prophets into places of worship O Lord, let not my tomb he an object of worship Let there not remain any faith but that of Islam throughout the whole land of Arabia!

About this time, recognising Omar and some other chief men in the room, he called out. Bring bither to me ink and paper, that I may second for you a writing which shall prevent your going astray for ever' Omai said, He wandereth in his mind. Is not the Coran sufficient for us. But the women wished that the writing materials should be brought, and a discussion ensued. There-upon one said, What is his condition at this present moment? Come, let us see whether he speaketh deliriously or not' So they went and asked him what his wishes were regarding the writing he had spoken of , but he no longer desired to indite it . Leave me thus alone, he said, 'for my present state is better than that ye call me to

"In the course of this day, Mahomet called Ayesha to him, and said, 'Where is that gold which I gave unto thee to keep?' On her replying that it was by her, he desired that she should spend it at once in charity. Then he dozed off in a half conscious state, and some time after asked if she had done as he desired her. On her saying that she had not yet done so, he called for the money (which was apparently a portion of the title income), she placed it in his hand, and counted six golden dinars. He directed that it anould be divided among certain indigent families, and then lying down, he said, 'Now I am at peace. Verily it would not have become me to meet my Lord, and this gold in my possession.'

All Sunday night the illness of Mahomet continued unabated. He was overheard praying one of the ejaculations was to this effect. O my soul! Why seekest thou for refuge elsewhere than in God alone?' The morning brought some measure of relief. The fever and the pain abated, and there was an apparatus

"The dangerous crisis of the Prophet's sickness on the preceding night having become known throughout the city, the mosque was crowded in the morning at the hour of prayer, by men and women, who came sceking anxiously for tidings. Abu Bakr, as usual led the devotions, as Imam he stood in the place of Mahomet before the congregation, his back turned towards them. He had ended the hrst Rakast, or series of prostia tions, and the people had stood up again for a second, when the curtain of Ayesha's door (to the left of the audience, and a little way behind Abn Baki) slowly moved aside and Mahomet himself appeared. As he entered the assembly, he whispered in the car of Fadhl (Fazl), son of Abbas who with a servant supported him 'The Lead yearly hath granted unto me refreshment in prayer and he looked around with a gladsome sink, market by all who at the moment caught a glimpse of his countenance That smile no doubt was he index of deep emotion in his What doubts or fears may have crossed the mind of Mahomet, as he lay on the bed of death, and felt that the time was drawing nigh when he must render an account to that God whose wessenger he professed to be, tradition affords us no grounds even to conjecture The rival claims of Aswad and Muscilama had, perhaps, suggested mis givings such as those which had long ago distracted his soul. What if he, too, were an impostor deceiving himself and deceiving others also! If any doubts and questionings of this nature had arisen in his mind, the sight of the great congregation in attitude devout and carnest, may have caused him comfort and reassurance. That which brings forth good fruit must itself us good. The mission which had transferred gross and de-based idolaters into spiritual worshippers such as these, resigning every faculty to the service of the one great God, and which, wherever accepted and believed in, was daily producing the same wonderful change, that mission must be divine, and the voice from within which prompted him to undertake it must have been the voice of the Almighty. revealed through His ministering spirit. Perhaps it was a thought like this which passed at the moment through the mind of the Prophet, and lighted up his countenance with that smile of joy, diffusing gladness over the crowded courts of the mosque

"Having paused thus for a moment at the door, Mahomet, supported as before, walked softly to the front where Asu Bakr stood The people made way for him, opening their ranks as he advanced. Abu Bakr heard the rustle (for he never when at prayer turned himself or looked to the right hand or the left) and, apprehending the cause which alone at that time could tente so great sensation, stepped backwards to join the constation, stepped backwards to join the contract the Prophet. But Mahomet motioned him to resume the post, and taking his hand, moved forward to the pulpit. There he sat on the ground by the side of Abu Bakr, who resumed the service, and innished it in customing the service.

When the prayers were ended, Abu Bakr entered into conversation with Mahomet He reposed to find him so all appearance convalescent '() Prophet,' he said, 'I perceive that by the grace of God, thou art better today even as we desire to see thee Now this day is the turn of my wife, the daughter of Khānija shall I go and visit her?' Mahomet gave him permission So he departed to her house at Al Sunh, a suburb of the upper city

Mahomet then sat himself down for a little while in the court-yard of the mosque, near the door of Avesha's apartment and addressen the people, who, overjoyed to find him again in their midet, crowded round spoke with emotion, and with a voice still se powerful as to reach beyond the outer doors of the mosque 'By the Lord,' he said, 'as for myself, verily, no man can lay hold of me in any matter, I have not made lawful anything excepting what God hath made lawful not have I prohibited aught but that which God in His book hath probleted' Osama was there, when he came to bid farewell (before starting on an expedition against the Roman border), Mahomet said to him, Go forward with the army, and the blessing of the Lord be with thee! Then turning to the women the sat close by, 'O Fature l'he exclaimed 'my daughter, and Safif, my aunt! Work ye both that which hall procure you acceptance with the Lord , for verily I have no power with him to save you in anywise Having said this, he arose and re entered the room of Ayesha

"Mahomet, exhausted by the exertion be had undergone, lay down upon his bed and Ayesha, seeing him to be very weah raised his head from the pillow, and laid it tenderly upon her bosom. At that moment one of her relatives entered with a green tooth pick in his hand. Ayesha observed that the exe of

Mahomet rested on it, and, knowing it to be such as he liked asked whether he wished to have it. He signified assent Chewing it a little to make it soft and phable, she placed it in his hand. This pleased him, for he took up the tooth-pick and used it, rubbing his teeth with his ordinary vigour, then he put it down

"His strength now rapidly sank He seemed to be aware that death was drawing near He called for a pitcher of water, and wetting his face, prayed thus 'O Lord, I beseech thee to assist me in the agones of death?" Then three times he ejaculated earnestly, 'Gabriel, come close unto me!

"At this time he began to blow upon

"At this time he began to blow upon himself, perhaps in the half-consciousness of delirium, repeating the while an ejaculatory form which he had been in the habit of praving over persons who were very sick. When he ceased, from weakness Avesha took up the task, and continued to blow upon him and recite the same prayer. Then, seeing that he was very low, sic seized his right hand and rubbed it (another practice of the Prophet where visiting the sick), repeating all the while the carnest invocation. But Maho met was too far gone to bear even this. He now wished to be in perfect quiet. Take off thy hand from me, he said, that cannot benefit me now? After a little he prayed in a whisper, 'Lord grant me pardon, and join me to the companionship on high!' Then at intervals. 'Elernity in Paradise!' 'Pardon!' 'Yes, the blessed companionship on high!'

Then all was still. His head grew heavy on the breast of Ayesha. The Prophet of Arabia was dead.

"Softly removing his head from her bosom Ayesha placed it on the pillow, and rising up joined the other women, who were beating their faces in bitter lamentation

"The sun had but shortly passed the meridian It was only an hour or two since Mahomet had entered the mesque cheerful, and seemingly convalescent. He now by cold in death."

As soon as the intelligence of the Prophet s death was published a crowd of people as-sembled at the door of the house of 'Ayishah, exclaiming, "How can our Apostle be dead he who was to be our witness in the Day of Judgment?" ' No,' said 'Umar, ' be as not dead, he has gone to visit his Loid as the Prophet Moses did, when, after an absence of forty days, he reappeared to his people. Our Prophet will be restored to us, and those are traitors to the cause of Islam who say he is dead If they say so, let them be out in pieces" But Abu Bakr entered the house at this juncture, and after viewing the body of the Prophet with touching demonstrations of affection, he appeared at the door and addressed the crowd thus "O Muslims, if ye adors Muhammad, know that Muhammad is dead. If ye adors God God is alive, and cannot die. Do ye forget the verse in the 'Muhammad is no more than an Other apostles have already passed apostle before him?' (see Surah in 188), and also the other verse, 'Thou shalt surely die. O Muhammad, and they also shall die?'" (see Surah xxxix 31) 'Umar soknowledged his error, and the crowd was satisfied and dispersed

Al-'Abbas presided at the preparations for the burial, and the body was duly washed and perfumed. There was some dispute between the Quraish and the Angar as to the place of burial, but Abū Bakr silenced them, affirming that he had heard Muhammad say that a prophet should be buried on the spot where be died. A grave was accordingly dug in the ground within the house of 'Ayishah, and under the bed on which the Prophet died, This spot is now known as the Hujrah, or chamber at al-Madinah. The last rites were performed by 'Ali and the two sons of al-'Abbās. [HUJRAH]

The foregoing account of Muhammad's death is that of Sunni traditionists. The Shifahs deny almost every word of it, and give the following as an authentic narrative of the Prophet's death. The manifest object being to establish the claim of 'Ali to be Muhammad's successor. It is translated from the Shi ab book entitled the Hayātu'l-Qulub (see

"The Prophet returned to his house and in the space of three days his sickness became severe He then tied a handage on his head, and leaning on the Commander of the Faithful (i.e 'Ali) and Fazi ibn-Abbas, went to the mesjed and ascended the member (or pulpit), and, sitting down, addressed the people thus 'The time is near when I shall be concealed from you Whoever has any claim on me, let him now declare it Vorily, none can claim favour at the hand of God but by obeying Him, and none can expect to be safe without good works, or to enjoy the favour of God without obedience Nothing but good works vill deliver from divins wrath, and verity, if I should sin, I should go to hell O Lord I have delivered thy message' He then came down from the mumber and performed short prayers with the people, and returned to the house of Ummsalmah, where he remained one or two days That cursed woman Auyeshah, having satisfied his other wives on the subject came to the Prophet and induced him by entreaties to go to her house, where his sickness became very op pressive At the hour for morning prayers Bilal shouted the agan, but the Prophet, near his departure to the holy would, heard it not Auyoshah then sent to her father, Abubekr to go to the mesjed, and lead the devotions of the people and Hafsah sent the same message to Omas As these two women were conversing about the matter before the Prophet, not seeming to suppose that he under-stood them, he interrupted them, saying, Quit such talk, you are like the women that tried to lead Yusuf astray. Finding that, contrary to his orders, Abubekr and Omar were in the city with solitious designs, he was very somowful, and oppressed as he was with a severe disease, he rose, and leaning on Aly and Faxl-bin Abbas, with extreme dif

Sculty went to the mesjed, lest Abubekr or Omar should perform prayers, and the people doubt who should be his successor. On arriving at the mesjed, he found that the cursed Abubekr had occupied the place of the leader of prayers, and already begin the devotions with the people. The Prophet, with his blessed hand, signed to Abubekr to remove, and he took his place, and from weakness sat down to perform prayers, which helt gan anew ragardless of Abubekr's commencement.

"On returning to his house Muhammad summoned Abubekr Omai, and some others, and demanded if he had not ordered them to depart with the army of Asamsh They replied that he had. Abubekr said that he had gone and returned again, and Omar said that he did not go, for he did not wish to hear of the Prophet's sickness from another Mu hammad then told them to go with the army of Asamah, and three times prenounced a curse on any who should disobey. His exertions produced such exhaustion that he swooned, on which the Musalmans present and his wives and children wept and lamented aloud, At length the Prophet opened his blessed eyes, and said, 'Bring me an inkstand and a sheep's shoulder-blade, that I may write a direction which will prevent your going astray? One of the Companions of the Prophet rose to bring what he had ordered but Omar said, Come back, he speaks deliriously, disease has overcome him, and the book of God is sufficient for us' It is, however, a disputed matter whether Omar said this However, they said to the Prophot Shall we bring what you ordered! He is plied, 'After what I have heard from you I de not need them, but I give you a dying charge to treat my family well, and not turn from them. The compiler observes that this tradition about the inkatand and shoulder blade is mentioned in several Sunni books ]

" During the last sickness of the Propliet while he was lying with his head in Aly s lap, and Abbas was standing before him and brushing away the flies with his cloak, he opened his eyes and asked Abbas to become his executor, pay his debts, and support his Abbas said he was an old man with family a large family, and could not do it Muhammad then proferred the same to Alv, who was so much affected that he could not command utterance for some time, but as soon as he could speak, promised with the greatest devotion to perform the Prophet's request Muhammad. after being raised into a sitting positure, in which he was supported by Aly, ordered Brist to bring his helmet, called Lool-patern (Zu'ljabn), his cept of mail, Zatil Fuzool (Zu t-jabn), his cept of mail, Zatil Fuzool (Zutu-l-Fuzul), his banner, Akab, his sword, Zool-fukur (Zu '! figar), his turbans, Sahub and Tahmesah, his two party-coloused garments, his little staff, and his walking cane Mamshook In relating the story, Abbas remarked that he had never before seen the party-coloured soarf, which was so lustrone as nearly to blind the eyes. The Prophet now addressed Aly, saying. Jibraeel brought me this article and told me to put it into the rings of my mail, and bind it on me for a girdle.' He then called for his two pairs of Arab shoes, one pair of which had been patched. Next he ordered the shirt he wore on the night of the Marâj, or ascent to heaven, and the shirt he wore at the battle of Ohod. He then called for his three caps, one of which he wore in journeying, another on festivals, and the third when sitting among bis ('ompanions He then told Bilâl to bring his two mules, Shahba and Puldul, his two she-camels, Chazba and Sahba, and his two holess, Jinah and Khyrdam.

Jinsh was kept at the door of the mesjed for the use of a messenger, and Khyidam was mounted by the Prophet at the battle of Ohod, where Jibrasel cited, 'Advance, Khyrdam.' Last, he called for his ass Yafoor Muhammad now directed Abbas to take Aly's place, and support his back. He then said 'Rise, O Ala, and take these my property, while I yet live, that no one may quarrel with you about them after I am gone

' When I rose,' said Aly, 'my feet were so cramped that it was with the utmost dif ficulty that I could move Having taken the articles and animals to my house, I returned and stood before the Prophet, who on seeing me took his ting from his right hand, pointing the way of truth and put it on my right hand the house being full of the Benu Hashim and other Musulmans, and while from weakness his head nodued to the right and left he cried aloud, () company of Musuimans Aly is my brother, my successor, and Khali einh among my people and sat, he will pay my debts and caucel my sugagement: O ye sons or Highim and Abdul mutalib, and ye other Musulmans, be not hostile to Aiy, and do not oppose him, lest ye he led astray, and do not envy him nor incline from him to another, lest ye become infidels. He then ordered Abbas to give his place to Aly Abbas replied, 'Do you remove an old man to sent a child in his place?', The Prophet repeated the order, and the third time Abbis rose in unger, and Aly took his place Muhammad, anding his uncle angry, said to him 'Do nothing to sause me to leave the world offended with you, and my wrath send you to hell' On hearing this, Abbas went back to his place, and Muhammad directed Aly to lay him down

"The Prophet said to Bilâl, 'Bring my two sons Hasan and Husan' When they were presented he pressed them to his bosom, smelt and kissed those two flowers of the garden of prophecy. Aly, fearing they would trouble the Prophet, was about to take them away, but he said, 'Let them be, that I may smell them, and they sincil me, and we prepare to meet each other, for after I am gone great calamities will befall them, but may God curse those that cause them to fear and do them injustice. O Lord, I commit them to Thee and te the worthy of the Farthful, namely, Aly-bin-Abutalib. The Prophet them demissed the people and they went away, but Abbàs and his son Farl, and Aly bin-Abutalib, and those belonging to the house hold of the Prophet, remained. Abbas then seed to the Prophet, 'If the Khalafat (Khilafah) is established among us, the Benu Hashim, assure us of it, that we may rejoice, but if you foresee that they will treat us unjustly and deprive us of the Khalafat, commit us to your Companions.' Muhammad replied, 'After I am gone they will weaken and overcome you, at which declaration all the family wept, and, moreover despaired of the Prophet's life

"Aly continued to attend Muhammad night and day, never leaving him except from the most imperative necessity. On one of these occasions, when Aly was absent, the Prophet said, 'Call my friend and brother' Auyeshan and Hafsah sent for their fathers, Abubekr and Omar, but he turned from thom and covered his face, on which they remarked, 'He does not want us, he wants Alv.' whom Fatimah called, and Muhammad pressed him to his bosom, and they mingled their perspiration together, and the Prophet communi cated to him a thousand chapters of know ledge, each opening to a thousand more One tradition declares that Muhammad kept Aly in his bed till his pure spirit left his body, his arm meanwhile en racing Aly"

In compiling this account of the life of Muhammad, we must express our deep obli gations to Sir William Muir's Lafe of Mahomet (1st ed , 4 vols , 2nd ed , 1 vol , Smith, Elder and Co., London) In many cases we have given the spausima verba of his narrutive, with his kind permission. Muhammad is referred to by name in four places in the Qur'an . Sürah in. 138 "Muhammad is but an apostle apostles have passed away before his time, what if he die, or is killed, will ye retreat upon your heels?"

Surah zzziri 40 "Muhammad is not the father of any of your men, but the Apostle of God, and the Seal of the Prophets"

Sarah givin 2 "Those who believe and do right and believe in what is revealed to Mukammad, -and it is the truth from their Lord,—He will cover for them their offences and set right their mind "

"Muhammad is the Strah xlviii. 29

Apostle of God."

He is said to have been foretold by Jesus under the name of Ahmed. Strab lxi. 6 "Giving you glad tidings of an Apostle who shall come after me whose name shall be Ahmad" [ANNAD]

According to a tradition of Ibn Abbie, the Prophet said "My name in the Qur'en is Muhammad, and in the Injil Ahmed, and in the Taurat Ahyad (from the root ...... to shun"), and I am called Ahyad because I shun hell-fire mor, than any of my people" (An Nawawi, Wustenfeld's edition, p 28)

MUHAMMAD, The Character of (1) Sir William Muir (Life of Makomet, new ed p 537 et seqq) has carefully collated from the traditions embodied by the secretary of al-Waqidi an account of the person and character of Muhammad "This account," as Sir William Muir remarks, "illustates generally the style and contents of the Muslim biographies of their Prophet"

When Ayesha was questioned about Mahomet she used to say He was a man just such as vourselves, he laughed often and smiled much 'But how would be occupy himself at home?' 'Even as any of you occupy vourselves He would mend his clothes, and cobble his shoes He used to help me in my household duties, but what he did oftenest was to sew. If he had the choice between two matters, he would choose the easiest, so as that no sin accrued therefrom He never took revenge excepting where the honour of God was concerned When angry with any person, he would say "What hath taken such a one that he should soil his forehead in the mud'"

"His humility was shown by his riding upon asses, by his accepting the invitation even of alaves, and when mounted, by his taking another behind him. He would say 'I sit at meals as a sorvant doeth, and I eat like a servant for I really am a servant', and he would sit as one that was always ready to use He discouraged (supererogatory) fasting, and works of mortification When seated with his followers, he would temain long silent at a time. In the mosque at Medina they used to repeat pieces of poetry, and tell stories regarding the moderate. that occurred in the days of ignorance, and laugh, and Mahomet listening to them, would smile at what they said

"Mahomet hated nothing more than lying and whenever he knew that any of his followers had erned in this respect, he would hold himself aloof from them until he was assured of their repentance

His Speech.

"He did not speak rapidly running his words into one another, but enunciated each syllable distinctly, so that what he said was imprinted in the memory of every one who heard him. When at public prayers, it might be known from a distance that he was reading by the metion of his beaud. He never read in a singing or chanting style, but he would draw out his voice resting at certain places. Thus, in the prefatory words of a Sara, he would pause after bismillahi, after of Rahman, and again after al Rahm

a Garl

"He used to walk so rapidly that the people half ran behind him, and could hardly keep up with him

a Habets in Earing

"He never ate reclining, for Gabiel had told him that such was the manner of kings, nor had he ever two men to wrik behind him. He used to eat with his thumb and his two forefingers, and when he had done, he would lick them, beginning with the middle one. When offered by Gabiel the valley of Meeca full of gold, he preferred to forego it, saying that when he was hungry he could come before the Lord lowly and when full with presse.

a Moderation

"A servant maid being once long in returning from an errand, Mahomet was annoyed, and said, 'If it were not for the law of retaliation, I should have punished you with this tooth-pick' (ie with an mappreciably light punishment)

" Customs at Prayer

"He used to stand for such a length of time at prayer that his legs would swell When remonstrated with, no eard 'What' shall I not behave as a thankful servant should?' He never vawned at prayer When he succeed, he did so with a subdued voice, covering his face. At funerals he never rode he would remain alant on such occasions at a conversing with himself, so that the people used to think he was helding communication with the dead

" Refusal to make Personal Use of Pethes

"While he accepted presents he refused to use snything that had been offered as alms neither would be allow anyone in his tamit to use what had been brought as alms, 'For' said he, 'alms are the impurity of mankind (re that which cleanses then impurity). His scruples on this point were so strong that he would not eat even a date picked up on the road, lest perchance it might have dropped from a tithe load.

" Food Relished

meats and honey He was also fond of cucumbers and of undried dates. When a lamb or a kid was being cooked Mahomet would go to the pot, take out the shoulder, and eat it. He used to eat most dates and cooked food together What he most relished was a mess of bread cooked with meat, and a dish of dates dressed with butter and milk

"Mahomet used to have sweet (rain) water kept for his use

Women and Scents

"A great array of traditions are produced to prove that the Prophet was fond of women and scents, and liked these of all things in the world the best. Ayesha used to say 'The Prophet loved three things—women, scents, and food, he had his heart's desire of the two first, but not of the last'

" Struitened means at Medina

"Ayesha tells us that for months together Mahomet did not get a full meal Months used to pass, she says again, and no fife would be lighted in Mahomet's honse, either for baking bread or cooking meat' 'How, then, did to live?' 'By the "two black things" (dates and water), and by what the citizens used to send unto us, the Lord require them' Such of them as had mileh cattle would send us a little milk The Prophet never enjoyed into inxury of two kinds of food the same day, if he had flesh there was nothing also and so if he had dates, so likewise if he had bread'

"". We possessed no sieves, but used to bruise the grain and blow off the husks'

" Appearance, Habits, &c

"He used to wear two garments His szár (under garment) hung down three or four inches below his knees. His mantle was not wrapped round him o as to cover his body, but he would draw the end of it under his shoulder

"He used to divide his time into three parts one was given to God, the second allotted to his family, the third to himself When public business began to press upon him, he give up one half of the latter portion to the service of others

"When he pointed he did so with his whole naid, and when he was astonished he turned his hand over (with the palm upwards) in speaking with another, he brought his hand near to the person addressed, and he would strike the palm of the left in the thumb of the right hand. Angry, he would avert his face, joyful he would look downwards. He often smiled, and, when he laughed, his teeth used to appear white as hallstones.

"In the interval allotted to others, he received all that came to him, listened to their representations, and occupied himself in disposing of their business and in hearing what they had to tell him. He would say on such occasions 'Let those that are here give information regarding that which passeth to them that are absent, and they that cannot themselves appear to make known their necessities let others report them to me in their stead, the Lord will establish the feet of such in the Day of Judgment'

" Seal of Prophecy

"This, says one, was a protuberance on the Prophet's back of the size and appearance of a pigeon's egg. It is said to have been the divine seal which, according to the predictions of the Scriptures, marked Mahomet as the last of the Prophets. How far Mahomet himself encouraged this idea it is impossible to say. From the traditions it would seem to have been nothing more than a mole of unusual size, and the saying of Mahomet, that 'God had placed it there,' was probably the germ of supernatural associations which grow up concerning it

" Harr

"His hair used to be combed, it was neither curling nor smooth. He had, says one, four euried locks. His hair was ordinarily parted, but he did not care if it was not so. According to another tradition, 'The Jews and Christians used to let their hair fall down, while the heathen parted it. Now Mahomet loved to follow the people of the Book in matters concerning which he had no express command. So he used to let down his hair without parting it. Subsequently however, he fell into the habit of parting it.

" Moustache

"Mahomet used to clip his monstache. A Magian once came to him and said 'You ought to clip your beard and allow your monstaches to grow' 'Nay,' said the Prophet, 'for my Lord hath commanded me to clip the moustaches and allow the beard to grow'

" Dress

"Various traditions are quoted on the difficient colours he used to wear—white chiefly, but also red, yellow, and green. He sometimes put on woollen clothes. Ayesha, it is said, exhibited a piece of woollen stuff in which she swore that Mahomet died. She adds that he once had a black woollen diess, and she still remembered, as she spoke, the contrast between the Prophets fair skin and the black cloth. The odour of it, however, becoming unpleasant, he cast it off, for he loved sweet odours.

"He entered Mecca on the taking of the city (some say) with a black turban. He had also a black standard. The end of his turban used to hang down between his should ders. He once received the present of a searf for a turban, which had a figured or spotted fringe, and this he out off before wearing it. He was very fond of striped Yemen stuffs. He used to wrap his turban many times round his head, and 'the lower edge of it used to appear like the soiled clothes of an oil-dealer'

"He once prayed in a silken dress, and then cast it aside with abhorrence, saying 'Such stuff it doth not become the pious to wear' On another occasion, as he prayed in a figured or spotted mantle, the spots attracted his notice, when he had ended, he said 'Take away that mantle, for verily it hath distracted me in my prayers, and bring me a common one' His sleeve chiefed at the wrist. The robes in which he was in the habit of receiving embassies, and his fine Hadbramaut mantle, remained with the Caliphs, when worn or rent, these garments were mended with fresh cloth, and in after times, the Caliphs used to wear them at the festivals. When he put on new clothes (either an under-garment, a girdle, or a turban), the Prophet would offer up a prayer such as this 'Praise be to the Lord who hath clothed me with that which shall hide my nakedness and adorn me while I live. I pray Thee for the good that is in this, and the good that hath been made for it, and I seek refuge from the evil that is in the same, and from the evil that hath been made for it.

" Shoo

"His servant, Anas, had charge of his shoes and of his water-pot After his master's death Ansa used to show his shoes. They were after the Hadhramaut pattern, with two thongs In the year 100 or 110 AH, one went to buy shoss at Mecca, and tells us that the sheemsker offered to make them exactly after the model of Mahomet's, which he said he had seen in the possession of Fatima, granddaughter of Abbas His shoes used to be cobbled He was in the habit of praying with his shoes on On one occasion, having taken them of at prayers, all the people did likewise, but Mahomet told them there was no necessity, for he had merely taken off his own because Gabriel had apprised him that there was some dirty substance attaching to them (cleanliness being required in all the surroundings at prayer) The thongs of his shoes once broke, and they mended them for him by adding a new piece, after the service, Mahomet desired his shoes to be taken away and the thongs restored as they were, 'For said he, 'I was distracted at prayer thereby

" Tooth-picks

"Ayesha tells us that Mahomet never lay down by night or by day, but on waking he applied the tooth pick to his teeth before he performed ablution. He used it so much as to wear away his gums. The tooth-pick was always placed conveniently for him at night, so that, when he got up in the night to pray, he might use it before his lustrations. One says that he saw him with the tooth-pick in his mouth, and that he kept saying aa, aa, is as if about to vomit. His tooth-picks were misde of the green wood of the paim-tree. He never travelled without one

" Articles of Toilet

"He very frequently oiled his hair, poured water on his beard, and applied antimony to his eyes.

" Armour

"Four sections are devoted to the description of Mahomet's armour,—ins swords coats of mail, shields, lances, and bows

" Muscellaneous

"The Prophet used to snuff simsim (sesamum), and wash his hands in a decoction of the wild plum-tree When he was afraid of forgetting anything, he would tie a thread on his finger or his ring

" Horses

"The first horse which Mahomet ever possessed was one he purchased of the Bani Fazara, for ten owckess (ounces of silver), and he called its name sabb (running water), from the easiness of its paces Mahomet was mounted on it at the battle of Ohod, when there was but one other horse from Medina on the field He had also a horse called Sabāha (Shamjah?), he raced it and it won, and he was greatly rejoiced thereat He had a third hoise, named Murtajis (neigher)

' Riding Camels

"Besides Al Caswa (al-Qaswa), Mahomet had a camel called Adhba (al-'Azbā), which in speed outstripped all others. Yet one day an Arab passed it when at its floetest pass. The Moslems were chagrined at this, but Mahomet reproved them, saying, 'It is the property of the Lord, that when soever men exalt anything, or sack to exalt it, then the Lord putteth down the same

" Milch Camels

"Mahomet had twenty mikh camels, the same that were plundered at Al Ghaba Then mik was for the support of his family every evening they gave two large skinsful. Omm Salmah relates. Our chief food when we lived with Mahomet was milk. The camels used to be brought from Al Châba e ery evening. I had one called Aris and Aveshi one called Al Samra. The herdman fed them at Al Juania, and brought them to our homes in the evening. There was also one for Mahomet.

" Mulch Flooks

"Mahomet had seven gosts which Onm Ayman used to tend (this probably telera to an early period of his residence at Medina). His flocks grazed at Oliod and Himna alternately, and were brought back to the house of that wife whose turn it was for Mahomet to be in her abote. A favourite gost naving died, the Prophet desired its skin to be taimed.

"Mahomet attached a peculiar blessing to the pessession of goat." There is no house, he would say, possessing a goat, but a bles sing abideth thereon and there is no house possessing three goats but the angels pass the night there praying for its immates until the moraing."

Servants

"Fourteen or fifteen persons are mentioned who served the Prophet at various times His slaves he always freed

· Houses

"Abdallah ibn Yazid relates that he saw the houses in which the wives of the Prophet dwelt at the time when Omar ibn Al Azîz, Governor of Medina (about A H. 100) demo-hehed them They were built of unburnt bricks, and had separate apartments made of palm-branches, daubed (or built-up) with mud, he counted nine houses, each having separate apartments, in the space extending from the house of Ayesha and the gate of Mahomet to the house of Asma, daughter of Hosein. Observing the dwelling-place of Omm Salma, he questioned her grandson concerning it, and he told him that when the Prophet was absent on the expedition to Dama Omm Salma built up an addition to her house with a wall of unburnt bricks When Mahomet returned, he went in to her, and asked what new building this was She replied, I purposed, O Prophet to shut out the glances of men thereby!' Mahomet answered 'O Omm Salma! verily, the most unprofitable thing that eateth up the wealth of the Believer is building' A citizen of Medina present at the time, con firmed this account, and added that the cur tains of the door were of black hair-cloth He was present, he said, when the despatch of the Caliph Abd al Malik (A H. 86-88) was read aloud, commanding that these houses should be brought within the area of the mosque, and he never witnessed sorer weeping than there was amonge, the people that day One exclaimed 'I wish, by the Lord! that they would leave these nouses alone thus as they are, then would those that apring up hereafter in Medina, and strangers from the ends of the earth come and see what kind of building sufficed for the Prophet's own abod and the sight thereof would deter men fro extravagance and pride

"There were four houses of unburnt bricks the apartments being of palm-branches and five houses made of palm-branches built up with mid and without any separate apartments. Each was three Alabian yards in length Some say they had leather ourtains for the doors. One could reach the roof with the hand.

"The house of Haritha (H isah) was next to that of Mahomet Now ienover Melomet took to himself a new wife, he added another house to the row, and Haritha was obliged successively to remove his house, and to build on the space beyond At last this was rejeated so often, that the Prophet said to those about him Vorily, it shameth me to turn Haritha over and over again out of his house'

"Properties

"There were seven gardens which Mukheirick the J. w left to Mahomet Omar ibn Al Aziz, the Caliph said hat, when Gevernor of Medina, he ate of the fruit of these, and nevot tasted sweeter dates. Others say that these gardens formed a portion of the contactated estates of the Bani Nadhir They were afterwards dedicated perpetually to pious purposes

'Mahomet had three other properties — I. The confiscated lands of the Bam Nadhir The produce of these was approprinted to his own wants. One of the plots was called Mashruba Omm Ibrahîm, the 'summer garden of (Mary) the mother of Ihrahin, where the Prophet used to visit her "H. Fadak, the fruits of this were reserved

as a fund for indigent travellers

"III The fifth share, and the lands received by capitulation, in Kheibar. This was divided into three parts. Two were devoted for the benefit of the Moslems generally (re for State purposes), the proceeds of the third, Maho met assigned for the support of his own family, and what remained over he added to the fund for the use of the Moslems" (The Life of Muhomet, by William Mulr, Esq, London, 1861, vol 11, p 325)

(2) Dr A Sprenger Persan translator of the Government of India, and Principal of the Colonita Madazach and Additional Action 1861.

Calcutta Vadrasab, gives the following valu able review of the character of Muhammad, as regards his assumption of the prophetic office -

"Up to his fortieth year, Mohammad devoutly vorshipped the gods of his fathers The predominance of his imaginative powers, and his peculiar position, gave him a turn for religious meditation. He annually spent the month of Ramazan in seclusion in a cave of Mount Hira, where the Qorayshites used to devete themselves to ascetic exercises In this retreat he passed a certain number of nights in prayers, fasted, fed the poor, and gave himself up to meditation, and on his return to Makkah he walked seven times round the Ka'bah before he went to his own

"When he was forty years of age, the first doubts concerning idolatry arose in his mind The true believers ascribe this crisis to a divine revelation, and therefore carefully con ceal the orreumstances which may have given the first impulse It is likely that the eccen tric Zaid, whom he must have met in Mount Hira, first instilled purer notions respecting God into his mind, and induced him to read the Biblical history To abjure the gods, from whom he had hoped for salvation, caused a great struggle to Mohammad, and he became dejected and fond of solitude. He spent the greater part of his time in Hira, and came only occasionally to Makkah for new provisions

"Undesturbed meditation increased his excitement, and his overstrained brains were, even in sleep, occupied with doubts and speculations In one of his visions he saw an angel, who said to him, 'Read.' He answered, 'I am not reading' The angel laid hold of him and squeezed him, until Mohammad succeeded in making an effort. Then he released him, and said again, 'Read' Mohammad answered, 'I am not reading' This was repeated three times, and at length the angel said. Read in the name of thy Lord, the Creator, who has created man of congested blood, -read, for thy Lord is most beneficent It is He who has taught by the pen (has revealed the Scriptures), it is He who has taught man what he does not know.' These are the initial words of a Surah of the Quran, and the first revelation which Mohammad re-If this dream was as momentous as authentic traditions make it it must have been the crisis, which caused Mohammad to seek for truth in the books of the Jews and Christians The words of the angel admit hardly any other sense. After much hesitation he determines to study the tenets of another faith, which was hostile to that of his fathers. His resolve is sanctioned by a vision, and he thanks the Orestor, whom the Qurayshites always considered the greatest among their gods, for having sent a revelation to direct man

"It is certain, however that no Muselman will admit the sense which I give to these verses of the Quran and Mohammad himself, in the progress of his career, formally denied having read any part of the Scriptures before the Quran had been revesled to him. This, however, can only be true if he meant the first verses of the Quran, that is to say, those mentioned above, for in the following revelations he introduces the names of most pro phets, he holds up their history as an example to the Makkians, he borrows expres sions from the Bible which he admired for their sublimity, be betrays his acquaintance with the gospels by referring to an erro-neously translated verse of St John, for a proof of his mission, and he frequently alludes to the legends of the Rabbins and Christians Whence has the Prophet of the Gentiles obtained his knowledge of the Biblical history? He answers the question himself. It is God who has revealed it to me This assertion satisfies the believer and is a hint to the inquirer in tracing the sources of his information. He would hardly have hazarded it had he not obtained his instruction under considerable secresy The spirit of persecution at Makkah, which manifested itself against Zaid, made caution necessary for Mohammad, though originally he may have had no ulterior views, in making himself acquainted with another faith Yet with all his precautions, the Qorayshites knew enough of his history to disprove his pretensions He himself confesses, in a Surah revealed at Makkah (bursh xxv 5), that they said that the Quran was a tissue of falsehood, that several people had assisted him, and that he preached nothing more than what was contained in the "Asstyr of the Ancients," which he used to write, from the dictation of his teachers, morning and evening Who were the men who instructed Mohammad? It is not likely that he would have dared to declare before them, that the doctrines which he had re ceived from them had been revealed to him nor is it likely that, had they been alive after the new religion had become triumphant, they would nave allowed him to take all the credit to homeelf Those who exercised an influence upon Mohammad were his disciples, but we find no instance in which he apposited to buy secresy by submitting to the dictation of others I am inclined to think therefore, that his instructors died during his early ourcer, and this supposition enables as to ascertain the names of some of them The few speci mens of the sayings of Zaid, which have been preserved, prove that Mohammad borrowed ireely from him, not only his tenets, but even his expressions, and Zaid did not long survive Mohammad's assumption of his office It is likely that Waragah, the cousin of Khadyjah, who, it would appear, brought about her marriage with Mohammad who was the first to declare that the Great Law [NAMUS] would be revaled to him, and who expressed a wish to assist him during the persecutions to which every prophet was subject, was one Waraqah died shortly before of his teachers the time when he publicly proclaimed his mission. The defence of the Prophet, that the man, of whom his countrymen said that he assisted him in writing the Quran, was a foreigner (Sürah xvi 105), and unable to write so pure Arabic as the language of the Quran was leads us to suspect that one of his chief authorities for the Biblical legends was Addas, a monk of Nineveh, who was settled at Makkah (See Tajmu-4-Busawi on Sürah xxv 6) And there can be no doubt that the Rabbins of the Hijaz communicated to Mohammad their legends The commentators upon the Quran miorm us further, that he used to listen to Jabr and Yasar, two sword-manufacturers at Makkah, when they read the scriptures, and Ibn Ishaq says that he had intercourse with 'Abdal Rahman a Christian of Zamamah, but we must never forget that the object of these author ties, in such matters, is not to instruct their renders but to mislead them

"It is certain, from the context, where the expression occurs, and from the commentators on the Quran, that 'Asatyr of the Ancients' is the name of a book, but we have very little information as to its origin and contents. (See the Commentaries of al-Baraws and the Jalalan on Surah xxv) That dogmas were propounded in it, besides Biblical legends, appears from several passages of the Quran, where it is said that if contained the doctrine of the Resurrection (Sūrahs xxvii 70, xlvi 16) It is also clear that it was known at Malkah before Moham mad, for the Qorayshites told him that they and their fathers had been acquainted with it before he taught it, and that all that he taught was contained in it (Sürah ixvin 15) Mohammad had, in all likelihood besides, a version of portions of the scriptures, both of the genuine and some of the apocryphal works, for he refers his audience to them without reserve Tabary informs us that when Mohammad first entered on his office, even his wife Khadyjah had read the scriptures, and was acquainted with the history of the prophets (See Bal'amy's translation of Tabary in Perman )

"In spite of three passages of the Quran quoted above, the measury of which they clumsily pervert almost all modern Musalman writers, and many of the old ones, deny that Mohammed knew reading or writing Good authors, however, particularly among the Shiahs, admit that he knew reading, but they say he was not a skilful penman The only support of the opinion of the former is one passage of the Quran, Surah vn 156, in which Mohammad says that he was the Prophet of the Ummis, and an Ummi himself This word, they say, means illiterate, but others say it means a man who is not skilful in writing, and others suppose it to mean a Makkian or an Arab It is clear that they merely guess, from the context, at the mean Umm: is derived from ing of the word ummah, nation' (Latin gens, Greek ethnos), and on comparing the passages of the Quran, in which it occurs, it appears that it means genisle (Greek ethnicos) It is said in the Quran, that some lews are honest, but others think there is no harm in wronging the Ummis Imam Sadiq observes (Hiyatu l-Qulub, vol ii chapter 6, p 2) on this passage, that the Arabs are meant under Ummis, and that they are called so, though they knew writing because God had revealed no book to them and had sent them no prophet Several instances in which Mohammad did read and write are recorded by Bokhary, Nassy, and others It is, however, certain that he wished to appear ignorant, in order to raise the elegance of the composition of the Quran into a miracle

According to one record, the doubts, in decision, and preparation of the Prophet for his office listed seven years, and so sincere and intense were his meditations on matters of religion, that they brought him to the brink of madness In the Quran we can trace three phases in the progress of the mund of Mohammad from idelatry to the formation of a new crood First, the religion of the Kahah, in which he sincerely believed. seems to have formed the principal subject of his meditations. The contemplation of nature probably assisted by instruction, led him to the knowledge of the unity of God, and there is hardly a verse in the Quran which does not shew how forcibly he was struck with this truth By satisfying the faith of his fathers, he tried to reconcile it with the belief in one God, and for some time he considered the idols round the Ka bah daughters of God, who inter ede with Him for their worshippers But he gare up this beiref, chiefly because he could not reconcile himself to the idea that God should have only daughters, which was ignominious in the eyes of an Arab, and that mon should have sons, who reflect honour on a family He also connected the idolatrous worship of the black stone and the ceremo mes of the Hall, and almost all the other pagen usages of the Haramites, with their Abraham. This idea was not his own The scoptics who preceded him held the same opinion, vet it was neither ancient nor general among the pagan Arabs We find no connexion between the tenets of Moses and those of the Haramites, and though Biblical names are very frequent among the Musalmans, wo de not find one instance of their occurrence amony the pagans of the Hijaz before Mo

"It has been mentioned that the vision in which he was ordered to read, caused him hnally to renounce idolatry, we are told that after this vision an intermission of revelation, called fatrah, took place, which lasted upwards of two years The meaning of fatrah is simply that, though this vision was a sevelation, he did not assume his office for two or three years It is certain that he composed many Surahs of the Quran during this time, and it must have been during this period that the teness of the Jews and Chrisplans seriously occupied his mind. Before the vision he was an idolater, and after the fatrak he possessed the acquaintance with the scriptural history which we find in the Quran. Even after he had declared himself a prophet, he showed, during the beginning of his career, a strong leaning towards and a smoore belief in, the scriptures and Biblical legends, but in proportion to his success he separated himself from the Bible

"This is the second phase in the progress of the Prophets mind His behef in the scriptures does not imply that he ever belonged to the Christian or Jewish Church He never could reconcile his notions of God with the doctrine of the Trinity, and with the Divinity of Christ, and he was disgusted with the monkish institutions and secturian disputes of the Christians His creed was 'He is God alone, the Eternal God, He has not begotten and is not begotten, and none is His equal (See Sürah cxii) Nothing, however, can be more erroneous than to suppose that Mohammat was at any period of his early career, a deist Faith, when once extinct, cannot be revived, and it was his enthusiastic faith in inspiration that made him a prophet Disappointed with the Jewish and Christian religions, he began to form a system of faith of his own, and this is the third phase of the transition period. For some time it seems, he had no intention to prench it publicly, but circumstances, as well as the warm conviction of the truth of his creed, at length prevailed upon him to spread it beyond the chicle of his family and friends

"The mental excitement of the Prophet was much increased during the fatrak, and like the ardent scholar in one of Schiller's poems, who dared to lift the veil of truth, he was nearly annihilated by the light which broke in upon him. He usually wandered about in the hills near Makkah, and was so long absent, that on one occasion, his wife being afraid that he was lost, sent men in search of him He suffered from hallucinations of his senses, and, to finish his sufferings, he several times contemplated suicide by throwing himself down from a precipioe His friends were alarmed at his state of mind. Some considered it as the eccentricaties of a poetical genius, others thought that he was a kahin, or soothsayen, but the majority took a less charitable view (see Sürah Lzix 40, xx 5), and declared that he was insane, and, as madness and melancholy are ascribed to supernatural influence in the East, they said that he was, in the power of Satan and bis agents, the jum. They called in exorcists, and he himself doubted the soundness of his mind 'I hear a sound,' he said to his wife, and see a light. I am afraid there are just m me.' And on other cocasions he said, 'I am afraid I am a kuhin.' God will never allow that such should befall thee ' said Khadyjah, 'for thou keepest thy engagements, and assistest thy relations According to some accounts, she added, 'Thou wilt be the prophet of thy nation' And, in order to remove every doubt, she took him to her cousin Waraqah, and he said to her, 'I see thou (are thy explanation) art correct, the cause of the excitement of thy husband is the coming to him of the great nomes, law. which is like the nomes of Moses should be alive when he receives his mission, I would assist him, for I believe in him After this Khadyjah went to the monk, 'Addas, and he confirmed what Waraqah had said Wanaqah died soon after, before Mohammad entered on his mission

"The words of Mohammad, "I am afraid I am a kahin, require some explanation. The Arabs, previous to the promulgation of Islam, believed in kahins, soothsayers, and even in our days they have greater faith in saints and inspired persons than other equally un-civilized nations. Such a belief is so necessary a limitation of the personal freedom of the Bedouins, which knows no other bounds, that I consider it as the offspring of liberty Even the most refractory spirit sees no humi-liation in confessing his wrong-doings to a helpless seer, and in submitting to his decisions, and by doing so, if he has embroiled himself, he can return to peace with himself and with society We find, therefore, in the ancient history of Arabia, that litigations were frequently referred to celebrated kahins. These, it would appear, were eccentric persons, of great cunning, and not without genius The specimens which we have of their oracles are obscure, and usually in rhymed prose and incoherent sentences, and they are frequently preceded by a heavy oath to the truth of what they say, like some of the Surahs of the Quran It was believed that they knew what was concealed from the eyes of the common mortals, but they were looked upon with awe, for the Araba con ceived that they were possessed by, or allied with, Satan and the junn. The evil spirits used to approach the gates of heaven by stealth to pry into the secrets which were being transacted between God and the angels, and to convey them to the kahine Existing prejudices left no alternative to Mohammad but to proclaim himself a prophet who was inspired by God and His angels, or to be considered a kahin possessed by Satan and his

"Khady ah and her friends advised him to adopt the former course, and, after some hestation, he followed their advice, as it would appear, with his own conviction. His purer notions of the Deity, his moral conduct, his predilection for religious speculations, and his piety were proofs sufficiently strong to convince an affectionate wife that the supernatural infinence, under which he was, came from heaven. But, as the pagen Arabs had very imperfect notions of divine mapiration, it was necessary for him to prove to them, by the history of the prophets, that some seers were mepired by God, and to this and, he devoted more than two-thirds of the Quran to Biblical legends, most of which he has so well adapted to his own case, that if we substitute the name of Mohammad for Moses and Abraham, we have his own views, fate, and tendency And, in order to remove every doubt as to the cause of his excitement. Mohammad subsequently maintained, that since he had assumed his office, heaven was surrounded by a strong guard of angels, and if the jinn venture to ascend to its precincts, a flaming dart, that is to say, a shoot ing star, is thrown at thom, and they are precipitated to the lower regions, and, there-tore, the kahins ceased with the commencement of his mission

"The declaration of Waragah, and of the monk 'Addas, that the great nomes would descend upon him, and the faith of his wife, neither conveyed full conviction nor gave they sufficient courage to Mohammad to declare himself publicly the messenger of God, on the contrary, they increased the merbid state of his mind. A fatalist, as he was, it was a hallucination and a fit which decided him to follow their advice One day, whilst he was wandering about in the hills near Makkah, with the intention to destroy himself, he heard a voice, and, on raising his head, he beheld Gabriel, between heaven and earth, and the angel assured him that he was the prophet of God This hallucina tion is one of the few clearly stated miracles to which he appeals in the Quran Not even an allusion is made, in that book, to his fits, during which his followers believe that he received the revelations This bears out the account of Waqidy, which I have followed, and proves that it was rather the exalted state of his mind, than his fits, which caused his friends to believe in his mission. Flightened by this apparition, he retuned home, and, feeling unwell, he called for covering He had a fit and they poured cold water upon him, and when he was recovering from it, he received the revelation, 'O thou covered, arise and preach, and magnify thy Lord, and cleanse thy garment, and fly every abomination', and henceforth, we are told, he received revelations without intermission, that is to say, the fatrah was at an end, and he assumed his office

"This crisis of Mohammad's struggles bears a strange resemblance to the opening scene of Goethe's Faust He paints, in that admirable drama, the struggles of mind which attend the transition, in men of genus, from the ideal to the real—from youth to manhood. Both in Mohammad and in Faust the anguish of the mind, distracted by doubts, is dispelled by the song of angels, which rises from their own bosoms, and is the voice of the consciousness of their sincerity and warmth in seeking for truth, and in both, after this crisis, the enthusiasm ebbs gradually down to calm design, and they now blasphemously sacrifice their faith in God to self aggrandisement. In this respect the resemblance of the second part of Fussi to Mohammad's career at Madinah is complete. As the period of transition in the his of the Prophet has hitherto been completely niknown in Europe, Goethe's general picture of this period, in the life of enthusiasts, is like a prediction in reference to the individual case of Mohammad.

"Some authors consider the fits of the Prophet as the principal evidence of his mission, and it is therefore necessary to say a few words on them. They were preceded by a great depression of spirits he was despondent, and his face was clouded, and they were ushered in by coldness of the extremities and shivering. He shook, as if he were suffering of ague, and called out for covering His mind was in a most painfully excited state He heard a tinkling in his cars, as if bells were ringing, or a humming, as if bees were swarming round his head, and his lips quivered, but this motion was under the control of volition. If the attack proceeded beyond this stage, his eyes became fixed and staring, and the motions of his head became convulsive and automatic At length, per spiration broke out, which covered his face in large drops, and with this ended the attack Sometimes, however, if he had a violent fit, he fell comatose to the ground, like a person who is intoxicated, and (at least at a latter period of his life his face was flushed, and his respiration stortorous, and he rev'ained in that state for some time The bystanders sprinkled water in his face, but he himself fancied that he would derive s great benefit from being cupped on the head Thus is all the information which I have been able to collect concerning the fits of Mohammad. It will be observed that we have no distinct account of a paroxysm between the one which he had in his infancy, and the one after which he assumed his office It is likely that up to his forty-fourth year they were not habitual. The alarm of the nurse, under whose care he had been two years before he had the former of these two fits, shows that it was the first, and the age and circumstances under which he had it, render it likely that it was solitary, and caused by the heat of the sun and gastric irritation. The fit after which he assumed his office was undoubtedly brought on by long-continued and increasing mental excitement, and by his ascetic exercises. We know that he used frequently to fast, and that he sometimes devoted the greater part of the night to prayer The bias of the Musalmans is to gloss over the abstration of mind, and the intention to commit spicide, of their prophet Most of his biographers pass over the transi-tion period in allence We may, theirefore, be justified in stretching the scanty information which we can glean from them to the utmost extent, and in supposing that he was for some time a complete manusc, and that the fit after which he assumed his office was a paroxysm of cataleptic msanity disease is sometimes accompanied by such interesting psychical phenomena, that even in modern times it has given rise to many superstitious opinions After this paroxyam the fits became habitual, though the moral excitement cooled down, and they assumed more and more an epileptic character " (The Life of Mohammad from Original Sources, by A Sprenger, MD, part i., Allahabad, 1851, p 949)

(8) Dr Marcus Dodds, in his Mohammed,

Buddha, and Uhrest," says

"But is Mohammed in no sense a prophet? Certainly he had two of the most important characteristics of the prophetic order. He saw truth about God which his fellow-men did not see, and he had on it resistible inward impulse to publish this truth. In respect of this latter qualification, Mohammed may stand comparison with the most courageous of the beloic prophets of Israel truth's sake he risked his life, he suffered daily persecution for years, and eventually banishment, the loss of property, of the goodwill of his fellow-citizens, and of the confidence of his friends, he suffered, in short, as much as any man can suffer short of death, which he only escaped by flight, and yet he unfinchingly proclaimed his message No bube, threat, or inducement, could silence him Though they array against enience him me the sun on the right-hand and the moon on the left, I cannot renounce my purpose And it was this persistency, this belief in his call, to proclaim the unity of God which was the making of Islam

"Other men have been monotheists in the midst of idolaters, but no other man has founded a strong and enduring monotheistic religion The distinction in his case was his resolution that other men should believe. If we ask what it was that made Mohammed aggressive and proselytizing, where other men had been content to cherish a solitary faith, we must answer that it was nothing else than the depth and force of his own conviction of the truth To himself the difference between one God and many, between the unser: Creator and these ugiv lumps of The one stone or wood, was simply infinite creed was death and darkness to him, the other life and light. It is useless seeking for motives in such a case—for ends to serve and schick reasons for his speaking, the impossibility with Mohammed was to keep silence His acceptance of the office of teacher of his people was anything but the ill advised and sudden ampulse of a light minded vanity or His own convictions had been ambition reached only after long years of lonely mental agony, and of a doubt and distraction bor-dering on madness. Who can doubt the dering on madness. earnesiness of that cearch after truth and the living God, that drove the affluent merchant from his comfertable home and his fond wife, to make his abode for months at a time in the dismal cave on Mount Hua? If we respect the shrinking of Issiah or Jeremiah from the heavy task of proclaiming unwelcome truth, we must also respect the keen sensitiveness of Mohammed, who was so burdened by this same responsibility, and so persuaded of his incompetency for the task, that at times he thought his new feelings and thoughts were a snare of the Devil, and at times he would fain have rid himself of all further struggle by casting himself from a friendly precipice His rolling his head in his mentle, the sound of the ringing of bells in his ears, his sobbing like a young camel, the sudden grey hairs which he himself ascribed to the terrific Suras—what were all these but so many physical signs of nervous organization overstrained by anxiety and thought?

"His giving himself out as a prophet of God was, in the tirst instance, not only smcere, but probably correct in the sense in which he himself understood it. He felt that he had thoughts of God which it deeply concerned all around him to receive, and he knew that these thoughts were given him by God, although not, as we shall see, a revela-tion strictly so called His mistake by no means lay in his supposing himself to be called upon by God to speak for Hum and introduce a better religion, but it lay in his gradually coming to insist quite as much on men s accepting him as a prophet as on their accepting the great truth he preached He was a prophet to his countrymen in so far as he proclaimed the unity of God, but this was no sufficient ground for his claiming to be their guide in all matters of religion, still less for his assuming the lordship over them in all matters civil as well. The modesty and humility apparent in him, so long as his mind was possessed with objective truth, gradually gives way to the presumptuousness and arrogance of a mind turned more to a To put the sense of its own importance second article of the Mohammedan creed on the same level as the first, to make it as essential that men should believe in the mission of Mohammed as in the unity of God. was an ignorant, incongruous, and false com-bination. Had Mohammed known his own ignorance as well as his knowledge, the world would have had one religion the less, and Christianity would have had one more reformer" (Mohammed, Buddha, and Christ, p 17)

(4) Thomas Carlyle, in his lecture, "The Hero as Prophet," says -

"Mahomet himself, after all that can be said about him was not a sensual man. We shall err widely if we consider this man as a common voluptuary, intent mainly on base enjoyments—nay on enjoyments of any kind His household was of the fragalest, his common diet barley-bread and water, sometimes for months there was not a fire once lighted on his hearth. They record with just pride that he would mend his own shoes, patch his own closk A poor hard toiling ill provided man, careless of what vulgar men toil for Not a bad man I should say, something better in him than bunger of any sort-or these wild Arab men fighting and jostling three and twenty years at his hand, in close contact with him always, would not have reverenced him so! These were wild men, bursting ever and anen into quarrel, inte all kinds of fierce sincerity, without right, worth, and manhood, no man could have commanued them. They called him Prophet, you say? Why, he stood there face to face with them bere, not enshrined in any mystery, visibly clenting his own cloak, cobbling his own shoes, fighting, counselling, ordering in the midst of them, they must have seen what kind of a man he was, let him be called what you like! No emperor with his tiaras was obayed as this man in a cloak of his own clouting During three and twenty years of rough actual trial, I find something of a veritable Here necessary for that of itself

His last words are a prayer, broken spaculations of a heart struggling-up in them bling hope towards its Maker We cannot say his religion made him worse, it made him better, good, not bad Generous things are recorded of him, when he lost his daughter, the thing he answers is, in his own dialect, everyway sincero, and yet equivalent to that of Christians 'The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, blessed be the name of the Lord He answered in like manner of Said, his emancipated well-beloved slave, the second of the believers Said had fallen in the war of Tabuc, the first of Mahomet's fightings with the Greeks Mahemiet said it nas well haid had done his Masters work, Said had now gone to his Master it was all with Said Yet Said's daughter found him weeping over the body, the old gray-haired man melting in tears! What do I see? said she You see a friend veeping over his trend. He went out for the last time into the mosque two days before his death asked, If he had injured any man? Let his own back bear the stripes If he owed any man A voice answered, Yes me three diachms borrowed on such an occasion' Makomet ordered them to be paid 'Better be in shame now,' said he 'than at the Day of Judgment You remember Kadijah, and the 'No by Allah'. Traits of this kind show us the genuine man, the brother of us all, brought visible through twelve centuries, the veritable son of our common Mother" (Lectures on Herocs, p 66)

(5) The Rev Di Badger "manks —
"With respect to the private as distinct from the public character of Muhainmad, from the time of his settlement at al Madicah, it does not appear to have deteriorated except in one particular, from what it had bee i prior to the flight from Mecca. He was still frugal in his habits, generous and liberal, faithful to his associates, treasured up the leving memory of absent and departed friends, and awarted his last summons with fortained and aubmission. That he entertained an excessive passion for women, was lustful, if you will, cannot be denied, but the fourteen wives whop frem first to last he maxined and is eleven (? two see mi hammad's wives) concubines, figure favourably by the side of David's six wives and numerous concubines (2 Sam v 13, 1 Chron iii 1-9; xiv 3), Solomon's 700 wives and 300 concubines (1 Kings xi 3), and Rehoboams eighteen wives and sixty concubines (2 Chron xi 21), a plurality expressly forbidden to the sove reign of Israel, who was commanded not to multiply wives to himself (Deut xvii 17)

"It is not so much his polygamy, considering all the circumstances of the case, which justly lays Muhammad open to reproach, but his having deliberately infringed one of his own alleged divine revelations, which restricted the number of wives to 'four and no more (Sura iv 3), also for having in the birst instance dallied with Zainab, the wife of his freedmen and adopted son Zaid-ibn Harltbah, who complacently divorced her in order that she might espouse the Prophet In this case moreover as has already been related, he adduced the authority of God as sanctioning on his behoof first, and thenceforth in the behoof of all Mushims, the mar riage of a man with the diverced wife of his idepted son, which up to that time had been considered incestuous Whatever apology may be adduced for Muhammad in this matter of polygamy, there is no valid plea to justify his improbity and implety in the case of Zamab"

(6) Sn William Muir says —

I would warn the reader against seeking to portray in his mind a character in all its parts consistent with itself is the character of Mahomet The truth 1-, that the trangest inconsistencies blended together (according to the went of human nature) throughout the life of the Prophet The student of the Instory will trace for himself how the pure and lufty aspirations of Mahomet were first tinged and then gradually debased by a half unconscious self deception and how in this process truth merged into falsebood, sincerity into guile those opposite principles often co-existing even as active agencies in his conduct. The reader will observe that am ultaneously with the auxious desire to extinguish adulating, and to promote religion and virtue in the world, the e was nortured by the Prophet an his own heart a licentious self indulgence, till in the end assuming to be the favourite of Heaven he justified himself by 'revelations' from God in the most flagrant breaches of morality. He will remark that while Mahomet cherished a kind and tender disposition, 'weeping with them that wept,' and binding to his person the hearts of his fol lowers by the ready and self-denying offices of love and friendship, he could jet take pleasure in cruel and perfidious assassination, could gloat over the massacre of an entire tribe, and savagely consign the innocent babe to the fires of hell. Inconsistences such as these cortmusly present themselves from the period of Mahomet's arrival at Medina, and It is by the study of these meansistencies that his character must be rightly compre-The key to many difficulties of hended this description may be found. I believe, in the chapter on the belief of Mahamet in his own inspiration' When once he had dared to forge the name of the Most High God as the seal and authority of his own words and actions, the germ was laid from which the errors of his after life freely and fatally developed themselves" (Life of Muhomet, new ed p 585)

(7) Mr Besworth Snuth, in his Mohammed

and Mohammedanism, says -

"Mohammed did not, indeed, immedi ronquer a world like Alexander, or Casar, or Napoleon He did not himself weld together into a homogeneous whole a vast system of states like Charles the Great He was not a philosophic king, like Marous Aurelius, nor philosopher like Aristotle or like Bacon, ruling by pure reason the world of thought for centuries with a more than kingly power, be was not a legislator for all mankind, nor even the highest part of it, like Justinian, nor did he cheaply carn the title of the Great be being the first among rulers to turn, like Constantine, from the setting to the using sun He was not a universal philanthropist like the greatest of the Stoics

"Nor was he the apostle of the hignest form of religion and civilisation combined like Gregory or Bonitace like Leo or Alfred the Great He was less, indeed, than most of these in one or two of the elements that go to make up human greatness, but he was also greater Half Christian and halt Pagan half civilised and half barbacian, it was given to him in a marvellous degree to unite the peculiar excellences of the one with the poculiar excellences of the other 'I have seen, said the ambassactor sent by the triumphant Quraish to the dosposed exile at Medina - I have seen the Persian Chosroes and the Greek Herachus sitting upon their thronebut never did I see a mou ruling his equals as does Mohammed

· Head of the State as well as of the Church, he was ( wear and Pope in one but he was Pape without the Pape's pietensions, Casar without the legions of Casar Without a standing army, without a body guard, without a pular e withert a fixed revenue, if ever any mun had tue right to say that he ruled by a right divine, it was Mohammed, for he had all the power without its instruments and without its supports

"By a fortune apsolutely unique in history Mohammed is a three-fold founder-of a nation of an empire and of a religiou Illitorate lumself, scarcely able to read or write, he was yet the author of a book which is a poem, a code of laws a Book of Common Prayer, and a Bible in one and is reverenced to this day by a srath of the whole human race as a maracle of purity of style of wis dom, and of truth. It was the one muscle claimed by Mohammed—his standing intracte he called it, and a miracle indeed it is But looking at the circumstances of the time at the unbounded reverence of his followers, and comparing him with the Fathers of the Church or with mediaval saints, to my mind the most musculous thing about Mohammed is, that he never claimed the power of working miracles Whatever he had said he could do, his disciples would straightway have seen hım do They could not help attributing to him miraculous acts which he never did, and which he always denied he could do What more crowning proof of his sincerity is needed? Monammed to the end of his life claimed for himself that title only with which he had begun, and which the highest philo-sophy and the truest Christianit will one day I venture to believe, agree in yielding to him that of a Prophet, a very Prophet of Goo" (Mohammed and Mohammedenium. р J40

(8) Major Robert Durie Osborn, in his

I-lám under the Arabs, ARVS "He (Muhammad) was brought face to face with the question which every apiritual reformer his to meet and consider against which so many noble spirits have gone to ruin Will not the end justify the means? Here am I a faithful servant of God, eager only to enthrone Him in the hearts of men and at the very goal and termination of my labours I am thwarted by this incapacity to work a miracle It is true, as there infidels allege, that the older prophets did possess this power, and I unless the very reason and porpose of my existence is to be made a blank must also do something worderful But what kind of miracle? In his despair, Muhammad declared that the Quran itself was that constantly recurring miraele they Had 'hoy ever heard were accking after these stories of Noah Lot, Auraham Joseph Zacharias Jesus, and others? No neither had he They were transcripts made from the 'preserved Table that stood before the throne of God The archangel Gabriel had revealed them to Muhammad, written in pure Arabic, for the -piritual edification of the Quraish Thus in the twelfth Surah, where he details at great length an exceedingly ridicu lous history of Joseph he commences the narrative with these words, as spoken by God -

These are signs of the clear Book

An Arabic Qur an have we sent it down, that ye might understand it' and at the close of the Sainh, we are told -This is one of the secret histories which we reveal unto thee. Thou wast not present with Joseph's breth en when they conceived their design and laid their plot but the greater part of men, though thou long for it, will not believe. Thou shelt not ask of them any recompense for this message It is simply an instruction for all mankind

And, again, in the LXVIIth Surah, he declares respecting the Qur'an -

It is a mussive from the Lord of the worlds

But it Muhammad had fabricated concerning us any sayings

We had surely seized him by the right Bard.

And had cut through the vein of his neck

" It would be easy to multiply extracts of similar purport, but the above will suffice by way of illustration. There are modern biographers of the Prophet who would have us believe that he was not conscious of falsehood when making these assertions He was under a hallucination, of course, but he be lieved what he said This to me is incredible The legends in the Qur'an are derived chiefly from Talmudic sources Muhammad must have learned them from some Jew resident in or near Mekka To work them up into the form of rhymed Surahs, to put his own peculiar doctrines in the mouth of Jewish patriarchs, the Virgin Maig, and the infant Jesus (who talks like a good Mosiem the moment after his birth), must have required time, thought, and labour It is not possible that the man who had done this could have forgotten all about it, and believed that these legends had been brought to him ready propared by an angelic visitor Muhammad was guilty of filsehood under circumstances where he deemed the end justified the means" (Islam under the Arabs, p 21)

(9) The character of Muhammad is a historic problem, and many have been the conjectures as to his motives and designs. Was he an importor, a fanatic, or an honest man—"a very prophet of God"? And the problem might have for ever remained unsolved, had not the Prophet himself appealed to the Old and New Testaments in proof of his mission. This is the crucial test established by the Prophet himself. He claims to be seighed in the balance with the diving Josus.

Objection has often been made to the manner in which Christian divines have attacked the private character of Muhammad Why reject the prophetic mission of Muhammad on account of his private vices when you n David, or a Solomon? Missionaries should not, as a rule, attack the character of Mu hammad in dealing with Islam it rouses opposition, and is an offensive line of aignment Still, in forming an estimate of his prophetic claims, we maintain that the chie ractes of Muhammad is an important consi deration We readily admit that be men have sometimes been, like Balaam and others, the divinely appointed organs of inspiration, but in the case of Muhammad, his professed inspiration sanctioned and encouraged his own vices. That which ought to have been the fountain of purity was, in fact, the cover of the Prophet's depravity But how different it is in the case of the time prephet David where in the words of inspiration he lays bare to public gaze the enormity of his own crimes The deep contrition of his immost soul is manifest in every line-" [ acknowledge my transgression, and my sin is ever before me against Thee. Thee only, have I suned, and done this evil in Thy aight '

The best defenders of the Arabian Prophet are obliged to admit that the matter of Zamab, the wife of Zaid, and again, of Mary, the Copuc slave, are "an indelible stain"

upon his memory, that "he is once or twice untrue to the kind and forgiving disposition of his best nature, that he is once or twice unrelenting in the punishment of his personal enemies, and that he is guilty even more than once of committing at the assassination of inveterate opponents", but they give no satisfactory explanation or apology for all this being done under the supposed sanction of God in the Qur'an

In forming an estimate of Muhammad's prophetical pretensions, it must be remembered that he did not claim to be the founder of a new religion, but merely of a new covenant. He is the last and greatest of all God's prophets. He is sent to convert the world to the one true religion which God had before revealed to the five great law-givers-Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, and Jesus! The creed of Muhammad, therefore, claims to supersede that of the Lord Jesus And it is here that we take our stand give Muhammad credit as a warmor, as a legislator, as a poet, as a man of uncommon genius raising himself amidst great opposition to the pinnacle of renown, we admit that he is without doubt, one of the greatest heroes the world has ever seen, but when we consider his claims to supersede the mission of the divine Jesus, we strip him of his borrowed plumes, and reduce him to the condition of an impostor! For whilst he has adopted and avowed his belief in the sacred books of the lewand the Christian, and has given them all the stamp and currency which his authority and influence could impart, he has attempted to rob Christianity of every distinctive truth which it possesses—its divine Saviour, its Heavenly Comforter, its two Sacraments, its pure codo of social merals, its spirit of love and truth-and has written his own refutation and condemnation with his own hand, by professing to confirm the divine oracles which sup the very foundations of his religious system. We follow the Prophet in his selfasserted mission from the cave of Hira' to the closing scene, when he dies in the midst of the lamentations of his harim, and the contentions of his friends—the visions of Gabriel, the period of mental depression the contemplated suicide, the assumption of the prophetic office, his struggles with Makken unbelief, his flight to al-Madinsh, his triumphant entry into Makkah-and whilst we wonder at the genns of the here we pause at every stage and inquire, "Is this the Apostle of God, whose mission is to claim universal dominion, to the suppression not merely of idolatry, but of Christianity itself?" Then it is that the divine and holy character of Jesus rises to our view, and the inquiring mind sickens at the thought of the beloved, the pure, the lowly Jesus giving place to that of the ambitrous, the sensual, the time-serving hero of Arabia In the study of Islam, the character of Muhammad needs an apology or a defence at every stage, but in the contemplation of the Christian system, whilst we everywhere read of Jesus and see the reflection of His image in everything we read the heart revels in the contemplation, the inner pulsations of our spiritual life bound within us at the study of a character so divine, so pure.

We are not insensible to the beauties of the Qur'an as a literary production (although they have, without doubt, been overrated), but as we admire its conceptions of the Divine nature, its deep and fervent trust in the power of God, its frequent deep moral earnestness, and its sententions wisdom, we would gladly rid ourselves of our recollec-tions of the Prophet, his licentious harim, his sanguinary battle-fields, his ambitious schemes, whilst as we peruse the Christian Scriptures, we find the grand central charm in the divine character of its Founder It is the divine character of Jesus which gives fragrance to His words, it is the divine form of Jesus which shines through all He says or does, it is the divine life of Jesus which is the great central point in Gospel history How, then, we ask, can the creed of Muham-mad, the son of 'Abdu 'llah, supersede and abrogate that of Jesus, the Son of God? And it is a remarkable coincidence that, whilst the founder of Itlam died feeling that he had but imperfectly fulfilled his mission, the Founder of Christianity died in the full consciousness that His work was done-"It is finished." It was in professing to produce a revelation which should supersede that of Jesus, that Muhammad set the seal of his own refuta-(Hughes, Notes on Muhammadanism, p. 2.)

MUHAMMAD, The Wives of Arabic al-azwaju 'l-mutahharat (21) سابطماً), 2 c. " The pure wives " According to the Traditions, Muhammad took to himself eleven lawful wives, and two con oubines (See Majma'u 'l-Bihar, p 528)

(1) Khadijah (Luch), a Quraish lady, the daughter of Khuwailid ibn Asad. She was a rich widow lady, who had been twice mai ried. She was married to Muhammad when he was 25 years old, and she was 40 years, and remained his only wife for twenty-five years, until she died (A D 619), aged 65, Muhammad being 50 years old. She bore Muhammad two sons, al-Qāṣim and Abdu Tláh, surnamed at-Tāhi and at-Taiyib, and four daughters, Zamab, Ruqaiyah, Fatimah, and Ummu Kulsum Of these children, only

Fatimah (the wife of 'Alı) survived Muham-

(2) Saudah (1994), daughter of Zama'ah, the widow of as-Sakran (a Quraish and one of the Companions) Married about two months after the death of Khadijah

(8) 'Ayıshah (aste), the daughter of Abu Bakr She was betrothed when she was only 7 years old, and was married at 10, about the uinth mouth after the flight to al-Madinah

(4) Juwarryah (مَوْرِيَّة), a widow, the daughter of al-Hāris ibn Abi Zirār, the chief of the Banu Mustaliq Muhammad ransomed her from a citizen who had fixed her ransom at nine ounces of gold. It is related that 'Ayishah said, " No woman was ever a greater blessing to her people than this Juwairiyah."

(5) Hafsah (Lab.), the daughter of 'Umar She was the widow of Khunais, an early convert to Islam Muhammad marned her about six months after her former husband's death.

(6) Zamab, the daughter of Khuzamah (days carry the widow of Muham-mad's counn 'Ubaidah, who was killed at the battle of Badr She was called the " Mother of the Poor," Ummu 'l-Masaken, on account of her care of destitute converts before Muhammad

(7) Ummu Salamah (and pi), the widow of Aba Salimah, one of the Refugees, who was wounded at the battle of Uhud, and afterwards died of his wounds

- (8) Zamab the daughter of Jahah ( , ) the wife of Muhammad's adopted), the son Zaid Zaid divorced her to please the Prophet She was (being the wife of an adopted son) unlawful to him, but Sürah xxx 111 86 was produced to settle the difhoulty
- (٩) Ṣafiyah (مفية), daughter of Ḥayı ıbn Akhtab, the widow of Kinanah, the Khaibar chief, who was ornelly put to death. It was said that Muhammad wished to divorce her. but she begged that her turn might be given to 'Ayishah

(10) Ummu Habibah (مر مام), the daughter of Abū Sufyan and the widow of 'Ubaidu 'liah, one of the "Four Enquirers," who, after emigrating as a Muslim to Abys sinia, had embraced Christianity there, and died in the profession of that faith

(11) Manmunah (أسيمونة), the daughter of al-Hāriş and widowed kinswoman of Muhammad, and the sister-in-law of al-Abbas She is said to have been 51 years of age when she married Muhammad

Muhammad's concubines were

(مارية القبطية) Mary the Copt Christian slave-girl sent to Muhammad by al-Muqauque, the Roman Governor in Egypt She became the mother of a son by Muhammad, named Ibrāhīm, who died young

(2) Rehanah (diles), a Jewess, whose husband had perished in the massacre of the Banu Quraisah She declined the summons to conversion, and continued a Jew, but it is said she embraced Islâm before her death

At the time of Muhammad's death, he had nine wives and two concubines living, (Sa hahu 'l-Bulhari, p 798), Khadijah and Zainah bint Khusaimah having died before hum

According to the Shī'ahs, Muhammad had, in all, twenty-two wives Eight of these never consummated the marriage Their names are 'Aliyah bint Zabyān, Fatīlah bint Qais, Fāṭīmah bint Zahhāf, Asmā' bint Kana'ān, Mulaikah bint Suwaid, Lailah bint Khāṭīb, and Shabah bint Ṣīlah Twelve were duly married Their names are Khādījah, Saudah, Rind (or Ummu Sahmah), Ayishah, Hatah, Zainab bint Jahah, Ramalah bint Abī Sufyan (or Ummu Hab bah), Maimō rah, 'Zainab bint 'Umais, Juwairiyah bint al-Hāris of the Banu Mustaliq, Şafiyah, Khaulah bint Hakīm, and Ummiani, a sister to Alī Two were bondwomen Mariyatu 'Lelbtīyah and Rihanah (See Jānnātu 'L Khulūd, p 14)

MUHAMMAD, The Children of According to the Majmau l-Bihār, p. 538, Muhammad had seven children Two sons and four daughters by Khadijah, and one son

by Mary, his Coptic slave

The two sons by Khadijah were al Qasim and 'Abdu 'lläh (called also at-Tähir and at Taivib), and the four daughters were Zainab, Ruqaivah Fätimah, and Ummu Kulsum The sor by his bondwoman Mary was Ibra him All these children died before Muham mad, with the exception of Fätimah, who married 'Alī, the fourth Khalifah, and from whom are descended the Saiylds [SAIVID.]

Zamah married 'Abū 'l' 'Ās bau 'l-Rabī' Ruqaiyah married 'Utbah ibn Abū Lahab, by whom she was divorced She afterwards married 'Usman, the third Khahfah

MUHAMMAD'S GRAVE [HUJ.

MUHAMMADAN Arabic Muhammadi (1544) A name seidom used in Muhammadan works for the followers of Muhammad, who call themselves either Muhammad, who call themselves either Muhamma Muslims, or Musalmans It is however, sometimes used in Indian papers and other popular publications, and it is not, as meny European scholars suppose, an offensive term to Muslims

MUHAMMADANISM The reingion of Muhammad is called by its followers al-Islâm (ALM), a word which implies the entire surrender of the will of man to God [BLAM] Its adherents speak of themselver as Muslims pl Muslimin or Mumin, pl Muslimin a Mumin being a "believer" In Persian these toims are rendered by the world Musalman, pl Musalmanan

The principles of Islam were first enunciated in portions of the Qur'an, as they were revealed piecemeal by Muhammad, together with such verbal explanations as were given by him to his followers, but when the final recension of the Qur'an was produced by the Khalifah Usman, about twenty-two years after Muhammad's death, the Muslims possessed a complete book, which they regarded as the inspired and infallible word of God. [QUR'AN] But as an interpretation of its precepts, and as a supplement to its teachings, there also existed, side by side with the Quran, the sayings, and practice of Muhammad, called the Ahadis and Sunnah traditions of what the Prophet "did and said," gradually laid the foundations of what 15 now called Islam For whilst it is a canon in Islam that nothing can be received or taught which is contrary to the literal injunctions of the Qur'an, it is to the Traditions rather than to the Qur'an that we must refer for Muhammadan law on the subject of faith, knowledge, purification, prayer, almsgiving, fasting, marriage, barter, inheritance, pumshments, late, duties of magistrates, religrous warfnie, lawful food, death, Day of Judgment, &c, and each collection of traditions has sections devoted to these subjects. so that it is upon these traditional sayings, quite as much as upon the Quran itfelf, that the religious and civil law of the Muslims is based, both Shi'ah and Sunni appealing alike to Tradition in support of their views

When the Prophet was alive, men could go direct to him with their doubts and difficulties and an infallible authority was always present to give "inspired" directions. But after the deaths of all those who knew Mahammad personally it became absolutely necessary to systematise the great mass of traditional sayings then affoat amongst Muslims and thus various schools of jurispiradence were formed, the concurrent opinion of those learned regarding matters of dispute in Muslim law being called Ima" [LIMA']. Upon this naturally followed the system of analogical reasoning called Quyas [QIMA'], thus constituting the four "pillars" or foundations of Islain, known as the Quyas, Haans,

Ijma, and Qıyas

Islam, whether it be Shī'sh, Sunni, or We'-hāh, is founded upon these four authorities, and it is not true, as is so frequently asserted, that the Shi'shs reject the Traditions They merely accept different collections of Aḥādis to those received by the Sunnis and Wahhābīs Nor do the Wahhābīs reject Ijmā' and Qiyās, but they assert that Ijmā' was only possible in the earliest stages of Islam

A study of the present work will show what an elaborate system of dogma Muhammadaniam is. This system of dogma, together with the liturgical form of worship, has been formulated from the traditional sayings of Muhammad rather than from the Qur'an itself. For example, the daily ritual, with its purifications, which are such a prominent feature in Islam, is entirely founded on the Traditions [PRAYER] Circumcision is not once mentioned in the Qur'an

The Din, or religion of the Muslim, is divided into Iman, or "Faith" and "Imal, or "Fractice"

Faith consists in the acceptance of six

- I The Unity of God.
- 2 The Angels
- 3 The Inspired Books.

- 4. The Inspired Prophets.
- 5 The Day of Judgment

6. The Decrees of God.

Practical Religion consists in the obser-VALUE of-

- 1 The recital of the Oreed--" There is no derty but God, and Muhammad is the Prophet of God "
  - 2 The five stated periods of prayer
- 8 The thirty days fast in the month Ramaşân.
  - 4 The payment of Zakāt, or the legal alms 5 The Haji, or Pilgrunage to Makkah
- A belief in these six articles of faith and the observance of these five practical duties, constitute Islam. He who thus believes and acts is called a Mu'man, or " behaver", but he who rejects any article of faith or practice is u Käfir, or "infidel."

Muhammadan theology, which is very ex tensive, is divided into-

The Qur'an and its commentaries
The Traditions and their commentaries

8  $U_{\tilde{x}\tilde{u}l}$ , or expositions on the principles of exegesis.

4 'Aqard, or expositions of scholastic theology founded on the six articles of faith.

Figh, or works on both own and reli-

grous law [THEOLOGY.]

Muhammadanism is, therefore, a system which affords a large field for patient study and research, and much of its present energy and vitality is to be attributed to the fact that, mall parts of Islam, there are m the various mosques students who devote their whole hves to the study of Muslim divinity

The two leading principles of Islam are those expressed in its well-known creed, or kaismah, namely, a belief in the absolute unity of the Divine Being, and in the mis-aion of Muhammad as the Messenger of the

Almighty [KALIMAH]
"The faith," says Gibbon, "which he (Muhammad) preached to his family and nation is compounded of an eternal truth and a necessary fiction. That there is only one God, and that Muhammad is the Apostle of God." (Roman Empire, vol. vi. p. 222.)

"Mohammad's conception of God," says

"Mohammad's conception of God," says

Mr Stanley Lane-Poole, "has, I think, been misunderstood, and its effect upor the people consequently under-estimated. The God of Islam is commonly represented as a pitiless tyrant, who plays with humanity as on a chessboard, and works out his game without regard to the sacrifice of the pieces, and there 18 a certain truth in the figure There is more in Islam of the potter who shapes the clay than of the father pitying his children. Mohammad conceived of God as the Scientic mind has always preferred to think of Him his God is the All-Mighty, the All-Knowing, the All-Just. Irresistible Power is the first attribute he thinks of the Lord of the Worlds, the Author of the Heavens and the Earth, who hath created Lafe and Death, in whose hand is Dominion, who maketh the Dawn to appear and causeth the Night to cover the Day, the Great, All-Powerful Lord of the Glorious Throne, the thunder pro-claimeth His perfection, the whole earth is His handful, and the heavens shall be folded together in His right hand. And with the Power He conceives the Knowledge that directs it to right ends God is the Wise; the Just, the True, the Swift in reckoning, who knoweth every ant's weight of good and of ill that each man hath done, and who suffereth not the reward of the faithful to perish.

" God There is no God but He, the Ever-Laving, the Ever-Subsisting Stumber seizeth Him not nor sleep, To Him belongeth whatsoever is in the Heavens and whatsoever is in the Earth Who is he that shall intercede with Him, save by his permission? He knoweth the things that have gone before and the things that fellow after, and men shall not compass aught of His knowledge, save what He willeth. His throne comprehendeth the Heavens and the Earth, and the care of them ourdeneth Him not. And He is the High, the Great '-Kur-an, 11 256

"But with this Power there is also the gentleness that belongs only to great strength. God is the Guardian over His servants, the Shelterer of the orphan, the Gunder of the erring, the Deliverer from every affliction, in His haid is Good, and He is the Generous Lord, the Gracious, the Hearer, the Near-at-Hand Every socrah of the Kur-an begins with the words, 'In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful, and Mohammad was never tired of telling the people how God was Very-Forgiving, that His love for man was more tender than the mother-bird for her

Yeung

"It is too often forgotten bon much there is in the Kur-an of the loving kindness of Gcd, but it must be allowed that these are not the main thoughts in Mohammad's teaching It is the doctrine of the Might of God that most held his imagination, and that has unpressed itself most strongly upon Muslims of all ages The fear rather than the love of God is the spur of Islam There can be no question which is the higher incentive to good, but it is nearly certain that the love of God is an idea absolutely foreign to most of the races that have accepted Islam, and to preach such a doctrine would have been to mistake the leaning of the Semitic mind.

"The leading doctrine of Mohammad, then, is the belief in One All-Powerful God is the self-surrender of every man to the will of Goo. Its danger has in the stress laid on the power of God, which has brought about the stifling effects of fatalism Mohammad taught the foreknowledge of God, but he did not lay down precisely the doctrine of Prodestination. He found it as all have found it, a stumtling-block in the way of man's progress. It perplexed him, and he spoke of it, but often contradicted himself, and he would become angry if the subject were mooted in his presence. Sit not with a disputer about fate, he said, 'nor begin a conversation with him.' Mohammad vaguely recognised that little margin of Free Will which makes life not wholly mechanical Thus doctrine of one Supreme God, to whose will it is the duty of every man to surrender himself, is the kernel of Islam, the truth for which Mohammad lived and suf fered and triumphed. But it was no new teaching, as he himself was constantly saying. His was only the last of revelations Many prophets—Abraham, Moses, and Christ—had taught the same faith before but people had hearkened littic to their words So Mohammad was sent not different from them, only a messenger yet the last and greatest of them, the 'seal of prophecy,' the 'most excellent of the creation of God.' This most excellent of the creation of God.' is the second dogma of Islam Mohammad is the Apostle of God It is well worthy of notice that it is not said, 'Mohammad is the only apostle of God' Islam is more tolerant in this matter than other religions. Its prophet is not the sole commissioner of the Most High, nor is his teaching the only true teach ing the world has ever received Many other messengers had been sent by God to guide men to the right and these taught the same religion that was in the mouth of the proscher of Islam Hence Mushims reverence Moses and Christ only next to Mohammad All they claim for their founder is that ne was the last and best of the messengers of the one God" (Introduction to Lane's Selections, 2nd ed,

Islam does not profess to be a new religion, formulated by Muhammad (nor indeed is it), but a continuation of the religious principles established by Adam, by Naoh, by Abraham by Moses, and by Jesus, as well as by other inspired teachers, for it is said that God sent not fewer than 313 apostles into the world to reclaim it from superstition and infidehty The revelations of these great prophets are generally supposed to have been lost, but God, it is asserted, had retained all that is necessary for man's guidance in the Qur'en, although, as a matter of fact, a very large proportion of the ethical devotional, and dogmatic teaching in Islam, cornea from the fraditional saying of Muhammed and not from the Qur'an itself [TRADILIONS]

In reading the different articles in the present work, the reader cannot fail to be simple with the great indebtedness of Muhammad to the Jewish religion for the chief elements of Les system Mr Emannel Deutsch has tauly remarked "that Muhammadanism owes more to Judsem than either to Heathemem or to Christianity It is not merely parallelisms, reminiscences, allusions, technical terms, and the like of Judaism, its love and dogma and criemony its Halacka, and its Haggadai its Law and Legend, which we find in the Qur an, but we think Islam neither more nor less than Judaism-as adapted to Arabia-plus the Apostleship of Jesus and Muhammad Nay we verily believe that a great deal of such Christianity as has found its way into the Qur'an, has found it through Jewish channels (Literary Remains, p. 64)

Its conception of God, its prophets, its seven houseness and seven hells the law of many seven heavens and seven hells, its law of marriage and divorce, its law of oaths, its puri fications and utual, its festivals, are all of marked Jewish origin, and prove that Tal-mudic Judaism forms the kernel of Muhammadanism, which even according to the words of the founder, professed to be the religion of Abraham." See Surah in 60 Abraham was neither a Jew nor Christian, but he was a Hanif, a Mushm." Nevertheless, Muhammad, although he professed to take his legislation from Abraham, incorporated into his system a vast amount of the law of Moses

The sects of Islam have become numerous, indeed, the Prophet is related to have predicted that his followers would be divided mto seventy three They have far exceeded the limits of that prophecy, for, according to 'Abdu 'l-Qadır al Jılanı, there are at least 150 The chief sect is the Sunni, which is divided into four schools of interpretation, known after their respective founders, Hanefi, Shani, Malaki, Hanbali The Shi'shs who separated from the so called orthodox Sunnis on the question of the khalifate, maintaining that 'Ali and not Abū Bakı was the rightful successor to Muhammad, are divided also into numerous sects [sill AH ] The Wabhabis are a comparatively modern sect who are the Purstane of Islam, maintaining that Islam has very far departed from the original teaching of Muhammad, as expressed in the Traditions They consequently reject very many of the so-called lithad of the Sunnis, and take the literal meaning of the Tradi tional sayings of the Prophet as the best exposition of the Qur'an

The Shi'ah sect is almost entirely contined to Persia, although there are a few thousand in Lacknow and other parts of Lidia Sunnie, the Hanafis are found chuefly in Turkey, Arabia India, and Central Asia, the Shan'is in Egypt and the Malakis in Mar-rocco and Tunis The Hanbali are a small sect found in Arabia Wahhabiism, as will be seen upon reference to the article on the subject, is a principle of reform which has extended itself to all parts of Islam It is scarcoly to be called a sect, but a school of thought in Sunn Islam time hundred and seventy millions of the numan race are said to profess the religion of Munsumad, and, according to the late Mr. Keth Johnstone's computations, they are distributed as follows —In Europe, 5,974 000, m Africa, 50,416,000, in Asia, 112,739,000 Mr W S Blunt divides 175 millions as follows -Turkey, Syria, and Trui, 22 milhone, Egypt, 5 millions North Africa 18 millions, Arabia, 11½ millions, Central Africa, 11½ millions, Persia, 8 millions, India, 40 millions, Malays (Javs), 80 millions, Chura 15 millions, Central Asia, 11 millions, Afghanistan, 3 millions. No consus having been taken of any of these countries except India, the numbers are merely an approxi mation Out of this supposed population of Islām, 98,250 pilgrims were present at Mak-kah in the year 1880 (Blunt's Future of Islam, p 10)

In some parts of the world-in Africa for example — Muhammadanism is spreading; and even in Borneo, and in other islands of the Indian Archipelago, we are told that it has supplanted Hinduism. In Central Asia, within the last twenty years, numerous villages of Shiaposh Kafirs have been forduly converted to Islam, and in Santalis and other parts of India, the converts to Islam from the aborigmal tribes are not moonsderable

But, although Muhammadanism has, perhaps, gained in numerical strength within the last few years, no candid Muslim will deny that it has lost, and is still losing, its vital power. Indeed, "this want of faith and decline in vitality" are regarded as the signs of the last days by many a devout Muslim.

In no Muhammadan state is Muslim law administered in its strict integrity, and even in the Sultans own dominion, some of the most sacred principles of the Prophet's religion are set at naught by the civil power, and, as far as we can ascertain (and we speak after a good deal of personal research), the prevalence of downright infide-lity amongst educated Muslims is immirtakable "No intelligent man believe in the teaching of the Muslim divines," said a highly educated Muhammadan Egyptian net long ago, "for our religion is not in keeping with the progress of thought" The truth is the Arabian Prophet over-legislated, and, as we now see in Turkey, it is impossible for civilised Muliammadans to be tied hand and foot by laws and social customs which were mended for Arabian society as it existed 1,200 years ago, whilst, on the contrary, Chustianity legislates in spirit, and can therefore be adapted to the spiritual and social necessities of mankind in the various stages of human thought and civilisation.

Mr Paigrave, in his Central and Eastern Arabia, remarks -

"Islam is in its essence stationary, and was framed thus to remain Sterile like its God, lifeless like its first principle and supreme original in all that constitutes true life—for life is love, participation, and progress, and of these, the Coramo Deity has none—it justly repudiates all change, all advance, all development. To borrow the forcible words of Lord Houghton, the 'written book' is there, the 'dead man's hand,' stiff and motionless, whatever savours of vitality is by that alone convicted of heresy and defection.

"But Christianity with its living and loving God, Begetter and Begetter, Spirit and Movement, nay more, a Creator made creature, the Maker and the made existing in One, a Divinity communicating itself by uninterrupted gradation and degree, from the meet intimate union far off to the faintest irradiation, through all that it has made for love and governs in love; One who calls His creatures not slaves, and servants, but friends, may sons, may gods—to sum up, a religion in whose seal and secret 'God in man is one with men in God,' must also be necessarily a religion of vitality, of progress, of advancement. The contrast between it and Islam is that of movement with dredness, of participation with sterility, of development with barrenness, of life with petrifaction. The first vital principle and the animating spirit of its birth must indeed abide ever the same, but the outer form must change with the changing days, and new offshoots of fresh sap and greenness be centimually thrown out as witnesses to the vitality within, else were the vine withered and the branches dead

"I have no intention here—it would be extremely out of place—of entering on the maze of controversy, or discussing whether any dogmatic attempt to reproduce the religious phase of a former age is likely to succeed. I only say that hie supposes movement and growth, and both imply change, that to censure a living thing for growing and changing is abourd, and that to attempt to hinder it from so doing by punning it down on a written label, or nailing it to a Procrustean framework, is tantamount to killing it altogether

'Now Christianity is living, and because hving must grow, must advance, must change, and was meant to do so, onwards and forwards is a condition of its very existence, and I cannot but think that those who do not recongnize this, show themselves so far ignorant of its time nature and essence. On the other hand, Islam is lifeless, and because lifeless cannot grow, cannot advance, cannot change, and was never intended so to do Stand still' is its motto and its most essential condition" (Central and Eastern Arabia vol 1 p 872)

Mr Stauley Lane Poole, in his Introduction to Lane's Selections, says —

"Islam is unfortunately a social system as well as a religion, and herein lies the great difficulty of fairly estimating its good and its bad influence on the world. It is but in the nature of things that the teacher who lays down the law of the relation of man to God should also endeavour to appoint the proper relation between man and his neighbour

"Mohammad not only promulgated a religron, he laid down a complete social system, containing minute regulations for a man's conduct in all circumstances of life, with due rewards or penalties according to his fulfilment of these rules As a rollgron, Islam is great it has taught men to worship one God with a pure worship who formerly worshipped many gods impurely As a social system, Islam is a complete failure it has misunderstood the relations of the sexes, upon which the whole character of a nation's life hange, and, by degrading woman, has degraded each successive generation of their children down an increasing scale of infamy and corruption, until it seems almost impossible to reach a lower level of vice" Mr. W E. H. Lecky remarks -

"In the first place, then, it must be observed that the enthusiasm by which Mahometaniam conquered the world was mainly a military enthusiasm. Mon were drawn to it at once, and without conditions, by the splen-dour of the achievements of its disciples, and it declared an absolute war against all the Its history, therereligions it encountered fore, exhibits nothing of the process of gradual absorption, persuasion, compromise, and assumilation, that are exhibited in the dealings of Christianity with the narbarians the next place, one of the great characteristics of the Koran is the extreme care and skill with which it labours to assist men in realising the unseen Descriptions, the most minutely detailed, and at the same time the most vivid, are mingled with powerful appeals to those sensual passions by which the imagination in all countries, but especially in those in which Mahometrnian has taken root, is most forcibly influenced In no other religion that prohibits idols is the strain upon the imagination so slight" (History of the Rise and Influence of Rationalism, vol 1.

"This great religion which so one rivalled the influence of Christianity, had indeed spread the deepest and most justifiable panic through Christendom Without any of those aids to the imagination which putures and images can furnish, without any elaborate sacordotal organization, preaching the purest Monothersm among ignorant and harbarous men, and inculcating, on the whole, an extremely high and noble system of morals, it spread with a rapidity, and it acquired a hold over the minds of its votaries, which it is probable that no other religion has altogether equalled. It borrowed from Christianity that doctrine of salvation by belief which is perhaps the most powerful impulse that can be applied to the characters of masses of men, and it elaborated so minutely the charms of its sensual heavens and the terrors of its material hell, as to cause the alternative to appeal with unrivilled force to the gross imaginations of the people. It possessed a book which, however inferior to that of the opposing religion has nevertheless been the consolation and the support of millions in many ages It taught a fatalism which, in its first age, norved its adherents with a matchless military courage, and which, though in later days it has often paralysed their active energies, has also rarely failed to support them under the pressure of mevitable caramity But above all, it discovered the great though fatal secret, of uniting indissolubly the passion of the soldier with the passion of the devotee Making the conquest of the infidel the first of duties, and proposing heaven as the certain reward of the valuant soldier, it created a blonded enthusiasin that soon overpowered the divided connects and the voluntuous governments of the East, and within a century of the death of Muhammad. his followers had almost extirpated Chiistianity from its original home, founded great monarchies in Asia and A rice, planted a noble, though transient and exotic, civilisa-tion in Spain, menaced the capital of the Eastern empire, and but for the assue of a single battle, they would probably have ex-tended their sceptre over the energenc and progressive races of Central Europe The battle of Poictiors, and it is now useless to speculate what might have been the consequences, nad Vuhammadanism unfurled its triumphant banner among those Tentonic tribes, who have so often changed their creed, and on whom the course of civilisation has so largely depended" (Hist of European so largely depended"

"The infinence of Chatholicism was seconded by Muhammadanism, which on this (suicide), as on many other points, horrowed its teaching from the Christian Church, and even intensified t, for suicide, which is never expressly condemned in the Bible, is more than once forbidden in the Qui an, and the Christian duty of resignation was exaggerated by the Moslem into a complete fatalism Under the empire of Catholicism and Muhammadanism, suicide, during many centuries, almost absolutely ceased in all the envilised, active and progressive part of mankind When we recollect how warmly it was applanded, or how family it was condemned in the civilisations of Greece and Rome when we remember, too, that there was scarcely a barbarous time from Denmark to Spain who did not habitually practise it, we may realise the complete revolution which was effected in this sphere by the influence of Christianity" (Hist of European Monals, vol. 11 p 56 j

Major Durie Osborn says -

"When Islam penetrates to countries lower in the scale of humanity than were the Arabs of Muhammad's day, it suffices to elevate them to that level But it does so at a tremendous cost. It reproduces in its new converts the characteristics of its first-their impenetrable self-esteem, their unmtelligent scorn, and blind hatred of all other creeds And thus the capacity for all further advance as destroyed, the mind is obdurately shut to the entrance of any purer light. But it is a grievous error to confound that transient gleam of culture which illuminated Baghdad under the first Abbaside khalifs with the legitimate fruits of Islam When the Arabs conquered Syria and Persia, they brough with them no new knowledge to take the place of that which had proceded thom Mere Bedowns of the desert, they found thomselves all at once the masters of vast countries, with everything to loarn They were compelled to put themselves to school under the very people they had vanquished. Thus the Persians and Syrians, conquered though they were and tilbutary, from the ignorance of their masters, retained in their hands the control of the administrative ma chinery The Abbaside khalifs were borne into power by means of a Persian revolution, headed by a Persian slave. Then began the endeavour to root the old Greek philosophy, and the deep and beautiful thoughts of Zerouster, on the hard and barren soil of Muhammadanism It was an impossible attempt to make a frail exotic flourish on uncongenial soil It has imparted, indeed, a deceptive lustre to this period of Muhammadan history, but the orthodox Muhammadans knew that their faith and the wisdom of the Greeks could not amalgamate, and they fought fiercely against the innovators Successive storms of barbarians sweeping down from the north of Asia, tore up the fragile plant by the roots, and scattered its blossoms to the winds. The new comers embraced the creed of the Koran in its primitive simplicity, they hated and repudiated the refinements which the Persians would fain have engrafted on it And they won the day The present condition of Central Asia is the legitimate fruit of Islam, not the glories of Baghdad, which were but the afterglow of the thought and culture which sank with the fall of the Sassanides, and the expulsion of the Byzantine emperors. So also in Moorish Spain The blossom and the fruitage which Muhammadanism seemed to put forth there were, in fact, due to influences alien to Islam—to the intimate contact, namely, with Jewish and Christian thought, for when the Moors were driven back into northern Africa, all that blossom and fruitage withered away, and Northern Africa sank into the intellectual darkness and political anarchy in which it lies at the present time There are to be found in Muhammadan history all the elements of greatness -faith, courage, endurance, self-sacrifice, but, closed within the narrow walls of a rude theology and barbarous polity, from which the capacity to grow and the liberty to modify have been sternly cut en they work no deliverance upon the earth. They are strong only for destruction. When that work is over, they either prey upon each other, or beat themselves to death against the bots of their prison-house. No permanent dwell ing-place can be erected on a foundation of sand, and no-durable or humanising polity upon a foundation of fatalism, despotism, polygamy and slavery When Muhammadan states cease to be racked by revolutions, they succumb to the poison diffused by a corrupt moral atmosphere A Darwesh, ejaculating 'Allab !' and revolving in a series of rapid gyrations until he drops senseless, is an exact image of the course of their history under the Arabs, p 98)

"The Goth might lavage staly but the Goth came forth purified from the flames which he himself had kindled The Saxon swept Britain, but the music of the Celtic heart softened his rough nature, and woodd him into less churlish habits. Visiwooed him into less churlish habits goth and Frank, Heruli and Vandal, blotted out their verocity in the very light of the civilisation they had striven to extinguish Even the Hun, wildest Tartar from the Soythian waste, was touched and softened in his wicker encampment amid Pannonian plans, but the Turk—wherever his saymitar reached—degraded, denied, and defamed, blasting into sternal decay Greek, Roman and Latin civilisation, until, when all had gone, he sat down, satisfied with savagery, to doze for two hundred years into hopeless decrepitude" (Good Words for September 1880) Laterature on the subject of Muhammadanism -Muhamedis Imposturæ. MUHARRAM (A) Let "That which is forbidden." Anything sacred (1) The first month of the Muhammadan year [MONTHS] (2) The first ten days of the month, observed in commemoration of the martyrdom of al-Husain the second son of Fatimah, the Prophets daughter by 'Ali [AL-HUSAIM] These days of lamentation are only observed by the Shi'ah Muslims but the tenth day of Muhariam is observed by the Sumis in commemoration of its having been the day on which Adam and Eve, heaven and hell, the pen, fate, life and death, were created. Journey through Persia -

The tragical termination of al-Hussin's life, commencing with his flight from al-Madinib and terminating with his death on the plain of Karbala, has been drawn up in the form of a drama, consisting of several parts, of which one is performed by actors on each successive day of the mourning. The last successive day of the mourning The last part, which is appointed for the Roz-1-Qatl, comprises the events of the day on which he met his death, and is acted with great pomp before the King in the largest square of the city The subject, which is full of affecting incidents, would of itself excite great interest in the breasts of a Christian audience, but allied as it is with all the religious and national feelings of the Persians, it awakens their strongest passions. Al-Hussin would be a hero in our eyes, in theirs he is a martyr. The visigaitudes of his life, his dangers in the desert, his fortitude, his in vincible courage, and his devotedness at the hour of his death, are all circumstances upon which the Persians dwell with rapture, and which excite in them an enthusiasm not to be diminished by lapse of time The celebration of this mourning keeps up in their minds the remembrance of those who destroyed him, and consequently their hatred for all Musalmans who do not partuke of their feelings They execute Yazid and ourse Umar with such rancour, that it is necessary to have witnessed the scenes that are exhibited in their cities to judge of the degree of fanaticism which possesses them at this time. I have seen some of the most violent of them, as they vocaferated, "O Husain!" walk about the streets almost naked, with only their loms covered, and their bodies streaming with blood by the voluntary cuts which they have given to themselves, either as acts of love, anguish, or mortification Such must have been the enttings of which we read in Holy Writ, which were forbidden to the Israelites by Moses (Lev xix 28, Deut xiv 1), and these extravagances, I conjecture, must resemble the practices of the presss of Basi, who aried aloud and cut themselves after this manner with knives and lancets, till the blood gushed out upon them 1 Kings zvni. 28, see also Jeremiah zvn 5, 6, and 7

The preparations which were made throughout the city consisted in erecting were made large tents that are there called takeyak, in the streets and open places in fitting them up with black lines and furnishing them with objects emblematical of the mourning These tents are erected either at the joint expense of the district, or by men of consequence, as an act of devotion and all ranks of people have a free access to them. The expense of a takegah consists in the hire of a mulia, or priest, of actors and their clothes, and in the purchase of lights Many there are who seize this opportunity of atoning for past size, or of rendering thanks to heaven for some blessing, by adding charity to the good act of erecting a calciyah, and distribute gratuitous food to those who attend it

Our neighbour Mohammad Khān had a takiyah in his house, to which all the people of the district flocked in great numbers During the vime of this assemblage we heard a constant noise of drums cymbals, and We remarked that pesides the trumpera. takiyak in different open places and streets of the town, a wooden pulpit, without any appendage, was erected, upon which a mulia, or priest, was mounted, preaching to the people who were collected around him A European ambassador, who is said to have intrigued with Yazid in favour of al-Husain, was brought forward to be an actor in one of the parts of the tragedy, and the populace were in consequence inclined to look favourably upon us Notwithstanding the excitation of the public mind, we did not cease to take our usual rides, and we generally passed unmo-lested through the middle of congregations, during the time of their devotions. Such little scruples have they at our seeing their religious ceremonies, that on the eighth night of the Muharram the Grand Vizier invited the whole of the embasey to attend his takeyak. On entering the room we found a large assembly of Persians clad in darkcoloured clothes, which, accompanied with their black caps, their black beards, and their dismal faces, really looked as if they were afflicting them souls. They neither wore their dagggers, nor any parts of their iress which they look upon as ornamental. A mulla of high consideration sat next to the Grand Vizier, and kept him in semous conversation, whilst the remaining part of the society communicated with each other in whispers. After we had sat some time, the windows of the room in which we were seated were thrown open, and we then discovered a priest placed on a high chair, under the covering of a tent, surrounded by a crowd of the populace, the whole of the scene being lighted up with candles. He commenced by an exordium, in which he reminded them of the great value of each tear shed for the sake of the Imam al-Husein, which would be an atonement for a past life of wickedness and also informed them with much solomnity, that whatsoever soul it be that shall not be afflicted in the same day, shall be out off from among the people. He then began to read from a book, with a sort of nasal chaunt, that part of the tragic history of al-Husain appointed for the day, which soon produced its effect upon his audience, for he scarcely had turned over three leaves, before the Grand Vizier commenced to shake his head to and fro, to utter in a most piteous voice the usual Persian exclamation of graf, " Wak! Wak! Wak! both of which acts were followed in a more or less violent manner by the rest of the audience The chaunting of the mulla lasted nearly an hour, and some parts of his story were indeed pathetic, and well calculated to rouse the feelings of a superstations and lively people In one part of it, all the company stood up, and I observed that the Grand Vizier turned himself towards the wall, with his hand extended before him, and prayed. After the mulis had finished, a company of actors appeared, some dressed as women, who chaunted forth their parts from slips of paper, in a sort of recitative, that was not unpleasing even to our ears. In the very tragical parts, most of them appeared to cry very unaffectedly, and as I sat near the Grand Vizier, and to his neighbour the priest, I was witness to many real tears that fell from them In some of these mournful assemblies, it is the custom for a mulla to go about to each person at the height of his grief, with a piece of cotton in his hand, with which he carefully collects the falling tears, and which he then squeezes into a bottle, preserving them with the greatest causion. This practically illustrates that passage in the 56th Psalm, verse 8, "Put thou my tears into thy bottle." Some Persians believe that in the agony of death, when all medicines have failed, a drop of tears so collected, put into the mouth of a dying man, has been known to revive him, and it is for such use, that they are collected.

On the Roz-1 Qatl, or day of martyrdom, the tenth day, the Ambassador was invited by the King to be present at the termination of the ceremomes, in which the death of al-Husain was to be represented. We set off after breakfast, and placed ourselves in a small tent, that was pitched for our accommodation over an arched gateway, which was situated close to the room in which His Majesty was to be seated.

We looked upon the great square which is in front of the palace, at the entrance of which we perceived a circle of Cajars, or people of the King's own tribe, who were standing barefooted, and beating their breasts in cadence to the chaunting of one who stood in the centre, and with whom they now and then joined their voices in chorus Smiting the breast is a universal act throughout the mourning, and the breast is made bare for that purpose, by unbuttoning the top of the The King, in order to show his humi lity, ordered the Cajars, among whom were many of his own relations, to walk about without either shoes or stockings, to super intend the order of the different ceremonies about to be performed, and they were to be seen stepping tenderly over the stones, with sticks in their hands, doing the duties of memals, now keeping back a crowd, then dealing out blows with their sticks, and settling the order of the processions

Part of the square was partitioned off by an enclosure, which was to represent the town of Karbala', near which al-Husain was put to death, and close to this were two small tents, which were to represent his encampment in the desert with his family. A wooden platform covered with carpets, upon which the actors were to perform, completed all the scenery used on the occasion

A short time after we had reached our tent, the King appeared, and although we could not see him, yet we were seen apprised of his presence by all the people standing up, and by the bowing of his officers. The procession then commenced as follows.—First came a stout man, naked from the waist upwards, balancing in his girdle a long thick pole, surmounted by an ornament made of tim, curiously wrought with devices from the Qur'an, in height altogether about thirty feet. Then another, naked like the former, balanced an ornamental pole in his girdle still more ponderous, though not so high, upon which a young darvesh restang his feet upon the bearer's girdle had placed himself, chaunting verses with all his might in praise of the King. After him a person of more strength and more nakedness, a water carrier, walked forwards, bearing an immense leather sack filled with water alung over his back. This personage, we were told, was emblematical of the great thirst which al-Husain suffered in the desert.

A litter in the shape of a sarcophagus, which was called Qabr-i-Husam, or the tomb of al-Husain (a Tā'ziyah) succeeded, borne on the shoulders of eight men. On its front was a large oval ornament entirely covered with precious stones, and just above it a great diamond star. On a small projection were two tapers placed on candlesticks enriched with jewels. The top and sides were covered with Cashmere shawls, and on the summit rested a turban, intended to represent the head-dress of the Khalifah. On each side walked two men bearing poles, from which a variety of beautiful shawls were suspended. At the top of which were representations of al-Husain's hand studded with jewellery

After this came four led horses, capatisoned in the richest manner. The fronts of their beads were ornamented with plates, entirely covered with diamonds, that emitted a thousand beautiful rays. Their bodies were dressed with shawis and gold stuffs, and on their saddles were placed some objects emblematical of the death of al-Rusain. When all these had passed, they arranged themselves in a row to the right of the King's apartment.

After a short pansa, a body of fiercelooking men with only a loose white sheet thrown over their naked bodies, marched forwards. They were all begrimed with blood, and each brandishing a sword, they sang a sort of a hymn, the tones of which were very wild. These represented the sixty-two relations, or the Martyrs, as the Persians call them, who accompanied al-Husain, and were slain in defending him Close after them was led a white horse, covered with artificial wounds, with arrows stuck all about him. and caparisoned in black, representing the horse up in which al-Husain was mounted when he was killed. A band of about fifty men, striking two pieces of wood together in their hands, completed the procession. They arranged themselves in rows before the King, and marshalled by a maitre de ballet, who stood in the middle to regulate their movements, they performed a dance clapping their hands in the best pos

The mastre de ballet all this time sang in recitative, to which the dancers joined at different intervals with loud shouts and reiterated alapping of their pieces of wood.

edious acts, but as our distance from the age was too great to hear the many affectg things which they no doubt said to each her we will proceed at once to where the unfortunate al Husain lay extended on the ground, ready to receive the death-stroke from a ruffian dressed in armout, who acted the part of executioner At this moment a buist of lamentation issued from the multitude, and heavy sobs and real tears rame from almost every one of those who were near enough to come under our unspection, The indignation of the populace wanted some object upon which to vent itself, and it fell upon those of the actors who had performed the part of Yazid's soldiers. No sooner was al-Hussin killed, than they were driven off the ground by a volley of stones, followed by shouts of abuse We were informed that it is so difficult to procure performers to fill these characters, that on the present occasion a party of Russian prisoners were pressed into the army of Yazid, and they made as speedy an exit after the catastrophe as it was in their power

The scene terminated by the burning of Karbala' beveral reed huts had been constructed behind the enclosure before men-tioned, which of a sudden were set on fire The tomb of al-Husain was seen covered with black cloth, and upon it sat a figure disguised in a tiger's skin, which was intended to represent the miraculous lion, recorded to have kept watch over his remains after he had been buried. The most extraordinary part of the whole exhibition was the representation of the dead bodies of the martyrs who having been decapitated, were all placed in a low, each body with a head close to it To effect this, several Persians buried themselves alive, leaving the head out just above ground, whilst others put then heads under ground, leaving out the body The heads and bodies were placed in such relative positions to each other, as to make it appear that they had been severed. This is done by way of penance, but in hot weather, the violence of the exertion bas been known to produce The abole ceremony was terminated death by a khuthah or oration in praise of al-linearn (Morie & Second fourney through Perma) "The martyldom of Hasan and Husain is celebrated by the Shinhs all over India. during the first ten days of the month of Mo hurrum Attached to every Shish's house is an Imambarrah, a hall or inclosure built expressly for the celebration of the anniversary of the death of Hussin. The enclosure is generally arcaded along its side, and in most mstances it is covered in with a domed roof Against the side of the Imambarrah, directed towards Mecca, is set the tabut-also called tazia (ta'ziyah), or model of the tombs at Ker In the houses of the wealthier Shinks, these tabuts are fixtures, and are beautifully fashioned of silver and gold, or of every and ebony, embellished all over with inlaid work. The poorer Shiahs provide themselves with a talut made for the occasion of lath and plaster, tricked out in mica and tinsel A week before the new moon of the Mohurrum, they enclose a space, called the tabut khana in which the tubut is prepared, and the very moment the new moon is seen, a spade is struck into the ground before "the enclosure of the tombs," where a pit is after-wards dug, in which a bonfire is lighted, and kept burning through all the ten days of the Mohurrum solemnities Those who cannot afford to erect a tabut khana, or even to put up a little tabut or taziah in their dwellinghouse, always bave a Mohurrum fire lighted, if it consist only of a night light floating at the bottom of an earthen pot or basin sunk in the ground. It is doubtful whether this custom refers to the trench of fire Husain set blazing behind his camp, or is a survival from the older Ashura (ten days) festival, which is said to have been instituted in commemoration of the deliverance of the Hebrew Arabs from Pharaoh and his host at the Red Sea, or from the yet more ancient Bael tire But, in India, these Mohurrum fires, especially among the more ignorant populace, Hindus as well as Mohammedans, are regarded with the most superstitious reverence, and have a greater hold on them even than the tabuts All day long the passers by stop before the fires and make their vows over them, and all might long the crowds dance round them, and lesp through the flames and scatter about the burning brands snatched from them tabut is lighted up like an alter, with innumerable green wax candles, and nothing can be more brilliant than the appearance of an Imambarrah of white stone, or polished white stucco, picked out in green, lighted up with glass chandeliers, sconces, and oil-lamps, arranged along the leading architectural lines of the building, with its tabut on one side, dazzing to bindness Before the tubut are placed the "properties" to be used by the celebrants in the "Passion Play," the bows and arrows, the sword and spear, and the barmers of Husain, &c, and in front of it is set a movable pulpit, also made of the richest materials, and covered with mch hro cades in green and gold Such is the theatre in which twice daily during the flist ten days of the month of Mohurrum, the deaths of the first martyrs of Islam are yearly commemorated in India. Each day has its special selemnity, corresponding with the succession of events during the ten days that Husain was cheamped on the fatal plain of Kerbels, but the prescribed order of the services in the daily development of the great Shiah function of the Mohurrum would appear not to be always strictly observed in Bombay'' (PelMy's Miracle Play of Hasan and Husain, Preface, p xvii)

The drama, or "Miracle Play" which is recited in Persis during the Muharram, has been re idered into English by Colonel Sir Lewis Pi lly, K.C B (Allen & Co., 1879), from which we take the death scene of al-Hussin on the bat tle-field of Karbalä', a scene which, the histo ian Gibbon (Decine and Fall, vol. iz. ch 341) says, "in a distant age and climate, will awaken the sympathy of the coldest reader"

"Husain—I am soro distressed at the unkind treatment received at the hands of the cruel heavens. Pitiful tyranny is exercised towards me by a cruel, unbelieving army' All the sorrows and troubles of this world have overwhelned me'. I am become a butt for the arrow of affliction and trouble. I am a holy bird stript of its quilts and feathers by the hand of the archer of tyranny, and am become. O friends, utterly disabled and vuable to fly to my sacred nest. They are going to kill me mercilessly, for no other crime or guilt except that I happen to be a prophet's grandson.

" Shimer (challenging him) -O Husain, was dost thou not appear in the field? Why dost not thy majesty show thy face in battle! How long art thou going to sit still without displaying the valour in wat? Why dost thou not put on thy tobe of martyrdom and come forth? If thou art indeed so magnanimous as not to fear death, if thou carest not about the whistling sounds of the arrows when let fly from the bow, mount thou, quickly, the swift horse named Zu'l janah, and deliver thy soul from so many troubles Lea, come to the field of battle be it as it may bater soon among thy women, and with tears bid them a last farewell, then come forth to war, and show us thy great fortitude

'Husain (talking to himself)—Although the accursed tellow, Shimar, will put me to death in an hour's time, yet the repreachful language of the enemy seems to be worse than destruction itself. It is better that the food should sever my head cruelly from the body, han make me hear these abunive words. What can I do? I have no one left to help me, no Kasim to hold my stirrup for a minute when about to mount. All are gone! Look around if thou canet find anyone to defend the descendant of Muhammad, the chosen of God—if thou canet see any ready to assist the hely family of God's Prophet! In this land of trials there is no kind protector to have compassion on the household of the Apostle of God, and befriend them

"Zamab.—May I be offered for the sau tones of the voice, dear brother! Time has thrown on my head the black earth of sorrow It has grieved me to the quick Wait, brother, do not go till thy Kasim arrives Have patience for a minute, my 'Ali Akbar is coming

"Husern (looking around)—Is there one who wishes to please God, his Maker? Is there any willing to behave farthfully towards his real friends? Is there a person ready to give up his life for our sake, to save us, to defend us in this dreadful struggle of Karbals?

"Zasnab -O Lord, Zasnab's brother has no one to assist or support him! Occasions of his sorrows are innumerable, without anyone to sympathuse with him in the least? Sad and desolate, he is leaning on his spear! He has bent his neck in a calamitous manner, he has no famous Alı Akbar, no renowned 'Abbas any more'

" Husain -Is there anyone to pity our condition, to help us in this terrible conflict of Karbald? Is there a kind soul to give us a hand of assistance for God's sake? "Zamob - Brave cavalies of Kastala it is not fitting for thee to be so hurned G a little more slowly, troubles will come quickly enough Didst thou ever say thou hadst a Zainab in the tent? Is not this poor creature weeping and mourning for thee !

"The Imam Husain -Dear sister thou rest of my disquieted, broken heart, smite on thy head and mourn, thou thousand noted nightingals. To day I shall be killed by the ignoble Shimar To-day shall the rose be turned out of its delightful spot by the tyranny of the thistle Dear sister, if any dust happen to settle on the rosy cheeks of my lovely daughter bulannah, he pleased to weeh it away most tenderly with the rose-water of thy tears? My daughter has been acoustomed to sit always in the dear lap of her father whenever she wished to rest, for my sake, receive and caross her in thy bosom.

"Zamab - O thou intimate friend of this assembly of poor afflicted strangers, the flaming effect of thy speech has left no rest m my mind Tell me, what have we done that thou shouldest so reward us? Who is the criminal among us for whose sake we must suffer thus? Take us back, brother, to Madinah, to the sacred monument of our noble grandfather; let us go home, and live like queens in our own country

" Husain. - O my afflicted, distressed, toimented sister, would to God there were a way of escape for me! Notwithstanding they have cruelly cut down the cypress-like stature of my dear son 'Alı Akbar, notwithstanding Kasım my lovely nephew tinged himself with his own blood, still they are intent to kill me They do not allow me to go back from Trak, nor do they let me turn elsewhore They will neither permit me to go to India, nor the capital of China. I cannot set out for the territory of Abyssinia, or take refuge ın Zenziber

" Zainab - Oh, how am I vexed in my mind, dear brother, on hearing these sad things! May I die. rather than listen to such affecting words any more! What shell we, an assembly of desolate widows and orplians, do after thou art gone? Oh! how can we five?

" Husain.—O miserable creature, weep not now, nor be so very much upset, thou shalt cry plentifully hereafter, owing to the wicked ness of time. When the wicked Shimar shall sever my head from the body, when thou shalt be made a captive prisoner and forced to ride on an unsaddled oamel; when my body shall be trampled under foot by the onemy's horses, and trudden under their hoofs, when my beloved Sukumah shall be cruelly struck by Shimar, my wicked murderer, when they shall lead thee away cap-tive from Karbala to Sham, and when they shall make thee and others live there in a horrible, ruined place, yes, when thou shalt see all this then thou mayest, and verily wilt, cry But I admomsh thee, sister, since this sad case has no remedy but patience, to resign the whole matter, submissively, to the Lord, the good Maker of all! Mourn not for my misfortune, but bear it patiently, without giving occasion to the enemy to rejoice triumphantly on this account, or speak reproachfully concerning us

" Aulaum -Thou struttest about gaily, O Husain, thou beloved of my heart Look a little behind thee, see how Kulsum is sighing after thee with tearful eyes! I am strewing pearls in thy way, precious jewels from the sea of my eyes! Let me put my head on the hoof of thy winged steed, Zell janah.

Musain — Beloved sister, kindle not a fire ny heart by so doing Take away thy in my heart by so doing head from under the hoof of my steed. O thousand-noted mightingale, sing not such a sad-toned melody I am going away, be thou the kind keeper of my helpless ones

· Kulsum - Behold what the heavens have at length brought on me! what they have done also to my brother! Him they have made to have parched hos through thirst. and me they have caused to meli into water and gush out like tears from the eyes! Harsh severity is mingled with tyrannous

" Huvain -Trials, afflictions, and pains, the thicker they fall on man the better, dear sister, do they prepare him for his journey heavenward. We rejoice in mibulations, seeing they are but temporary, and yet they work out an eternal and blissful end Though it is predestined that I should suffer murtyrdom in this shameful manner, yet the trea eury of everlasting happiness shall be at my disposal as a consequent reward must think of that, and be no longer sorry The dust raised in the field of such battles is as highly esteemed by me, O sister, as the philosopher's stone was, in former times, by the alchemists, and the soil of Karbala is the sure remedy of my inward pains.

"Kulsum.-May I be sacrificed for thee! Since this occurrence is thus mevitable, I pray thee describe to thy poor sister Kulsum her duty after thy death. Tell me, where shall I go, or in what direction set my face? What am I to do? and which of thy orphan children am I to caress most?

" Husuin -Show thy Limost kindness, good mster, to Sukamah, my darling girl, for the pain of being fatherless is most severely felt by children too much fondled by their parents especially girls I have regard to all my children, to be sure, but I love ; Sukainah most.

"An old Female Slave of Husain's mother Dignified master, I am sick and weary in heart at the bare idea of separation from thee Have a kind regard to me an old slave, Master, by thy much stricken with age soul do I swear that I am altogether weary of life. I have grown old in thy service, pardon me, please, all the faults ever committed by me.

"Husain. - Yes, thou hast served us, indeed, for a very long time. Thou hast shown much affection and love toward me and my children, O handmaid of my down mother Fatimah, thou hast verily suffered much in our house how often didst thou grind corn with thine own hand for my mother! Thou hast also dandled Husain most careasingly in thy arms Thou art black-faced, that is true, but thou hast, I Thou art opine, a pure white heart, and art much esteemed by us. To-day I am about to leave thee, owing thee, at the same time, innumerable thanks for the good services thou hast performed, but I beg thy pardon for all inconsiderate actions on my part

'The Maid.—May I be a sacrifice for thee, thou royal ruler of the capital of faith ' turn not my days black, like my face, thou benevolent master Truly I have had many troubles on thy behalf How many nights have I spent in watchfulness at thy cradle! At one moment I would caress thee in my arms, at another I would fondle thee in my bosom I became prematurely old by my dili-gent service, O Husain! Is it proper now that then shouldst put round my poor neck the heavy chain of thy intelerable absence? Is this, dear master the reward of the services I have done thee? " Husain -Though thy body, O maid, is now broken down by age and infirmity, yet thou hast served us all the days of thy life with sincerity and love, thou must know, therefore, that thy diligence and vigilance will never be disregarded by us Excuse me to-day, when I am offering my body and some in the cause of Ged, and cannot help thee at all; but be sure I will fully pay the reward of thy services in the day of universal secount

"The Mand -Dost thou remember, good sir, how many troubles I have suffered with thee for the dear sake of 'Ali Akbar, the light of thine eyes? Though I have not enokled him with my own breasts, to be sure, yet I laboured hard for him till he reached the age of eighteen years and came here to Karoala. But, alas! dear flourishing Ali Akbar has been this day ornally killed—what a pity | and I strove so much for his sake, yet all, as it were, in vain. Yes what a sad loss ! "Husgan. Speak not of my 'Ali Akbar any more, O maiden, nor set fire to the granary of my patience and make it flame (Turning to his sister) Poor distressed Zzinab, have the goodness to be kind always to my mother's old maid, for she has experienced many troubles in our family, she has laboured hard in training 'Ali Akbar my

" Umm Larlah (the mother of 'Ali Akbar) -The elegant stature of my Akbar fell on the ground, like as a beautiful cypress tree it was forcebly felled! Alas for the memory of thy upright stature! Alas, O my youthful son of handsome form and appearance! Alas my troubles at night-time for thee! How often did I watch thy bed, singing lullables for thee until the morning! How sweet is the memory of those times! yes, how pleasant the very thought of those days! Alas where art thou now, dear child? O thou who art ever remembered by me, come and see thy mother's wretched condition, come !

" Husain -O Lord, why is this mountal voice so affecting? Methinks the owner of it, the bemoaming person, has a dame in her heart. It resembles the doleful tone of a lapwing whose wings are burned! like as when a muaculous lapwing, the companion of Solomon the wise, the king of God's holy people, received intelligence suddenly about the death of its royal guardian!

· Umm Latlah - Again I am put in mind of my dear son! () my heart, melted uto blood, pour thyself forth! Dear son, whilst thou wast alive, I had some honour and respect, everyhody nad some regard for me, but since thou art gone, I am altogether abandoned Woe be to me 'woe be to me! I am despused and rejected. Woe unto me 'woe

"Husam -Do not set fire to the harvest of my soul any further Husain is, before God greatly ashamed of his shortcomings towards thee Come out from the tent, for it is the last meeting previous to separating from one another for ever, thy distress is an additional weight to the heavy burden of my grief

"The Mother of 'Ale Akbar —I humbly state it, O glory of all ages, that I did not expect from thy saintship that thou wouldest disregard thy handmaid in such a way. Thou dost show thy kind regard and favour to all except me Doet thou not remember my sincere services done to thee? Am I not by birth a descendant of the glorious kings of Pereia, brought as a captive to Arabia when the former empire fall and gave place to the new-born monarchy of the latter kingdom? The Judge, the living Creator, was pleased to grant me an offspring, whom we called 'Alt Akbar, this day lost to us for ever May I be offered for thee' While Ali Akbar my on was abve. I had indeed a sort of esteem and credit with the , but now that my cypress, my newly sprung-up cedar, is un-justly felled. I have fallen from credit too, and must therefore shed tears

"Husain.- Be it known unto thee, O thou violet of the flower-garden of modesty, that thou art altogether mustaken. I swear by the holy enlightened dust of my mother Zahrah's grave that thou art more honourable and dearer now than ever I well remember the affectionate recommendations of 'Ali Akbar, our son, concerning thee How much he was mindful of thee at the moment of his parting! How tenderly he cared for thee, and spoke concerning thee to every one of his family!

"Ah Akbar's Mother —O gracious Lord, I adjure thee, by the ment of my son, 'Ah
Akbar never to lessen the shadow of Husain from over my head May no one ever be in my miserable condition—never be a desolate, May no one ever be in homeless woman, like me!

"Husain.-O thou unfortunate Zainab, my sister, the hour of separation is come! The day of joy is gone for even ' the night of affliction has diawn near Dicoping, withering sister, yet most blest in thy temper, I have a request from thee which I fear to make known

"Zasnah -May I be a sacretice for thy heart, thou moon-faced, glorious van! there is nobody here, if thou hast a private matter to disclose to thy sister

"Husain - Dear unfortunate sister, who art already severely vexed in heart, if I tell thee what my request is, what will be thy condition then? Though 1 cannot restrain myself from speaking, still I am in doubt as to which is better, to speak, or to forbear

"Zamab -My breast is pierced heart boils withm me like a cauldion, cwing to this thy conversation. Thou soul of thy sister, hold not back from Zainab what thou

bast in thy mind

"Husein .- My poor sister, I am covered with shame before thee, I cannot lift up my head. Though the request is a trifle yet I know it is grievous to thee to grant. It is this, bring me an old, dirty, ragged garment to put on But do not ask me i pray thee, the reason why, until I myself think it proper to tell thec

" Zamab -1 am now going to the tent to setch thee what thou seekest, but I am utterly astomshed, brother, as to why thou dost want this loathsome thing (Returning with a taitered shirt) Take it, here is the ragged robe for which thou didst ask I wonder what thou wilt do with it

"Husain -Do not remain here, dear sister Go for a while to thine own tent, for if thou see that which I am about to do, thou wilt be graveualy disturbed Turn to thy tent, poor miserable sister, listen to what I say, and leave me, I pray thee, alone

"Zamab (going away) —I am gone, but I am sorry I cannot tell what this enigma It is pussing indeed! Remain thou THES. U.S. with thy mysterious coat, O Husain! May all of us be offered as a ransom for thee, dear brother! Thou art without any to assist or befriend thee! Thou art surrounded by the widked energy! Yes, the kind helpers have all been killed by the unucheving nation!

" Husain (putting on the garment) -The term of life has ne perpetual duration in itself Who ever saw m a flower-garden a lose without its thorn! I will put on this old robe close to my skin and place over it my new apparel, though norther the old nor the new of this world can be depended on. I hops Zamab has not been observing what I have been domg, for poor creature, she c scarcely bear the sight of any such li thing "Zamab -Alas' I do not know what the matter with Hussin, my brother has an old garment to do with being a kin Dost thou desire, O Husain, that the ener should come to know this thing and repros thy sister about it? Put off, I pray the this old ragged garment, otherwise I she pull off my head dress, and uncover my hee for sbame

"Husgen -Rend not thy dress, mode sister, nor pull off thy head covering is a mystory involved in my action that what Husain has done has a good men ing in it. His putting on an old garment

not without its signification

"Zamab - What mystery can be in th work, thou perfect high priest of faith? will never admit any until thou shalt hav fully explained the thing according to m capacity

"The Imain -To-day, dear sister, Shinis will behave cruelly towards me sever my dear head from the hody dagger not cutting my throat, he will b obliged to sever my head from behind Afte he has killed me, when he begins to strip m of my clothes, he may perchance be ashame to take off this ragged tobe and thereby leav my body naked on the ground
"Zainab —U Lord, have mercy on m distracted beart ! Thou alone art aware o the state of my mind. Gracious Creator preserve the soul of Husain! Let not heave pull down my nouse over me'

" Sukamah -Dear father, by our Lord it i a painful thing to be fatherless, a misery, i great calamity to be helpless, bleeding in the heart, and an outcast Dismount from the saddle, and make me sit by thy side. To pas over me or neglect me at such a time 's ver Let me put my head on the distressing dean lap, O father It is sad thou shoulds not be aware of thy dear child's condition.

"Husain -Bend not thy neck on one side thou my beloved child, nor weep so sadly like an orphan Neither moan so melodiously like a disconvolate nightingale Gome, laj thy dear head on my knees once more, and shed not so comously a flood of tears from thine eyes, thou spirit of my life

" Sukamah.—Desi father, thou whose lot is but grief, have mercy on me, mercy! O then my physician in every pain and trouble, hav pity on me! have pity on me! Alas, my heart, for the mention of the word separa tion! Alas, my grievance, for what is unbearable!

" Husain - Groan not, wail not, my dear Sukamah, my pour oppressed, distressed girl Go to thy tent and sleep soundly in thy bed until thy father gets thee some water to drınk

"Zamab.—Alas! alas! woe to me! my Husam is gone from me! Alas! alas! the arrow of my heart is shot away from the hand! Woe unto me, a thousand woes! I am to remain without Hussin! The wor shipper of truth is gone to meet his destined fate with a blood-stained shroud!

"Husana.—My disponsolate Zamab, be not so impatient My homeless sister, show not thyself so fretful Have patience, sister, the neward of the patient believers as the best of all. Render God thanks, the crown of intercostion as titted for our head only

" Zamab -0 my afflicted mother, thou best of all women, pass a minute by those in Karbals! see thy daughters prisoners of sorrow! behold them amidst strangers and foreigners Come out awhile from thy pavilion in Para-dise, O Fátimak, and weep affectionately over the state of us, thy children!

"Husain.—I have become friendless and without any helper, in a most strange manner I have lost my troop and army in a wonderful Where is Akbar my son? let him come to me and hold the bridle of my horse, that I may mount Where is Kasım my nephew? will he not help me and get ready my stirrup to make me cheerful? Why should I not shed much blood from mine eyes, seeing I cannot behold 'Abbas my standard-bearer?' A brother is for the day of misfortune and calamity! A brother is better than a hundred diadems and thrones! A brother is the essence of life in the world! He who has a brother, though he be old, vet is young Who is there to bring my horse for me? there is none There is none even to weep for me in this state of misery!

" Kulsum.-Because there is no 'Alı Akbar, dear brother, to help thee, Zamab, thy sister, will hold the horse for thee, and seeing 'Abbas, thy brother, is no longer to be found, I myself will bear the standard before thy winged steed instead of him

"Zamab -Let Zamab mourn latterly for her brother's desolation Who e er saw a woman, a gentlewoman, doing the duty of a groom or servant? Who can know, O Lord, besides Thee, the sad state of Husain in Karbala, where his people so descried him that a woman like myself is obliged to act as a servant for him?

"Kulsum.—I am a standard-bearer for Husain, the martyr of Karbala, O Lord God I am the sister of Abbas, vea, the misorable sister of both O friends, it being the tenth day of Muharram, I am therefore assisting Husain. I am bearing the ensign for him matesid of 'Abbas my brother, his standard-

"Zamab -- Uncover your breasts a minute, O ye tear-shedding people, for it is time to beat the drum, seeing the king is going to ride. O Solomon the Prophet, where is thy glory? what has become of thy compons retinue? Where are thy brothers, nephews, and companions?

"Husgen.—There are none left to help ma. My sister Zamab holds the bridle of the horse, and walks before me. Who ever saw a lady acting thus?

"Zamab -Thou art going all alone! May the souls of all be a ransom for thee! and may thy departure make souls quit their bodies! A resurrection will be produced in thy tent by the cry of orphans and widows

" Husain -Sister, though it grieves me to go, yet I do it, peradventure I may see the face of Ashgar and the countenance of Akbai, these cypresses, these roses of Paradise.

"Zamab — Would to God Zamab had died this very minute before thy face, in thy sight, that she might not behold such elegant bodies, such beautiful forms, rolling in their own blood '

"Husuin -O poor sister, if thou die here in this land in that sudden way that thou desirest, then who will ride in thy stead, in the city of Kufah, on the camel's back?

"Zainab -- Slight not my pain, dear brother, for Zamab is somewhat clarmed as to the import of thy speech. What shall I do with thy family-with the poor widows and young children?

"Husain -O afflicted one, it is decreed I should be killed by means of daggers and swords, henceforth, dear sister, thou shalt not see me Behold, this is separation between me and thee '

"The nepheu of Husain -Dear uncle, thou hast resolved to journey Thou art going once again to make me an erphan To whom else wilt thou entrust us? Who is expected to take care of us? Thou wast, dear uncle, instead of my father Hasan, a defence to this helpless exiled creature

Husain -Sorrow not, thou faithful child, thou shalt be killed too in this plain of trials Return thou now to thy tent in peace, without grieving my soul any further, poor orphan! "The Durwish from Kábul - O Lord God, wherefore is the outward appearance of a man of God usually without decoration or ornament? And why is the lap of the man of this world generally full of gold and lewels? On what account is the pillow of this great person the black dust of the road? and for what reason are the bed and the cushion of the rebellious made of velvet and stuffed with down? Either Islam, the religion of peace and charity, has no true foundation in the world, or this young man, who as so wounded and suffers from thirst, is still an infidel.

"Husain.-Why are thine eyes pouring down tears, young darwish? Hast thou also lost an Akbar in the prime of his youth? Thou art immersed, as a water-fowl, in thy tears Has thine 'Abbas been clain, thirsting, on the bank of the River Euphrates, that thou cryest so pitcously? But if thou art sad only on account of my misfortune, then it matters not Let me know whence comest thou, and whither is thy face set?

"The Darwish -It happened, young man that last night I arrived in this valley, and made my lodging there When one half of the night had passed, of a sudden a great difficulty befell me, for I heard a child hemeaning and complaining of thirst, having given up altogether the idea of hving any longer in this world Sometimes it would beat its head and cry out for water, at other times it appeared to fall on the ground fainting and motionless I have, therefore brought some water in this cup for that poor child. that it may drink and be refreshed a little So I humbly beg thee dear sir, to direct me to the place where the young child may be found, and tell me what is its name

"Husain:—O God, let no man be ever in my patiful condition, nor any family in this sad and deplorable state to which I am reduced. O young man, the child mentioned by thee is the peace of my troubled mind, it

18 my poor, miserable little girl
"The Darwish —May I be offered for thee, dear sir, and for thy tearful eyes! Why should thy daughter be so sadly mourning and complaining? My heart is overwhelmed with grief for the abundance of tears running down thy cheeks Why should the daughter of one like thee, a generous soul, suffer from thirst?

Busain -Know, O young man, that we are never in need of the water of this life Thou art quite mistakes if thou hast supposed us to be of this world. If I will, I can make the moon, or any other celestial orb, fall down on the earth, how much more can I get water for my children Look at the hollow made in the ground with my spear, water would gush out of it if I were to like I voluntarily die of thirst to obtain a crown of glory from God. I die parched, and offer myself a sacrifice for the suns of my people, that they should be saved from the wrath to come

"The Darwish -What is thy name, sir? I perceive that thou art one of the chief saints of the most beneficent God It is evident to me that thou art the brightness of the Lord's image, but I cannot tell to which sacred garden thy holy rose belongs

" Husain -O darwish, thou wilt such he informed of the whole matter for thou shalt be a martyr thyself, for thy plans and the result thereof have been revealed to me Teli me, O darwish, what is the end thou hast in view in this thy hazardous enterprise? When thou shalt have told me that I will disclose to thee who I am.

" The Darwish -I intend, noble sir, after I have known the mystery of thy affairs, to set out, if God wills, from Karbala to Najaf namely, to the place where 'Alı, the highly exaited king of religion, the sovereign lord of the empire of existence, the supreme master of all the darwishes, is buried Yes, I am going to visit the tomb of 'Ali, the successor of the chosen of God, the son-in-law of the Prophet, the lion of the true Lord, the prince of behevers, Haidar, the champion of faith "Husain.—Be it known unto the, O darwish, that I, who am so sad and sorrowful, am the rose of the gurden of that prince I am of the family of the believers thou hast mentioned I am Hussin the intercessor on the Day of Resurrection, the rose of the garden of glory

"The Linuish - May I be offered a sacmfice for thy blessed arrival! Pardon me my fault, and give me permission to fight the battle of faith, for I am weary of life 1, 18 bester for me to be killed and delivered at once from so many vexations of spirit. Martyrdom is, in fact, one of the glories of my faith

" Husain -Go forth, O atom, which aspirest to the glory of the san, go torth, thou hast become at last worthy to know the hidden mysteries of faith. He who is slain for the sake of Husam shall have an abundant reward from God, yea, he shall be raised to life with 'Alí Akbar the awest son of "The Darwish (addressing Husain's antago nists) -You cruel people have no religion at You are fire-worshippers, ignorant of God and His law How long will you act unjustly towards the offspring of the priest-hood? Is the account of the Day of Resurrection all false?

'Ibn Sa'd (the general of Yazid's army). O'ye brave soldiers of Yazid, deprive this fellow of his fund of life Make his friends

ready to mourn for him

' Husain -Is there anyone to help me?

Is there any assistant to lond me his aid?

In fair (the king of janns, with his troops, coming to Husains assistance)—O king of men and mnns. O Husain, peace he on thee! O judge of corporeal and spiritual beings, peace he on thee!

"Hasaen -On thee be poace, thou hand-some youth' Who art thou, that salutest us at such a time? Though thine affairs are not hidden from me at all, still it is advisable to ask thy name

"Ja far -O lord of men and jinns, I am the least of thy servants, and my name is Jafar, the chief tuler of all the tribes of pinns To-day, while I was sisting on the glorious throne of my majesty, easy in mind, without any and idea or thought whatever I suddenly heard thy voice, when thou didst sadiv implore assistance and on hearing thee I lost my patience and senses behold, I have come out with troops of juns, of various abilities and qualifications, to lend thee help if nocessary

a Husain.—In the old abbey of this perishabie kingdom, none can ever, O Jafar, attain to immortality What can I do with the empire of the world, or its tempting gleries, after my dear ones have all died and gone? is it proper that I, an old man, should live, and Akbar, a blooming youth, die in the prime of age? Return thou, Jafar, to thy home, and weep for me as much as thou canst.

"Ja'fur (returning) - Alas for Husain's exile and helplessness! Alas for his continual grouns and sighs!

"Husain (coming back from the field, dismounts his horse, and making a heap of dust, lays has head on et) -O carth of Karbala, do thou assist me, I pray! since I have no mother, be thou to me instead of one.

" Ilin Sa'd orders the army to stone Husan O ye men of valour, Husam the son of 'Alf has tumbled down from the winged horse; if I be not mistaken, heaven has fallen to earth! It is better for you to stone him most cruelly Dispatch him soon, with stones to his com

"Husan.—Ah, were to me! my forehead is broken, blood runs down my luminous face.
"Ion Sa'd.—Who is that brave soldier, who, in order to show his gratutude to Yazid his sovereign lord, will step forward and, with a blow of his soymetar, slay Husain the son of 'Ali?

"Shmar—I am he whose dagger is famous for bloodshed. My mother has borne me for this work alone. I care not about the conflict of the Day of Judgment, I am a worshipper of Yazid, and have no fear of God. I can make the great throne of the Lord to shake and tremble. I alone can sever from the body the head of Husain the son of 'Ali. I am he who has no share in Islam. I will strike the chest of Husain, the ark of God's knowledge, with my boots, without any fear of punishment.

"Husain.—Oh, how wounds caused by arrows and daggers do smart! O God have mercy in the Day of ludgment on my people for my sake The time of death has arrived, but I have not my Akbar with me. Woul to God my grandfather the Prophet wile now nere to see me!

"The Prophet (appearing)—Dear Hussin, thy grandfather the Prophet of God has come to see thee I am here to behold the mortal wounds of thy deheate body Dear child, thou hast at length suffered martyrdom by the cruel hand if my own people! This was the reward I expected from them, thanks be to God! Open thine eyes dear son, and behold thy grandfather with disbevelled hair If thou hast any desire in thy heart, speak it out to me

'Husain —Dear grandfather, I abhor life, I would rather go and visit my dear ones in the next world i carnestly desire to see my companions and friends—above all my dearly

heloved son Alı Akbar

The Prophet—Be not gileved that 'Ali Akbar thy son was killed, since it tends to the good of my sinful people on the day of universal gathering

· Husain.—Seeing Alf Akbar's martyrdom contributes to the happiness of the people, seeing my own sufferings give validity to the office of mediation and seeing the rest consists in my being troubled in this way I would offer my soul, not once or twice, but a thousand times for the salvation of the people!

"The Prophet —Sorrow not, dear grandchild thou shalt be a mediator, too in that day At present thou art thirsty, but tomorrow thou shalt be the distributor of the water of Al Kausar

"Husain —O Lord God, besides Husain, who has happened to be thus situated? Every one when he dies has at least a mother at his head. But my mother is not here to rend her garments for me, she is not alive, that she might cluse my eyes when I die

"Fatimah, his mother (appearing)—I am come to see thee my child, my child! May I die another time, my child my child! How shall I see thee sign, my son, my son! Rolling in thine own blood, my child, my child!

Husain —Come, dear mother. I am anxiously waiting for thee Come, come! I have partly to complain of thee How is it that then hast altogether forsaken thy son? How is it thou camest so late to visit me?

"Fátimah — May I be offered for thy wounded, defaced body! Tell me, what dost thou wish thy mother to do now for thee?

"Husain —I am now, dear mother, at the point of death The ark of life is going to be cast on whore, mother It is time that my soul should leave the body Come, mother, close my eves with thy kind hand.

"Farmah — O Lord, how difficult for a mother to see her dear child dying! I am Zahrah who am making this sad noise, because I have to close the eyes of my son Hussin, who is on the point of death Oh, teil me if thou hast any desire long cherished in thy heart, for I am distressed in mind owing to the sad sighs!

"Husain—Go mother, my soul is come to my throat, go, I had no other desire except one, with which I must rise in the Day of Resurrection namely, to see Ali

Akbar's wedding

"Shimar — Make thy confession, for I want to sever the head, and cause a perpetual separation between it and the body

"Zaznub —O Shimar do not go beyond thy limit, let me bind something on my brother's

"Husam—Go to thy tent, sister. I am already undone Go away, Zahrah my mother has already closed my eyes. Show to Sukainah my daughtei always the tenderness of a mother. Be very kind to my child atter me

"Shimar (addressing Husain) — Stretch forth thy feet toward the holy Kiblah, the sacred temple of Makkah. See how my dagger waves over thee! It is time to cut

thy throat

"Husain—O Loid, for the merit of me, the dear child of thy Prophet O Lord, for the sad groaning of my miserable sister O Lord for the sake of young 'Abbas rolling in his blood, even that young brother of mine that was equal to my soul, I pray thee, in the Day of Judgment forgive, O merciful Lord, the sins of my grandfather's people, and grant me, bountfully the key of the treasure of intercession (Dies)"—(Pelly's Miracle Play vol n p 81 seqq)

Sir Alexander Buines, in his Irurels in Bokhara (vol 1 p of 1), relates that he saw persons publicly scounged because they had slept during prayer time and smoked on Friday [DIRRAH]

Burckhardt in his account of the Wahha his (vol 1 p 146) says the neglect of religious duty is always severely punished

when Sa'ud took al-Madinah, he ordered some of his people after prayers in the mosque to call over the names of all the grown up inhabitants of the tiwn who were to answer individually. He then commanded them to attend prayers regularly and if any, one absented himself two of three times, ba'ud sent some of his Arabs to heat the man in his own house. At Makkah when the hour of prayer arrived he ordered the people to patrol the streets armed with large streks, and to drive all the inhabitants by force anto the mosque a harsh proceeding, but justified by the notorious irreligion of the Makkans.

Dr Bellew, in his Kashmir and Austique (p 281), gives an animated account of the way in which the Muhtasib performed his duties in the streets of Kashgai

Ingh position of scholarship and learning

The highest degree amongst Muhammadan divines which is conferred either by the people of the ruler of a Muslim country upon eminent persons. The four doctors of the Sunnis and their disciples were of this degree, but there are none of these enlightened teachers amongst the Sunnis of the present dat. They still exist in Persis, and are appointed by the people the appointment being confirmed by the king. Malcolm, in his account of Persia says 'Ti ere are soldom more than three or four priests of the dignity of Mujtahid in Persia Their conduct is expected to be exemplary. and to show no wordly bias, neither must they connect themselves with the king or the officers of Government They seldom depart from that character to which they ewe their rank. The reason is obvious, the moment they deviate, the charm is broken which con stitutes their power, men no longer solicit their advice or implore their protection, nor can they hope to see the monarch of the country courting popularity by walking to their humble dwellings, and placing them on the seat of honour when they condescend to visit his court. When a Mujtahid dies, his successor is always a person of the most eminent rank in the ecclesiastical order, and, though he may be pointed out to the populace by others of the same class seeking him as an associate it is rare to hear of any intrigues being employed to obtain this en-

"The Mujtahids of Persia exercise a great, though undefined, power over the courts of law, the judges of which constantly submit cases to their superior knowledge, and their sentence is deemed irrecocable unless by a Mujtahid whose learning and sunctity are of acknowledged higner repute than that of the person by whom judgment has been pro-nounced But the benefits which the inhabitants of Persia derive from the influence of these high pitesis is not limited to their occasional aid of the curts of justice. The law is respected on account of the character of its ministers, kings iear to attack the decrees of tr bunals over which they may be said to preside, and frequently endeavour to obtain popularity by referring cases to then decision. The sovereign, when no others dare approach him, cannot refuse to listen to a revered Mujinhid when he becomes an The habitations of intercessor for the guilty this high order of priesthood are deemed sanctuaries for the oppressed, and the hand of despoter power is sometimes taken of a city, because the monaich will not offerd a Mujtahid who has chosen it for his residence but who refuses to dwell aimid violence and injustice

There is a common opinion that the title of Mujtahid can only be granted to those whe are masters of seventy sciences. For a rull account of the conditions of obtaining this rank, as expressed by a modern Mushim writer will be found in the article on fight. [BMA]

MURDER Arabic gatl (قعل). Homicide of which Muhammadan law cognicance is of five kinds (1) Quite 'L' Amel

(2) Qatl shibhu'l-'Amd , (8) Qatlu'l-Khatā' , (4) Qatl qa'ım maqama'l-Khatā' , (5) Qutl bi-Sabab

(1) Qatlu 'l-'Amd (قتل العمد), or "wilful murder," is where the perpetrator wilfully kills a person with a weapon, or something that serves for a weapon, such as a club, a sharp stone, or fire If a person commit wilful murder, two points are established first, that the murderer is a sinner deserving of hell, for it is written in the Qur'an (Surah iv 95), "Whoseever slayeth a believer purposely, his reward is hell", and secondly, that he is reward is hell", and secondly, that he is hable to retahation, because it is written in the Qur'an (Sürah n 178), "It is incumbent on you to execute retaliation (Q1505) for murder But although rotaliation is the punishment for wilful murder, still the heir or next of kin can either forgive or comas the verse already pound the offence, as the verse already quoted continues—" Yet he who is pardoned at all by his brother must be prosecuted in reason, and made to pay with kindn " in this respect Muhammad departed from the Old Testament law, which made the retains tion compulsory on the next of kin.

One offect of wilful murder is that the murderer is excluded from being beir to the murdered person.

According to Abu Hamfah there is no expection for wilful muider but ash Shafil maintains that expiation is incumpent as an act of piety

(2) Unil shibhu المحمد المحمد (2) (أقتل عبد العد), or "manslaughter" or, as Hamilton more correctly renders it, A semblance of wilful murder, is when the perpetrater strike a man with something which is neither a werpon nor serves as such "

The argument adduced by Abu Hanifah is a saying of the Prophet 'Killing with a rod or stick is not murder, but only manulaughter, and the fine for it is a hundred camels pay able within three years "

Manslaughter is held to be sinful and to require expiation, and it excludes the man slayer from inheriting the property of the alaın

- (3) Qatlu 'l-huta (مثل الحطا), or "homi cide by missdventure," is of two kinds elici in intention, and orior in the act Error in the act is where a person intends a pai-icular act, and another act is thereby occasioned, as where, for instance a person shoots an arrow at a mark and it hits a man Error in intention, on the other hand, is where the mistake occurs not in the act, but with respect to the subject, as where a person shoots an arrow at a man supposing him to be game, or at a Muslim supposing him to be a hostile infidel. The slayer by misadventure is required to free a Muslim slave, or fast two months successively, and to pay a fine within three years He is also excluded from inheriting the property of the
- (4) Qatl qā'ım mayāma 'l-Kha!ā (متل عاقم) ), or "homicide of a similar nature to homicide by misadventure," is where for example, a person walking in his sleep falls upon another, so as to kill him by the fall It is subject to the same rules with homicide by misadventure

(5) Qall bi-Sabab (مقلل بسبة), or, "homicide by intermediate cause," is where, for instance, a man digs a well, or sets up a stone, and another falls into the well, or over the stone, and dies. In this case a fine must be paid, but it does not exclude from inheritance, nor does it require expistion.

No special mention is made in either the Qur'an or in Muhammadan law books, of taking the life by poison (The same remark applies to the Mosaic law See Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, Article "Murder")

With regard to retaliation, a freeman is slain for a freeman, and a slave for a slave a freeman is also plain for the willia murder of a slave the property of another

According to Abū Hanīfah, a Muslim is put to death for killing an unbeliever, but ash Shafi i maintains otherwise, because the Prophet said, "A Muslim shall not suffer death for an unbeliever"

A man is slain for a woman, a father is not slain for his child, but a child is slain for the murder of his father, a master is not slain for the murder of his own slave, or for the slave of his child

If a person immerse snother into water whence it is impossible for him to escape by swimming according to Abu Hanifah retahation is not incurred but ash Shaff'f main tains that the murderer should be drowned

Al Baizawi the commentator in writing on Surah ii 174, "This is an alleviation from your Lord and a mercy," says that in the Jewish law retaliation for murder was com pulsory, but in the law of Christ the Chris tians were enjoined to forgive the murderer whilst in the Qur'an the choice is given of either retaliation or forgiveness

(مريد) MURID Lit 'One who is destrous or willing A disciple of some murshid, or leader, or a mystic order. Any student of divinity [SUFI]

MURJIYAH, MURJI'AH (صرحية) The Procrastmators" A sect of Mushims who teach that the judgment of every true believer, who hath been guilty of a grievous sin will be deferred till the Resurrection, for which reason they pass no sentence on him in this world, either of absolution or con demnation They also nold that disobedience with faith hurteth not, and that on the other hand obedience with infidelity profiteth not As to the reason of their name the learned differ, because of the different significations of its root, each of which they accommodate to some opinion of the sect Some think them so called because they postpone works to intention, that is, esteem works to be inferior in degree to intention, and profession of the faith, others, because they allow hope, by asserting that disobedience with faith hurteth not, &c , others take the reason of the name to be, their deferring the sentence of the her nous sinner till the Resurrection, and others, their degrading of 'Alı, or removing him from the first degree to the fourths for the Murjivalue in some points relating to the office of Imam, agree with the Khārijiyahs. This sect is divided into four classes three of which according as they happen to agree in parti-cular dogmas with the Kharijiyaha, the Qudi riyaha, or the Jabariyaha, are distinguished as Murjiyaha of those sects, and the fourth is that of the pure Murjiyahs, which last class is again subdivided into five others. The opinions of Mukatil and Bashar both of a sect of the Murjiyahs salled Soubamans, should not be omitted. The former asserted that disobedience hurts not him who piofesses the unity of Gid and is endued with farth, and that no true believer whall be cast into hell, he also thought that God will surely forgive all crimes except unidelity, and that a disobedient believer will be punished at the Day of Resurrection, on the bridge Surat laid over the midst of hell, where the fiames of hell are shall catch hold on him, and torment him in proportion to his disobedience, and that he shall then be ad mitted into Paradise

The latter held, that if God do cast the believers guilty of grievous sine into hell yet they will be delivered thong after they shall have been sufficiently punished, but that it is neither possible nor consistent with justice that they should remem therein for ever

"Irbaz ibn Sariyan relates that Muhammad used to repeat the Musabbiliat before geing to sleep, and that he said. In them there is a verse which is better than a thousand." Most writers say this verse is concealed like the Ladot ' Qado (the night of power), or the Saata LJamak (the hour on Fider) but 'Abdu l-Haqq, says it is most probably either the last verse of the Sarata 'l-Hashi (hx), 'He is God, the Pardoner, the Makel.

Musallamah, having formed a considerable party, began to think himself upon equal terms with Muhammad, and sent him a letter, offering to go balves with him, in those words 'From Musallamah the Apostle of God to Muhammad the Apostle of God to Muhammad the half mine and half thine' But Muhammad, thinking himself too well established to need a partner, wrote him this answer 'From Muhammad, the Apostle of God, to Musallamah, the Liar The earth is God, to Musallamah, the Liar The earth is God, the giveth the same for inheritance unto such of His servants as He pleaseth, and the happy issue shall attend those who fear Him"

During the low months which Muhammach hved after this revolt. Musailamah lather gamed than lost ground, and grew very for midable, but Abu Baki, in the eleventh year of the Hijiah, sent a great army against him under the command of that consuminate general Khalid ibn al-Walid, who engaged Musailamah in a bloody battle, wherein the false prophet happening to be slain by Wahshi, the negro slave who had killed Hamzah at Uhud, and by the same lance, the Muslims gained an entire victory, ten thousand of the apostates being left dead on the spot, and the rest returning to Muhammadamam

MUT'AH (Law) Lit "Usufruct, enjoyment" A marriage ontracted or a limited period for a certain sum of money Such marriage are still legal amongst the Shrahs, and exist in Persia (Valcolm's Persia vol it p 591) to the present day but they are said to be unlawful by the Sunnis. They were permitted by the Arabian Propinet at Autas, and are undoubtedly the greatest stain upon his moral legislation but the Sunnis say that he afterwards prohibited a muthah marriage at Khaihar (Inde Mishhat, book xiu ch it pt 2)

The Shi ahs establish the legality of mut ah not only upon the traditions, but also upor the following verse in the Qui'an the meaning of which, according to the commentary Tafnr-1-Maghari, is disputed Surah it 28 "Forbidden to you also are married women, except those who are in your hands is slaves This is the law of God for you And it 19 allowed you, beside this to seek out wives by means of you weith, with modes con duct and without formeation And give those with whom we have conshited their dowry This is the law But it shall be no crime in you to make agreements over and above the law Wise!" Verily God is Knowing,

According to the Imamivah Code of June prudence, the following are the conditions of Mut oh, or ' temporary marriages must be declaration and acceptance as in the case of mkah, and the subject of the centract must be either a Musliman a Christian, or a Jewess or (according to some) a Majusi she should be chaste, and due inquiries should be made into her conduct as it is abominable to enter into contract with a woman addicted to formication, not is it lawful to make such a contract with a virgin who has no juther some dower must be specified, and if there is a failure in this respect the contract is void There must also be a fixed period, but its extent is left entrely to the parties it may be a year, a menth or a day only a de limit must be distinctly specified, so as a guard the period from any extension or diminution The practice of 'asl (extrahere ante emissi mem semme) is lawful, but if not withstanding this the woman becomes pregnant, the calld is the temporary husband's, but if he should deny the child, the demai is sustained by the law Mut'ah marriages do not admit of divoice or repudiation, but the parties become absolutely separated on the expiration of the period (Baillie's Digest)

There is a curious account of a discussion at the Court of the Emperor Akbar

with reference to the subject of Mut'ah marriages in the Am-t-Akbart (Translation by H Blochman MA, p 178) At one of the H Blochman MA, p 178) meetings for discussion, the Emperor asked how many free born women a man may legally marry The lawyers answered that four was the limit fixed by the Prophet Majesty thereuper remarked that, from the time he had come of age he had not restricted himselt to that number and in justice to his wives, of whom he had a large number both free-born and slaves, he now wanted to know what remedy the law provided for his case Most of the Maulawis present expressed their opinions, when the Emperor remarked that Shaikh Abdu n Nabi had once told him that one of the Mujtahids had had as many as nine wives Some of those present said that some learned men had allowed even eighteen from a too literal translation of the second voise of Suratu 'n-Nisa' in the Quran [MAR-RIAGE ] After much discussion the loarned nien present laving collected overv tradition on the subject accreed, first, that he mut ah a min may mailt int number of wives, ind, secondly, that nurah mairiages were sunctroned by the imam Malik, but a copy of the Mucatta, of the Imam Malik was brought, and a passage riteu from that collection of traditions against the legality of mutah marriages

The disputation was again icvived at a subsequent meeting when at the request of the Emperor Bada'oni give the following summary of the discussion 'Imam Wahk and the Shi ahs are unanimous in looking upon mut'ah marriages as 'egal Imam ash-Shail'i and the great Imam Abu Hanifah look upon mut ah marnages as illegal But should at any time a Qari of the Malaki sect decide that mutah is legal, it is legal, according to the common belief even for Shaff'is and Hanafis Every other opinion on this subject t idle talk. This saying pleased the Emperor, and he at once appointed a Que, who gave a decree which made mut uh marriages legai

In permitting these usufinctuary marriages Muhammad appears but to have given Dirine (t) sanction to one of the abominable practices of ancient Arabia, for Burchhardt (vol 11 p 378) says, it was a custom of their forefathers to assign to a traveller who became their guest for the night, some female of the finnity most commonly the host's own wife!

MU'TAZILAH (معتركا) Lit "The Separatists A sect of Muhammadans founded by Wasil ibn 'Ats', who reparated from the school of Hasan al-Basn (A.H. 110) The following are their chief tenets (1) They entirely reject all eternal attributes of God, to avoid the distinction of persons made by the Christians, saying that eternity is the proper or formal attribute of his essence; that God knows by His essence, and not by His knowledge and the same they affirm of His other attributes (though all the Mu'tamishs do not understand these words in one Hence this sect is also named Mu'attill, from their divesting God of His attributes, for they went so far as to say, that to affirm these attributes is the same thing as to make more eternals than one, and that the unity of God is inconsistent with such an opinion This was the true doctrine of Waşil, their master, who declared that whoever asserted an eternal attribute asserted there This point of speculation were two gods concerning the divine attributes was not ripe at first, but was at length brought to maturity by Wasil's followers, after they had read the books of the philosophers (2) They be-heve the word of God to have been created in subjecto (as the schoolmen term it) and to consist of letters and sound, copies thereof being written in books to express or imitate the original (3) They also go farther, and affirm that whatever was created in subjecto is also an accident, and liable to perish. They deny absolute predestination, holding that God is not the anthor of evil, but of good only, and that man is a free agent, which is the opinion of the Qadariyali sect account of this tenet and the first Mu'tazilshs look on themselves as the defenders of the unity and justice of God (4) They hold that if a prefessor of the true religion be guilty of a grievous ain, at d die without repentance, he will be ofernally dammed, though his punishment will is lighter than that of the infidels (5) They denv all vision of God in Paradise by the corporeal eye and reject all comparisons or sumilitudes applied to God

According to Shahrastāni, the Mu'tazilah

"That God is eternal, and that eternity is the peculiar property of His essence, but they deny the existence of any sternal attributes (as distinct from His nature). For they say, He is Omnucient as to His nature, lidving as to His nature; Almighty as to His nature, but not through any knowledge, power or life existing in Him as eternal attributes, for knowledge, power and life are part of His essence, otherwise, if they are to be looked upon as eternal attributes of the Deity, it will give rise to a multiplicity of eternal entities

"They maintain that the knowledge of God is as much within the province of reason as that of any other entity, that He cannot be beheld with the corporeal sight, and, with the exception of Himself, everything else is hable to change or to suffer extinction. They also maintain that Justice is the animating principle of human actions Justice according to them being the dictates of Reason and the concordance of the ultimate results of this conduct of man with such dietatas

" Again, they hold that there is no eternal law as regards human actions, that the divine ordinances which regulate the conduct of men are the results of growth and development, that God has commanded and forbidden, promised and threatened by a law which grew gradually At the same time, say they, he who works righteousness ments rewards, and he who works evil deserves punishment They also say that all knowledge is attained through reason, and must necessarily be so obtained. They hold that the cognition of good and evil is also within the province of reason, that nothing is known to be right or wrong intil reason has en-lightened us as to the listinction, and that thankfulness for the bieseings of the Benefactor is made obligatory by reason, even before the promulgation of any law upon the subject. They also n aintain that man has perfect freedom, is the author of his actions both good and evil, and deserves reward or punishment hereafter accordingly"

During the reigns of the Abbaside Khalifahs al-Mamiin, al- lu'tasım and al-Wasıq (AH 198-228) at Faghdad, the Mutazilah were in high favon: Mr Syed Ameer Ali Moulvi, M.A., LL R., in the preface to his rook, The Personal Law of the Mahommedons (W. H. Allen and Co.), claims to belong to "the little known, though not unimportant philosophical and legal school of the Mutaralas," and he adds, "the young generation is tending unconsciously toward the Mutaza lite doctrines"

According to the Sharhu 't-Muu agif, the Matazilah are divided into twenty sects, viz. Wasiliyah, 'Umariyah, Huzailiyah, Nazamıvalı, Aswarı ah, Askafiyah, Jafariyah, Bashariyah, Mazdariyah, Hishamiyah, Salhiyah, Habitiyah, Hadbiyah Ma'mariyah, Samamiyah, Khaiyatiyah, Jahiziyah, Ka'biyah, Juba iyah, and Bubsham; ah

Italic sect had visited with a similar design Almost the only religion in the world in which we should have concluded before examination, that the Pantheistic and mystic spirit of Hinduism was impossible is the stern unbending religious system of Mubain mad and his followers. But even amongst Muslims there have ever seen those who seek for divine intuition in individual souls, to the partial or entire rejection of the demands of creeds and occuments. These mystics are called Sulis, and have always included the philosophers, the poets, and the enthusiants of Islam. For an account of these Muslims, see the article on surnsm.

Sir William Murr gives the following account of the persecution --

"Dru Nowas was a votary of Judaism, which he is said to have embraced on a visit to Medina. This creed he supported with an intolerant and procelytizing adherence, which at last proved fatal to his kingdom. His bigotry was aroused by the prevalence and success of Christianity in the neighbouring province of Najraa, and he invaded it with a large army. The Christians offered a strenuous resistance, but yielded at length to the treacherous promise that no ill would be done to them. They were offered the choice of Jadasm or death, and those who remained constant to the faith of Jesus were cruelly massacred. Deep trenches were dug and filled with combustible materials, the pile was lighted, and the Christian martyrs cast headleng into the fiame. The number thus miserably burned, or slain by the sword, is stated at no less than twenty thousand.

"However much the account of this melancholy carnage may have been exaggerated, there can be no doubt of the cruel and bloody character of the tyrant's administration in

Najran

"News of the proceedings reached the Emperor Justin I., through his ambassador at Hira, to which court Dzu Nowas had exultingly communicated tidings of his triumph One of the intended victims Dous dzu Tholaban, also escaped to Constantinople, and holding up a half-burnt gospel, invoked, in the name of outraged Christendom, retribution upon the oppressor Emperor was moved, and indited a despatch to the Najashi, or Prince of the Abyssinians, desiring him to take vengeance upon the bar-barous Nimyarite Immediately an armament was set on foot, and in a short time seventy thousand warriors embarked in thirteen hundred merchant ships or transports, crossed the narrow gulph which separates Yemen from Aduls Dzu Nowas was defeated. NAMAZ (نام) The Persian and Hindustain term for solds, the Muhammadan htmg: [FRAYER.]

names, surnames. Arabic Iom ( ), Lagab ( ), Kunyah ( ) The teaching of Muhammad very greatly influenced the nomenclature of his followers, as is evident from the chapter deveted to the Traditions on the subject in the Mishkätu 'l-Maşābih, entitled "Bābu 'l-Asāmi," book xxi. chr vini., from which are extracted the following traditional sayings of Muhammed --

"The best names in the sight of God are 'Abdu 'llah (the servant of God), 'Abdu 'r-Ruhman (the servant of the Merciful One)

"You must not name your slaves Yasar (abundance), Rabah (gain), Nujth (prosperous), Afah (feheltous), because if you ask after one of these your domestic servants and he be not present, the negative reply will express that abundance, or gain or prospe rity, or felicity, are not in your dwelling "

"The vilest name you can give a human being is Maliku 'l Anlak, or 'King of Kings, because no one can be such but God Himself '

"You must not say to your slaves, 'My slave,' or 'My slave gurl,' for all your slaves are God's, but say, 'My boy,' or 'My girl 'or 'My youth' or 'My lass". And a slave must not say to his master, Yā Rabbi' (i.e. My Lord!), but he may say to him Ya Sasyick!

(My Chief!)"
"Call your children after your Prophet (' e Muhammad), but the names God likes best are 'Abdu 'llah (servant of God), 'Abdu 'r-Rahman, and the next best names are Haris (husbandman), and Human (high-minded) The worst of names is Harb (enmity), or Murrah (bitterness)" [Heb בורד, see Ruth Shurash ibn Hānı' relates that his father came to the Prophet with his tribe, and the Prophet heard them calling him Abu 'l-When the Prophet said, "Why do you call him so? Hakam, 'Ruler' is an attribute of God" And the Prophet ordered him to call himself Abs Shurath, ie the father of Shuralh, his eldest son

Modified, somewhat, by these injunctions of the Prophet, Muhammadan names have still continued to be ordered amagest learned Muslims according to the ancient ustom of Arabia Persons are often named-

(1) By a single name, as Muhammad, Müss (Moses), Dā'ūd (David), Ibrāhīm (Abraham), Hasan, Ahmad.

(2) As the father or mother of certain persons, e.g Abū Dā'ūd, the father of David, or Ummu Salimah, the mether of Salimah

(8) As the son of a certain one e.g Ibn 'Umar, the son of 'Umar, Ihn'Abbas, the son of Abbas, &c

(4) By a combination of words, e.g Nuvu dan, "Light of Religion", 'Abou 'light, " Servant of Ged."

(5) By a mekname of harmless signification, e.g. Aba Hurairak, "the kitten's

(6) By the trade or profession, a.g. al

Mangur al-Halley, Mangur the drasser of cotton.

(7) By the name of his birth-place, ag al-Bukhara, the native of Bukharah

These rules, guiding the nomenclature of the Arabians, give a strange sound to western ears in the names of celebrated authors. For instance, the celebrated compiler of the chief book of authentic traditions is known as " Abu · Abdı 'lläh, Muhammad, ıbn Ismā il ıbn İbrähim that his name is Muhammad and that he is the father of a son named 'Abdu lich, and that his own father's name was Isma'il the son of Ibruhum, the son of Mughirah, of the tribe of Juifi, and that he himself was born in Bukhara

Atabic names have undergone strange meditications when brought in contact with western languages, e.g. Avertoes, the philosopher, is a corruption of Ibn Hashid; Aviconna, of 1bn Sana, Achmet, the Sultan, of Ahmad Amurath, of al Murad, Saladin, the celebrated warner of the twelth century, of the Arabic Saluhu 'd-din," the peace of reli-gion."

(النمل) NAML-«AN-"The Ants" The title of the xxviith Surah of the Qur'an. in the 18th verse of which the word occurs " They came upon the valley of the ante"

NAMUS (ناموس). The angel, spirit, or boing, which Waraqah is related to have and appeared to Moses See Sahihu 'l-Bukhars, p ) where it is said when Muham-mad told Warsqah, the Jew, what he had seen on Mount Hira, Wiraqah exclaimed, "It is the Namus who appeared from God to Moses "

'Abdu 'l-Haqq says Namus means one who can take knowledge of the secret thoughts of a man, and is used in contradistinction to the word Jasus, "a spy," who seeks to know the evil deeds of another.

According to the Kitahu 't-Tarifat it is the law of God

Mr Emanuel Deutsch says "The namus is a hermaphrodite in word It is Arabic and also Greek. It is Talmudio It is, in the first instance, vouce, 'law,' that which by 'custom and common consent has become so. In Talmudic phiaseology it stands for the Thorah or Revealed Law In Arabic it further means one who communicates a secret message And all these different significations were conveyed by Waranah to Muhammad. (Literary Remains, p. 78)

The word namus occurs in the ethical work known as the Akhlaq-s-Jalali, in the following passage -

"The maintenance of equity, then, is realised by three things (1) The holy institute of God (2) The equitable Prince, (3) Money, or, as the old philosophers laid it down, the foremost vopos is the institute, the second vouces is the Prince who conforms to the institute (for religion and government are twins), and the third vouces is money (vouces in their language meaning discipline and cor-rection) Thus the institute or greatest airection) Thus the institute or games the bigrator is obeyed of all, to this even the Prince or secondary arbitrator is bound to conform. While the third arbitrator, which 18 money, should be invariably under the authority of the second, which is the Prince An intimation of this principle we have in the Quran, Sura lvii 25 'We have sent down the book, and the balance alone with it, that man might stand by the right and we have sent down steel (hadld) wherein is mighty power and advantages to man" The book in this passage alludes to the institute, the balance to that which tests the quantities of things in fact any instrument for ascertaining the value of heterogeneous objects (money being such an one), and steel to the sword, which is grasped by the might of the wrath-exerting doom pronouncing Prince (Akhlaq-t-Jalat, Thompsons ed p 127)

NEGUS [NAJASHI]

NEHEMIAH Not mentioned in the Quran or in Muslim commentaries But the following legend given in the Quran burah ri. 261, seems to have its origin in the circuit made by Nehemiah (Neh. ii 13) —

"Hast thou considered him who passed by a city which had been laid in raims 'How,' said he, 'shall God give life to this city, after she hath been dead?' And God caused him to die for an bundred years, and then raised him to life And God said 'How long hast thou waited?' He said, 'I have waited a day or part of a day. He said, 'May, thou hast waited an hundred yours. Look on thy food and thy drink, they are not corrupted, and look on thine ass we would make thee a sign unto men. And look on the bones of thine ass, how we will raise them, then clothe them with flesh' And when this was shown to hum, he said, 'I acknowledge that God hath power to do all things'"

The commentators, al-Kamālan, say it was sither Jeremiah or Khizr, or Ezekiel

NEIGHBOURS Arabic jar (هر), pl pran The Summs hald that neighbours are those who worship in the same mosque, but some Shi'ah doctors say that a neighbour is anyone whose house is within forty cubits, whilst others maintain that the term extends to all the occupants of forty houses on either side (Bailie's Digest, Summ Code, p 579, Im Code, p 216)

A neighbour has the next light of preemption to a partner in the sale and purchase of houses and lands (Hedayah vol m

The rights of a neighbour in case of the sale of property, are established by the Muhammadan law, for the Prophet has said that the neighbour of a house has a superior right to the purchase of that house (i.e. next to immediate relatives), and the neighbour of lands has a prior claim to the purchase of those lands, and if he be absent, the seller must wait his return. (Hidayah, vol it p 562.)

Musims are enjoined in the Qur an (Susab iv 40) to be kind to their neighbours. In the Traditions, it is said that Muhammad was so frequently advised by the angel Cabriel to order his people to be kind to their neighbours that he almost imagined that he (the angel) wished to make neighbours heirs to each other. It is also related that the Prophet said, "He is not a perfect Muslim who eats to his full and leaves his neighbour bungry.

Abu Huranah says that a man once said to the Prophet, "There is a woman who worships God a great deal, but she is very ; bu sive to her neighbours" And the Prophet said. "But there is another woman who worships little and gives but little in alms, but she does not amoy her neighbours with her tongue?" The Prophet said. "She will be in Paradise" (Mishlat, book Zail ch xv)

NESTOR Arabic Nastūr () A Christian monk who resided in Syria, who is said to have borne witness to Muhammad The legend is not accepted by Sunni writers, and Sir William Muir (Lafe of Mahomet new ed., p 21), says it is to be rejected as a puerile fabrication. It is, however, believed by the Shi'ahs, and the following is the story as given in the Shi'ah-work entitled the Hayatu 'l-Qulub, on the supposed authority of Abū Tālib, Muhammad's uncle—

"As we approached Sham (Syria)," continned Abutalib), I saw the houses of that country in motion, and light above the brightness of the sun beaming from them. The crowd that collected to see Mohammed, that Yusoof of Misree perfection, made the Baz re impassable wherever we went, and so loud were exclamations at his beauty and excellence altogether, that the sound reached the frontiers of Sham Every monk and learned man came to see him The wasest of the wise among the people of the Book, who was called Nestoor, visited him, and for three days was in his company without speaking a word. At the close of the third day, appacently overwhelmed with emotion, he came near and walked around the Prophet, upon which I said into him, 'O monk what do you want of the child?' He said, 'I wish to know his name' I told him it was Mohammed bin-Abduliah At the mention of the name the monks colour changed, and he requested to be allowed to see the shoulders of the Prophet No sconer did he behold the seal of prophecy [SEAL OF PROPHECY], than he cast himself down, kissed it, and wept, saying, Carry back this sun of prophecy quickly to the place of his nativity if you had known what enemies he has here, you would not have brought him with you. The learned man continued his visit to the Prophet, treated him with the greatest reverence, and when we left the country gave him a shirt as a memento of his friendship I carried Mohammed home with the utmost expedition, and when the news of our happy neturn reached Mekkah, great and small came out to welcome the Prophet, except Abujahl, who was intoxicated and ignorant of the event"

Other traditions respecting this journey into Syria inform us that many more miracles attended it Savage animals and birds of the air rendered the most obsequious homage to the Prophet And when the party reached the bazars of Busra they met a company of monks, who immediately changed colour as if their faces had been rubbed over Aith sullion, while their bodies shook as in an ague. "They besought us to visit their chief in their great church We replied, What have you to do with us? On which they said. What harm is there in your coming to our place of worship! Accordingly we want with them, they supposing that Mohammed was in our com-pany, and entered a very large and lofty church, where we saw their great wise man siting among his disciples with a book in his hand. After looking at the book and his hand scrutinizing us, he said to his people, You have accomplished nothing, the object of our inquity is not here. He then asked who we were, to which we replied that we were Koravah 'Of what family of that tribe?'

he further demanded. We answered that we were of the Benes Abdulahems. He then demanded if there was no other person belonging to our party besides those present We told him there was a youth of the Benes Hashim belonging to our company, who was called the orphan grandson of Abdulmutaib On hearing this he shricked, nearly swooned away, sprang up and cried, 'Alas' clas' the Nasarance religion is ruined'. He then leaned on his crosser and fell into profound thought for a long time, with eight of his patriarchs and disciples standing around him. At last he said, 'Can you show me that youth?' We answered in the affirmative

"He then accompanied us to the bazar, where we found the Prophet, with light beam ing from the radiant moon of his face, and a great crowd of people around him, who had been attracted by his extraordinary beauty, and were buying his goods at the highest prices, while they sold their own to him at the cheapest rate. With the view of proving the knowledge of the wise man, we pointed out another individual as the object of his inquiry, but presently he recognised the Prophet himself, and shouted, 'By the truth of the Lord Mesech, I have found him!' and overpowered with emotion, came and kissed his blessed head, saying, 'Thou art holy!' He then asked Mohammed many things concerning himself, all of which he satisfactorily answered. The wise man affirmed that if he were to live in the time of Mohammed's prophecy, he would fight for him in the cause of truth, declaring that whoever obeyed him would gain everlasting life, and whoever rejected him would die eternal death " (Merrick's translation of Hayatu 'l-Qulub, p 64)

NEW MOON. Arabic  $H_1l\bar{\sigma}l$  (all  $\Delta$ ) The term is used for the first three days of the new moon.

NEW TESTAMENT Arabic al-'Ahdu 'l-Jadid (العهد الجديد) There is no evidence in the Quran, or in the Traditions, that Muhammad had ever seen, or was acquainted with, the New Testament The Christian scriptures are spoken of in the Qui'an as the Injil, evayye'\(\text{Lor}\)," which was given to Jesus", by which Muhammadans understand a complete book somewhat similar to the Quran See Surah lvu 27, "We caused our Apostles to follow in their foot-steps (se of Noah and Abraham), and We caused Jesus the son of Mary to follow them, and We gave him the Inju, and We put into the hearts of those who followed him kindness and compassion, but as to the monastic life, they invented it themselves." The only New Testament characters mentioned by name in the Qur'an are Jesus, Mary, Zachamas, John, and Gabriel, and there is no direct reference to the Secrements of Baptism and the Lord's Supper, nor to the miracles or parables of Jesus. This is all the more remarkable, because the Old Testament history and its leading characters, are frequently mentioned in the Qur'an [INJIL OFFISTIANITY]

NEW YEAR [NAUBOZ]

NICKNAME Arabic nabae (14), pl. anbāz The calling of nicknames is for-bidden in the Qur'ān, Sūrah xlix 11 "O Believers, let not men laugh men to scorn who haply may be better than themselves. Neither let women laugh women to scorn, who haply may be better than themselves. Neither defame one another, nor call one another by nicknames"

This verse is said to have been given when Safiyah, one of the Prophet's wives, complained that she had been taunted by the other women with her Jewish origin Muhammad answered her, "Canst thou not say, 'Aaron is my father, Moses is my uncle, and Muhammad is my husband" (See al-Baizāwi, in loco)

NIGHT PRAYERS Arablo salātu 'l-layl (ملوة اللير), or salātu 't-tahaŋyud (ملوة التهبد) From eight to twelve ruk'ah prayers recited during the night, in addition to the witr prayers, which consist of an odd number of rak'ahs These prayers are Sunnah, is established according to the custom of the Prophet, but they are voluntary acts of devotion (Mishkāt, book iv ch xxxi)

NIKAH (c) A word which, in its literal sense signifies conjunction, but which in the language of the law implies the marriage contract [MARRIAUE.]

NIMROD Arabic Numrud (בּקְרָהוֹדְ). Heb לְּבְרְרִוֹדְ. All Muhammadan commentators say he was the son of Canaan (Kan'an), and not, as stated in Genesis x 8, the son of Cush

He is referred to in the Quran in the following passage —

Sürah 11 260 "Hast thou not thought on him who disputed with Abraham about his Lord, because God had given him the kingdom? When Abraham said, My Lord is He who maketh alive and causeth to die? He said, 'It is i who make alive and cause to die!' Abraham said 'Since God bringeth the sun from the East, do thou, then bring it from the West.' The infidel was confounded, for God guideth not the evil doers"

Surah xxi. 68, 69 "They said 'Burn him, and come to the succour of your gods if ye will do anything at all' We said, 'O fire! be then cold, and to Abraham a

The Rabbins make Nimrod to have been the persecutor of Abraham (comp Tary Jon. on Gun xv 7, Tr Bava Bathra, fol 91a, Maimon. More Nevochim, iii 29, Weil, Legenden, p 74), and the Muhammadan commentators say, that by Nimrod's order a large space was inclosed at Kūgā, and filled with a vast quantity of wood, which being set on fire, burned so fiercely that none dared to venture near it; then they bound Abraham, and putting him into an engine (which some suppose to have been of the Devil's invention), shot him into the midst of the fire, from which he was preserved by the angel Gabriel, who was sent to his assistance, the fire burning only the cords with which he was bound. They add that the fire, having miraculously lost its heat in respect to Abraham, became an odornierous air, and that the pile changed to a pleasant meadow, though it raged so furiously otherwise, that, according to some writers, about two thousand of the idolaters were consumed by it

This story seems to have had no other foundation than that passage of Moses, where God is said to have brought Abraham out of Ur of the Chaldees, manuaderstood which word the Jews, the most trifling interpreters of scripture, and some moderns who have followed them, have translated out of the fife of the Chaldees, taking the word Ur, not for the proper name of a city, as it really is, but for an appellative signifying " fire " However, it is a fable of some antiquity, and credited not only by the Jews, but by several of the eastern Christians, the twenty-ifth of the second Kanin, or January, being set apart in the Syrian calendar for the commemoration of Abraham's being cast into the fire

The Jews also mention some other perse cutions which Abraham underwent on account of his religion, particularly a ten years' im-prisonment, some saying he was imprisoned by Nimrod, and others by his father Terah Some tell us that Numred, on seeing this miraculous deliverance from his palace, oned out that he would make an offering to the God of Abraham and that he accordingly sacrificed four thousand kine But if he ever relented, he soon relapsed into his former infidelity, for he built a town that he might ascend to heaven to see Abraham's God, which being overthrown, still possisting in his design, he would be carried to heaven in a chest borne by four monstrous birds, but after wandering for some time through the air, he fell down on a mountain with such force that he made it shake, whereto (as some fancy) a passage in the Qur'an alludes (Surah xiv 47), which may be translated, "Although their contrivances be such as to make the mountains tremble" Numred, disappointed in his design of making war with God, turns his arms against Abraham, who being a great prince, raised forces to defend himself, but Glod. dividing Nimrod's subjects, and confound-ing their language, deprived him of the greater part of his people, and plagued those who adhered to him by swarms of gnats, which destroyed almost all of them, and one of those gnats having entered into the nostril, or ear, of Nimrod, penetrated to one of the membranes of his brain, where growing bigger every day, it gave him such intolerable pain that he was obliged to cause his head to be heaten with a mallet, in order to procure some case, which torture be suffered four hundred years, God being willing to punish by one of the smallest of his creatures him who insclently boasted himself to be lord of all A Syrian calendar piaces the death of Numrod, as if the time were well known, on the 8th of Tamüz, or July (See Sale's Koran, D'Herbelot's Bibl Orient, al-Baizāwī's Com )

(لينوي) NINAWĀ NINEVEH.

NINEVEH Arabic Ninawa (نينوى) Heb زادِات Not mentioned by name in the Quran, but according to al-Banzawi it is the city of "a hundred thousand persons, or even more," to whom Jomb was sont See Quran, Sürab xxxvii 147

HAON Arabic Nah (وبا). Heb [Th], A prophet to whom Muhammadans give the Kalimah, or title, of Nabiyu 'llāh, "the Prophet of God." He is not supposed to have been the inspired author of " a Book "

The following is the account given of him and of the flood in the Qur'an (with Mr. Lane's annotations in stalics see second edition, by Mr Stanley Lane-Poole)

"We formerly sent North unto his people, eaying, Verily I am unto you a plain admonisher that ye worship not [any] but God. Varily I fear for you, if ye worship any other, the pumehment of an afflictive day in the world and the world to come.—But the chiefs who usbelieved among his people replied, We see thee not to be other than a man, like unto us, and we see not any to have followed thes except the meanest of us, as the weavers and the cohblers, at first thought (or rushly), nor do we see you to have any excellence above us nay, we imagine you to be hars in your claim to the apostolic commission. He said, O my people, tell me, if I have an ovident proof from my Lord and He hath bestowed on me mercy (the gift of prophecy) from Himself which is hidden from you, shall we compel you to receive it when ye are averse thereto? We cannot do so And, O my people, I ask not of you any riches for My it; namely, for delivering my message reward is not due from any but God, and I will not drive away those who have believed as ye have commanded me [because they are poor people] Verily they shall meet their Lord at the resurrection, and He will reconspense them, and well exact for them [reparation] from those who have treated them with injustice, and driven them away But I see you [to be] a people who are ignorant of the end of your case And, O my people, who will defend me against God if I drive them away? Will ye not then consider? And I do not say unto you, I have the treasures of God nor [do I say], I know the things un-seen, nor do I say, Verily I am an angel, nor do I say, of those whom your eyes con-temn, God will by no means bestow on them geed. (God best knoweth what is in their minds.) verily I should in that case be [one] of the offenders -They replied, O Noah, thou hast disputed with us and multiplied disputes with us now bring upon us that punishment wherewith thou threatenest us, if thou be of those that speak truth Re said, Ouly God will bring it upon you, if He please to hasten it unto you, for it is His affair, not mine and ye shall not escape God nor will my connsel profit you, if I desire to counsel you, if God desire to lead you into error He is your Lord, and unto Him shall ye be brought ack" (Sürah xi. 27-36)

"And it was said by revelation unto Noan,

Verily there shall not believe of thy people [any] but they who have already believed, therefore be not grieved for that which they have done," (Sürah xi. 38)

"And he uttered an imprecation upon them, saying, O my Lord, leave not upon the earth any one of the unbelievers, for if Thon leave them, they will lead Thy servants into error, and will not beget [any] but a wloked, nu grateful [offspring]. O my Lord, forgive me and my parents (for they were believers), and whomseever entereth my house (my abade, or my place of worship), being a believer, and the believing men, and the believing womon, (to the day of resurrection,) and add not to the offenders [aught] save destruction " (Surah leti. 27-29 )

"And God answered his prayer, and said, Construct the ark in our sight and according to our revelation, and speak not unto Me con cerums those who have offended, to beg Me not to destroy them; for they [shall be] drowned. And he constructed the ark; and whenever a company of his people passed by him, they derided him. He said, If ye de-ride us, we will deride you, like as ye deride, when we are saved and ye are drowned, and ye shall know on whom shall come a punishment which shall render him vile, and whom shall befall a lasting punishment [Thus he was employed] until when Our degree for their destruction came to pass, and the baker's even everthowed buth water (for this was a signal unto Noah), We said, Carry into it (that is, into the ark) of every pair, male and female, of each of these descriptions, two (and it is related that God assembled for Noah the wild beasts and the birds and other creatures, and he proceeded to put his hands upon each kind, and his right hand fell always upon the male, and his left upon the female, and he carried them into the ark), and thy family (excepting him upon whom the sentence of destruction hath already been pronounced, namely, Noah's wife, and his son Canaan + but Shem and Ham and Japheth and their three wives he took), and those who have believed, but there beheved not with him save a few they were six men and their wives and it is said that all who were in the ark were eighty, half of whom were mon and half women And Noah said, Baiburk ye therein. In the name of God [be] its course and its mooring Verily my Lord 14 very forgiving [and] merciful.—And it moyed along with them amid waves like mountains, and Noah called unto his son, Camaan, who was apart from the urk, O my child, embark with us, and be not with the unbelievers! He replied, I will betake me to a mountain which will secure me from the waters [Ngsh] said, There is nought that will secure to-day from the decree of God [any] but him on whom He hath mercy And the waves inter-vened between them, so he bucame [one] of the drowned And it was said, O earth swallow up thy water (whereupon at drank t up, except what had liescended from heaven, which became rivers and seas), and, O heaven, cease from raising,—and the water abated, and the decree was fulfilled, and it (namely, the ark), rested on El-Joodes (a mountain of El-Jezeerek, near El-Mont), and it was said, Perdition to the offending people!" (Sūrah ≥i 39 46.)

' And Noal called upon his Lord, and said, O my Lord, verily my son is of my family, and Thou hast promised me to save them, and verily Thy promise is true, and Thou art the most just of those who exercise-judgment God replied, O Noah, verily he is not of thy family who should be saved, or of the people of thy religion Verily it (namely, thene daking Me to save hem) is not a righteous aci, for he was an unbeliever, and there is no sujety for the unbelievers; therefore ask not of Me that wherein then hast no knowledge. I admonah thee, last thou become [one] of the ignorant—Neah said, O my Lord, I beg Thee to preserve me from asking Thee that wherein I have no knowledge, and ii Thou do not forgree me and have mercy upon me, I shall be of there who suffer loss. —It was said, O Noah, descend from the ark, with peace from Us, and blessings, upon thee and upon peoples (that shall proceed) from those who are with thee in the ark (that is, their believing posterity), but peoples [that shall proceed] from those who are with thee We will permit to enjoy the provisions of this world; then a painful punishment shall befall them from Us, in the world to come, they being unbelievers" (Surah zi 47-50)

The commentator, al Buzawi, says that Neah went into the ark on the tenth of Rajab, and came out of it on the tenth of Muharram, which therefore became a fast so that the whole time of Noah's being in the ark, according to him, was six months, and that Noah was two years in building the aik which was framed of Indian plane tree, that it was divided into three stories of which the lower was designed for the heasts, the middle one for the men and women and the upper for the birds, and the men were separated from the women by the body of Adam which Noah had taken into the ark

Arabic yamin (همون), pl in The teaching of the Quran HTAO yamınāt, aımān with reference to an oath, is expressed in the following verses

Sürah u 225 "God will not pumsh you for an inconsiderate word in your oath, but he will punish you for that which your hearts have assented to "

Sürah v 91 "God will not punish you for an inconsiderate word in your oaths, but he will punish you in regard to an eath taken seriously. Its expiation shall be to feed ten poor persons with such moderate food as ye feed your own tamilies with, or to clothe them, or to set free a captive. But he who cannot find means shall fast three days " Sürah xv: 96 "Take not your oaths between you decertfully "

The following is the teaching of Muhammad, as given in the Traditions

"Whoever swears to a thing and says, 'If it please God,' and acts contrary to his oath, it is no sin."

"Swear not by idols or by your own fathers"

"Swear not by God except it be to the

"Whoever swears by the prayers or by the fast, or by the pilgrimage, is not a Muslim

The Prophet used generally to swear in these words "No, by the Turner of Hearts." According to the Hidayah (Hamilton's ed, vol vi, pp 1, 2), yamin is constituted by the use of the name of Almighty God, or by any of those appellations by which the Deity is generally known or understood

False oaths are of three kinds.

- (اليمين الغموس) An oath taken concerning a thing already past, in which is conveyed an intentional false-hood on the part of the swearer such an oath is highly sinful, the Prophet having declared Whosoever sweareth falsely, the same shall be condemned to hell "
- (2) Al-Yaminu اليموين 'l-mun'aqıd' (المحمودة) An eath taken concerning a matter which is to some. Thus, a man swears that he will do such a thing, or he will not do such a thing, and where he fails in this, expiation is incumbent upon him, which expration : established on the authority of the sacred writings
- (عبيس اللغو) Yamınıı 'l-Laghu' (يميس اللغو) oath taken concerning an incident or transaction already past, where the swearer believes that the matter to which he thus bears testimony accords with what he swears, though it should happen to be actually otherwise, in which case it may be hoped from the divino mercy that the swearer will not be condemned for such an oath.

The expiation, or kaffarah, is of no avail for the laminu '!-Ghamus, but it is necessary for the Yaminu '/-murraged. It consists of either feeding or clothing ten poor persons or releasing a Muslim captive

The Muslim law with regard to oaths is a modification of the Talmudic law, for from the Divine law the Jewish doctors deduced many special cases of perjury, which are thus classified -

(1) Jus jurandum promes treum, a rash or mconsiderate oath for the future, or a false assertion respecting the past (Lev v 4)

- (2) Vanum, an absurd contradictory assertion
- (8) Depositi, breach of contract denied (Lev xix 11)

(4) Testsmones, judicial perjury (Lev v 1) (H W P in Smith's Dut of the Bible)

The Mosaic law admitted expiation in the case of rash or forgotten caths, vide Lev v 4, but the Yaminu 'l-mun'agid of Muhammadan law allows a much greater latitude, for it applies to all vows or oaths excepting those intentionally false made with regard to future events

The teaching of Muhammadan juriste on the subject of oaths and vows, exhibits that reservatio mentalis of Muhammadan morality which is so similar to that of the Jewish Rabbis, and which was condemned by Jesus Christ in St Matt xxiii. 16

Sunni writers on jurisprudence say that an oath should be expressed by such attributes of the Deriv as are commonly used in awearing, such as the power, or the glory, or the might of God, because an oath is usually ex pressed under one or other of those qualities, and the sense of yamin, viz. " strength," is by this means obtained, since as the swearer beheves in the power, glory, and might, and other attributes of the Deity, it follows that the mention of these attributes only is suf ficient to strengthen the resolution in the performance of the act vowed, or the avoidance thereof

If a man swear "by the knowledge of God," it does not constitute an oath, because an oath expressed by the knowledge of God is not in use, moreover, by "knowledge" is frequently implied merely that which is known, and in this sense the word knowledge is not expressive either of the name of God, or of any of His attributes. In the same manner, should a person swear "by the wrath of God," or "by the mercy of God," it does not constitute an oath, because an oath is not commenly expressed by any of these attributes. moreover, by the word rakmak is sometimes understood " rain," and " heaveh" is also occasionally expressed by that term, and by the word Ghair is understood

"punishment", and none of these are either appellations or attributes of the Deity

If a person swear by another name than that of God,—such as "the Prophet," or "the Holy Temple," thus does not constitute an oath, as the Prophet has said, "if any man among you take an oath, he must swear "by the name of God, or else his oath is void," If a person swear by the Qur'an, it does not constitute an oath, although the Quran be the word of God because men do not swear by the Qur'an The compiler of the Hidayah observes that this is where the swearer only says, " by the Prophet," or "by the Temple" or "by the Quran," but if the swearer say, "If I act contrary to what I now say may I be deprived to the Prophet." or "of the temple," or "of the Qur'an,' this constitutes an oath, because such privation would reduce the swearer to the state of an infidel, and the suspension of infidelity upon a condition amounts to yamin

Abu Hanifah alleges that if a man should swear " by the truth of God," this does not con stitute an oath, and in this linam Muhammad eomordes There are two opinions of Abū Yusuf recorded on this point. According to one, it is not an oath, but according to the other it is an oath, hecause truth is one of the attributes of the Deity, signifying the certainty of the divine existence, and hence it is the same as if the swearer were to say, " by God, the truth " and as oaths are common nucles this mode of expression, so an oath is The argument of Imam hereby constituted Muhammad and Abu Hamfah is that the term "the truth," as here expressed, relates merely to the identity of the godhead as the object of obedience, and hence an oath thus expressed appears to be taken by that which is neither an appallation nor an attribute of God The learned jurists, however, say that if a person express himself thus, "by the truth I will do so and so," this constitutes an oath, because the truth is one of the appellatives or proper names of God But if a person were to say, "I will do this truly," it does not amount to an oath, because the word truly can only be taken, in this case, as a corroboration or confirmation of the promise contained in the speech, being the same as if he were to say, "I shall do this indeed" If a man say, "I swear," or "I vow," or 'I testify," whether the words "by God" be superadded or not, it constitutes an oath, hecause such words are commonly used in swearing, the use of them in the present tense is undisputed, and they are also sometimes used in the future tense, where the context admits of a construction in the present, and attestation amounts to an oath, as in that sense it occurs in the sacred writings. Now swearing "by the name of God" is both oustomary and conformable to the divine ordinances, but without the name of God it is forbidden. When it so occurs, therefore, it must be construed into a lawful cath, hence some say that intention is not requisite in it, others, however, allege that the intention is essential, because the words here recited bear the construction of a promise, that is, they admit of being received as applying to the future, and also of being taken as a vow without the name of God.

If a person, speaking in the Persian language, were to say, "I swear by God," it amounts to an eath, because here the idiom confines the expression solely to the present, but if he were to say simply, "I swear, some allege that this does not constitute an oath if he were to say, "I swear by the divorce of my wife," this is not an eath, as an outh is not so expressed in practice

If a man in swearing say "by the age" or "the existence of God," it constitutes an oath, because the age or existence of (fod significahis eternity, which is one of his attributes.

If a person should say, "If I do this may I be a Jew, or a Ohristian, or an infidel," it constitutes an oath because, as the swearer has made the condition a sign of infidelity, it follows that he is conscious or his obligation to avoid the condition, and this obligation is possible, by making it an oath, in such a way as to render unlawful to himself that which is lawful And if the oath relate to anything which he has done in the time past, as if he were to say 'If I have done so may I be a Jew of an infidel," and so forth, this is yanu-nu l-(thamus, or "perjury" The swearer is not, however, in this case made a Jew or an infidel, because the words " may I be an infidel," and so forth, relate to some future in definite period Some, on the contrary, have alleged that he becomes actually as an infidel," because the penalty which the swearer imprecates upon himself relates to the present instant of his testimony, being the same as if he were to say, "I am a Jew," &c But the majority of doctors say, the swearer does not become a Jew or infidel in either of the cases, either in that of a vow with respect to the future, or an oath regarding the past, provided he consider this merely as a form of swear-But if he believe that by thus swearing he fully subjects himself to the penalty expressed, he suffers accordingly, in either instance, because he appears consenting to inhidelity, on account of having ventured upon a thing by the commission of which he cen coves that he may be rendered an infidel.

If a person say, "if I do this, may the anger of God fall upon me," this does not constitute a vow, as not being a customary mode of expression for that purpose. And so also, if a person, were to say, "May I be su adulterer or a drunkard or an usurer," because these are not generally understood or recoived

as forms of swearing

The following are considered the most solemn and binding methods of taking an

- 1 Saying three times "by the Great God "
- 2 Taking the Quran and saying, "by what this contains of the word of God
- 3. By placing a sword on the Qur'an.
  4 By saying, "I impose upon myself divorcement" Muhammad himself was rather given to swearing, and the Qur'an is full of wild eaths, one of the most terrible of which, according to the Prophet's own words, is to "swear by the setting stars" (Sürah Ivi. 74.)

Burchhardt, in his notes on the Bedoum Arabs, says that these shildren of the desert often take hold of the middle of a tent pole and swear by the life of the tent and its

As might be expected, from the example set them by their Prophet, Muhammadans are commonly guilty of taking God's name in vain by swearing upon every petty occasion. Like the una Ala of the Greeks, the word is hardly ever out of their mouths

(For further information on the subject of Oaths, see Hamilton's Hidayah, book vi., the Durru'l-Multier, the Raddu'l-Multier, and the Fatanoë-i-Alampiri, in loce, in which there are chapters devoted to the consideration of caths and vows made under all circumstances of life, e.g. with respect to entering places of residence, with regard to actions, with respect to entering places of residence, with regard to actions, with respect to entering places of residence, with respect to buying speaking and conversing, of vows in mann mission and divorce, with respect to buying and selling, marriage, clothing, wearing ornaments, striking, killing, the payment of money, &c. &c. ]

OATH, The administration of an Au oath in a court of justice is not worthy of credit unless it be taken in the name of God, because Muhammad said, "Whosoever takes an oath otherwise than in the name of God, is most certainly a polytheist" It is incumbent upon the Qazī, or judge, to request the swearer to corroborate his oath by reciting some of the attributes of God. For example, "I swear by Ged, the Righteous, the Knower of Secrets," &c A defondant must not be required to swear by divorce or emancipation, as if he should say "If it be true my wife is divorced, or my slave is free"

If an oath be administered to a Jew, he should eay, "I awear by Ged who revealed the Zeurat to Moses"

If to a Christian, he should say, "I swear by God who revealed the Injil to Jesus"

If to a Majūsī or fire-worshipper, he should say, "I swear by God who created fire"

An oath cannot be administered to an idelater otherwise than in the name of God, in accordance with this verse in the Qur'an, "If ye sek of them who hath created you, verily they will say God Ahnighty" (Sürah XXXIX 39.)

An oath cannot be administered to infidels in their places of worship, because the Qizi is not allowed to enter such a place. This applies to the places of worship of the Jawa and Christians as well as of idelaters. # OHUD [UHUD]

OLD TESTAMENT Al-'Ahdu'L 'Atīq (العهد العليق) Muhammad, in his Curau, professes to receive all the in-spired books of the Old Testament (See Surah ii 130 "We believe in God, and what has been revealed to us, and what has been re vesled to Abraham, and Ishmael, and Isaac, and Jacob, and the Tribes, and what was brought unto the Prophets from their Lord and we will not distinguish between any of them, and unto Him are we resigned" (i.e. Muslima) But there is no evidence that Muhammad had ever seen the Jewish Scriptures, as now received by both Jows and Christians In the Qur'an, he mentions the Tuerat of Moses, the Zabur (Pasima) of David, and makes several references to the historical portions of the Old Testument, but Jonah is the only name amongst the writers of the propherical books (either greater or minor), of the Old Testament scriptures, mentioned in the Qur'an

Muhammadan winters say there have been 124,000 prophets, but only eight of these have been aposities to whom the Almighty has revealed books, and that only one hundred portions, or sukur, and four books, or kutub, have been given to mankind. Ten portions to Adam, the first of the prophets, fifty to Seth (not once mentioned in the Qur'an), thirty to Idris or Enoch, and ten to David, another to Jesus, and the fourth to Muhammad

Six of the prepares are said to have brought in new laws which successively abrogated the preceding, namely Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Jesus, and Muhammad

It is impossible to read the Qui an carefully without arriving at the conclusion that Muhammad derived his knowledge of the events of Old Testament scriptures rather from the Rabbins and their Talmudic teaching, than from the inspired text itself. Mr Emanuel Deutsch truly says. "Judaism forms the kernel of Muhammadanism, both general and special. It seems as if he (Muhammad) had breathed from his childhood almost the air of contemporary Judaism, such Judaism as is found by us crystallised in the Talmud, the Targum, and the Midras." (Literary Resentes, p. 85.)

The following Old Testament characters are mentioned by name in the Qur'an —

OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS, The testimony of the Qur'an to the. The references in the Qur'an to the accred scriptures of the Jews and Christians are very many, and in all cases Muhammad refers to these sacred writings with the highest respect and veneration. He acknowledges their inspiration, admits the existence of such documents in his own day, and appeals to them in support of his own mission.

The following verses of the Qur'an, in which there are references to the Old and New Testament, have been placed in chronological order, and the translations given are for the most part from Sir William Muir's Manual on "The Coran," published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge —

Sürah İxxxvii 18 "Verily this is in the books of yore, the books of Abraham and Moses"

Sürah hii 37-40 "Hath he not been told of that which is in the pages of Moses, and of Abraham who acted faithfully? That a burdened soul shall not bear another's burden, and that there shall be nothing (mputed) to a man, but that which he himself hath wrought," &c

Surah xxxii. 28-25 "And verily We gave Moses the book wherefore be not in doubt as to the reception thereof, and We made it a direction to the Israelites And We made from among them leaders who should direct according to Our command, when they were steadfast, and believed in Our signs Verily thy Lord, he will judge between hem on the Day of Resurrection as to that concerning which they disagree"

which they disagree"
Sürah liv 48 "Are your unbelievers (Ye Makkans) better than those (i e of the days of Noah, Lot, Moses, &c., just referred to.) or is there an immunity for you in the Scriptures?"

Surah xxxiv 80 "And the unbelievers say —We will not believe in this Quran, nor in that (which was revealed) before it."

Surah xli 45 "And verily We gave Moses the book, and they fell to variance concerning it"

Surah xlv 15, 16 "And verily We gave the children of Israel the book, and wiedom, and prophecy, and We nourished them with pleasant food, and We exalted them above the rest of the world, and We gave them plain directions in the matter (of religion) and they fell not to variance until after divine knowledge (or the Revelation,) had come unto them, out of jealousy among themselves. Verily, thy Lord will decide between them on the Day of Judgment, concerning that about which they disagree"

Surah xxxvii 34 "Verily when it is said unto them —There is no God but the Lord, they arrogantly reply,—What! shall we give up our gods for a phronzied poet? Nav, he cometh with the truth, and attesteth (the Revelations,) of the (former) spoulies." Shrab zazvil 114 "And verily we were gracious '? Moses and Aaron, and saved them and the e people from great tribulation, and We brought them assistance, and they were the conquerers, and We gave them the per-spicuous book, and directed them into the right way."

Shrab xxvi 194 "Verily it (the Qur'an) is a revelation from the Lord of creation, the faithful Spirit bath caused it to descend on thy hears, that thou mightest be one of the warners in the plant Arabic tongue And verily it is in the former Scriptures What! is it not a sign unto them that the wise men of the Children of Israel recognize it?" Sürak ziri 12 "And when they refuse to be guided thereby, they say,—thus is an antiquated lie. Yet preceding it there is the Book of Meses, a guide and a mercy, and this Qur'in is a book attesting (previous Revelation), in the Arabic tongue, to warn the transgressors, and glad tidings to the righ-

tenua

Firsh xivi 30 'And (call to mind) when We caused a company of the Genii to turn aside unto thee that they might hear the Qur'an . And, when they were present thereat, they said Give ear And when it was ended, they returned to their people as warners, they said,—Oh our people! verily we have heard a book revealed after Moses, attesting the revolution that precedeth it, it leadeth to the truth, and unto the straight path "

Sarah xxxv, 25 " And if they reject thee, verily they who preceded them rejected (their prophets), who brought them clear aigns, and writings, and the enlightening book

Sürah xxxv. 81 " And that which We have revealed unto thee is the truth, attesting that which precedeth it "

Sürah xiz. 11 "Oh John' take the book (the Taurit) with power,—and We gave him windom while a child."

Sürah ziz. 28, 29 · And she (Mary) pointed to him (the enfant Jesus ) they suid - Gow shall we speak with a child in the cradle? (The infint Jesus) said -verily I am the servant of God, he hath given me the book (s.e. the Gospel), and made me a prophet."

Surah xlii 1 " Thus doth God the glorrous and the wise, communicate inspiration unto thee, as he did unto those that preceded thee."

Streh zin 12 "He bath ornamed unto you the religion which he commanded unto Noah, and which We have revealed unto thee, and which We commanded unto Abraham, Moses, and Jesus,—saying, Maintain the (true) religion, and be not at variance therein."

Shrah xln. 14, 15 "And they did not differ until after the knowledge (of Divine Revelution) came unto them, rebelliously among themselver and unless the word had gene forth from thy Lord (respetting them) until a fixed time, verily the matter had been decided between them. And verily they that have inherited the hook after them are in a perplaying doubt respecting the same. Wherefore mvite (men ento the true faith), and stand fast as thou hast been commanded, and follow not their desires And say, I believe in whatever books God hath revealed, and I am commanded to decide between you; God is our Lord, and your Lord To'ns will (be reclassed) our works—to you, yours There is no ground of dispute between us and you. Ged will gather us together, and to Him shall be the return."

Sürah al 55, 56 "And verily We gave unto Moses guidance, and We caused the Children of Israel to inherit the book,—a guide and an admonition unto people of understanding hearts. Wherefore be patient, for the promise of God is true, and ask pardon for thy sin," &c

Surah xl 72 "They who reject the book and that which We have sent our messengers with (the Old and New Testament), -they shall know, when the cellars shall be on their necks, and the chains by which they shall be dragged into hell, -then shall they be burned in the fire"

Surah xxv 36 "And verily We gave Moses the book, and We appointed his brother Asron his helper"

Surah xx 132 "And they (the Quraush) sav.—'If he doth not bring us a sign from his Lord (we will not believe)' What I hath not an ev.dent demonstration come unto them in the former pages?"
Sürsh zhu. 43 "And ask those of Our Apostles whom We have sent before thee, whether We have appointed any besides the Mercaful, as a God whom they should wor-ebîp "

Sûrah xu 111 "It is not a story fabri cated, but an attestation of (the revelation) which is before it, and an explanation of every matter, a guide and a mercy to the people that believe."

Surah xi 17, 18 "These are they for whom there is no portion in the next life but fire and that which they have done shall perish therein, vain will that be which they have wrought What! (shall such a one be equal unto hun) who proceedeth upon a plain direction from his Lord, and a witness from him (** from the Lord) attendeth him, and before hum (or it) is the Book of Moses a guide and a mercy

Sürah xi 8 "And verily We gave Moses the book, and they fell to variance regarding And had not the word gone forth from thy Lord surely the matter had been decided between them, and verily they are in perplexing doubt concerning the same"

Suran x. 87. " And this Qur'an is not such that it could have been fabricated by other than God, but it is an attentation of that (i.e of those Scriptures) which precede it, and an explanation of the book,—there is no doubt therein,—from the Lord of creation. What I will they say, he (Muhammad) hath forged nt? Say,—then bring a Surah like unto it " Surah x 98 "If then art in doubt regarding that which We have sent down unto thee, then ask those who read the book (revealed) before thee Verly the truth hath come unto thee from thy Lord, be not therefore amongst those that dorbt "

Sürah vi 20 "Those to whom We have given the hook recognize him as they recognise their own sons. They that have destroyed their own souls, these believe not '

Suran vi 90 "These are they to whem We have given the book, and wisdom, and prophecy, and if these (the Quraish) dishelieve the same, verily We have given it in trust unto a people who are not disbelievers therein These are they whom God hatl. guided, wherefore persevere in the guidance of them '

Surah vi 92 'And they do not estimate God with a inst estimation when they say, God hath not sent down -(1 e resealed, anything to Man Say who sent down the book, which Moses brought, a light and a direction to mankind ! Ye (var read they) make (or transcribe) it upon sheets of paper which we (or they) show, and ye (or they) conceal much and we are taught that which ye knew not, neither did your fathers Say, -God then leave them to sport in their tolhes

And this book We have Sirah vi 93 revealed,-blessed,-certifying the truth of that (revelation) which procedeth it, and that thou mightest admonish the people of the city (Makkah) and those around it

Surah vi 114 "He it is that both sont down to you the book, explaining (all things,) and those to whom We have given the book know that it (the (htr'an) bath been sent down from thy Lord in truth Wherefore, he not thou (O Muhammud) among those that doubt "

Sürah vi 124 'And when a verse cometh unto them, they say,--We will not believe until there is brought unto us (a revelation) like unto that which the apostles of God brought "

Surah vi 154 "Then We gave Moses the book complete as to whatever is excellent, and an explanation of every matter, and a direction and a mercy, if haply they might believe in the meeting of their Lord

Surah vi 155 "And this book (the Qui un) We have sent down,-blessed, wherefore follow it, and fear God, if haply ye may find mercy, lest ye should say - Verily the Scripture bath been revealed to two people (the Jews and Christians) before us, and we are ignorant of their reading, -or lest ye should say,-If the Scripture had been reveiled to us, we surely would have followed its direction better than they, and now verily a clear composition hath come unto you from your Lord, a direction and mercy," acc.

Sürah xxviii 44 "And verily We gave Moses the book, after that We had destroyed the former generations,—an enlightenment unto mankind, and a direction, and a meley, if haply they might be admonished'

Surah xxviii 47 "And thou wert not on the aide of Mount Sinai, when We called out

(to Moses,) but (thou art) a mercy from thy Lord, that thou mayest admonish a people unto whom no warner hath come before thee, if perchance they may receive admonition .and lest, if there befall them a calamity for tne evil works they have committed, they should say,—Oh Lord! if thou hadst sent unto us a prophet, we had followed thy revelations, and been of the number of the believers And now that the truth hath come unto them from us, they say, -- if there were to come (a revelation) like unto that which came unto What! do they Moses (ne should believe) not disbelieve 11 that which was given unto Moses heretofore, they say, -- two impostures that mutually assist one another, and they say, werely we reject them both Say, pring a book from God that guideth more aright than these two, if ye be true, and if they answer not," &c Surah xxviii 58 "Those to whom We have given the Scripture before it (i e before the Quran,) believe therein, and when it (the (Qur an) is 1 and unto them, they say,-We be lieve in it verily it is the truth from our Lord, surely we were Mushins from hefere Surah xxiii 25 "And verily We gave Moves the book, if haply they might be directed and We made the son of Mary and his mother a sign,' &c Sărah xx: 7 "And We sent not before thee (as Apostles) other than men whom We inspired ask, therefore, the people of the Scripture, if ye know it not"

Surah xxi 49 "And verily We gave Moses and Aaron the distinction (al-Furgan), and a light, and an admonition to the pious -those who fear their Lord in secret, and who tremble for the hour (of Judgment) This blessed admonition also We have sent down will ye therefore denv it?"

Surah xx: 105 "And verily We have written in the Pasima, after the Law, that 'my servants, the righteous, shall inherit the earth '

Sürah viil 2 "And We gave Moses the book and made it a direction to the Children of Israel, (saying)—Take ye not other than Me for a patron"

Surah xvu 4, 5, and 7 "And We declared in the book in respect of the Children of Israel,—saying, Ye shall surely work cor ruptly on the earth twice, and ye shall be elated with great arrogance. And when the threat of the first of these two (visitations) came to pass, We sent against you our servants of terrible strength, &c , and when the threat of the second (visitation) came to pass," &c

Sürah xvii 55 " And verily We have bestowed favour upon some of the prophets more than upon others, and We gave David the Psalms," &c

Surah xvii 108 "Say,-Believe in it (the Quran), or believe not,—verily they unto whom the knowledge (of Divine Revelation) hath been given anterior to it, when they hear it recited unto them, fall down upon their faces worshipping and they say, Praised be our Lord verily the promuse of our Lord s fulfilled And they fall down on their faces weeping, and it moreaseth their humility"

Surah xv. 43 "And We have not sent before thee other than men whom We have inspired,—wherefore ask the people of the beripture if ye know not (We sent them) with evident signs and books, and We have sent down unto thee the revelation, that thou high test make known to mankind that which hath been revealed to them, that haply they might reflect."

Surah xiii 45 "And those who disbelieve say,—Thou art not sent —say,—God sufficeth for a witness between me and between you, and also he with whom is the knowledge of the book"

Sürah xxix. 27 "And We gave to him (i.e. to Abrahum) Isaac and Jacob, and We placed among his descendants propliecy and the book"

Strah xxix 46 "And contend not with the people of the book (Jews and Christians) but in a generous manner, excepting those of them who act wickedly, and say,—We believe in that which hath been revealed to us, and in that which hath been revealed to you; and your God and our God is one, and we are to Him resigned"

Surah xxix. 47; "And thus have We sent down to thee the book (the Qur'ān,) and those to whom We have given the Scripture believe in it."

Sürah vii 158 'And I will shortly write down it (i.e. my mercy.) for those who fear the Lord and give alms and those who believe in our signs those who shall follow the apostle,—the illiterate prophet,—whom they shall find written (i.e. described) in the Pentateuch and in the Gospel among them, he shall command them to do that which is excellent, " &c.

Surah vii 168 "And (call to mind) when thy Lord commanded that there should certainly be sent against them (i.e. the Jews) until the day of resurrection those that would affliat them with grievous distress,—verily thy Lord is swift in vengeance, and he is surely forgiving and merciful And We dispersed them in the ea th amongst the nations, there are of them the are virtuous, and there are of them that ar not so And We proved them with blessings, and with adversities, if perchance they night return And there succeeded after them a generation that inherited the book, who receive the temporal advantage of this world, and say,-It will be forgiven unto us And if there come unto them an advantage the like thereof, they accept it. What! hath there not been taken from them the covenant of the book, that they should not say of God other than the truth, and they diligently study that which is therein."

Sürah lxxiv 30 "Over it (Hell) are nineteen angels and We have not made the guardians of the fire of her than angels, and We have not expressed their number, except as a trial to those who disbelieve, and in order that these to whom We have given the book may firmly believe, and that they who believe may increase in faith, and that these to whom We have given the book may not doubt, nor the believers"

Surah 11. 1-5 "This is the book in which there is no doubt,—a guide to the pious,—they who believe in the Unseen, and observe prayer, and spend out of that which we have provided them with,—and they who believe in that which hath been revealed unto thee, and that which hath been revealed before thee, and have faith in the life to come These walk according to the direction of their Lord, and these are the blassed"

Sürsh ii 36 "Oh Children of Israel! remember My favour wherewith I have favoured you, and fulfil My covenant —I likewise will fulfil your covenant, and fear Me, and believe in that which I have revealed, attesting the truth of the (Scripture) which is with you and be not the first to roject the same, and sell not my revelation for a small price and clothe not the truth with error, and do not conceal the truth while ye know it." Surah ii. 50 "And when We gave Moses the book and the distinction (between good and evil,—hurqan,)—if naply ye might be directed '

Sürah 11 71. "And when they (the Jews of al Madinah) meet the believers, they say,—We believe, but when they retire privately one with the other, they say,—Why do ye acquaint them with what God hath revealed to you, that they may therewith dispute with you before your Lord? What do ye not understand? Do they not know that God knoweth what they conceal as well as that which they make public"

Sürah 11 79 "What do ye (the Jews) be-

Sürah 11 79 "What do ye (the Jews) beleve in part of the book, and reject part thereof? But whosoever amongst you doeth this, his reward shall be none other than disgiace in the present life, and in the Day of Judgment they shall be cast into a more awful terment."

Sürah 11 81 'And verily We gave Moses the Book, and caused prophets to arise after him, and We gave to Jesus the Son of Mary, evident signs, and strengthened him with the Holy Spirit'

Surah ii 89 'And when a Book (ie the Qur'an) came unto them from God, attesting the truth of that (Scripture) which is with them, (although they had from before been praying for victory over those who disbe lieve), yet when that came unto them which they recognised, they rejected the same."

Sursh is 83 "And when it is said unto them,—Beheve in that which God hath revealed, they say,—We believe in that which hath been revealed unto us, and they reject that which (hath been revealed) after it, although it be the truth attesting that which is with them."

Surah ii 85 "And verily Moses came unto you with evident signs (or revelstatus), then ye took the calf," &c.

Surah is 86 "For he (Gabriel) hath caused it (the Quran) to descend upon thy heart, by the command of Ged, attesting that (Scripture) which is before it, and a direction and good tidings to the believers."

Sursh ii 169 "Verily they that conceal the Scripture which God hath revealed, and sell it for a small price - these shall eat nought but the fire in their belies, and God shall not speak unto them on the Day of Judgment, neither shall He purify them, they shall have butten torment. These are they that have bought error at the price of direction, and punishment at the price of pardon -how shall they endure the fire! this because God bath sent down the Book in truth, and they that dispute regarding the Book are in a grievous error "

Sarah n 209 "Mankind was one people, and God sent prophets as preachers of good tidings, and warners and He sent down the Scripture with them in truth, that it might decide between men in that in which they differed -and they differed not therein, exceptung those to whom it was given, after there came to them clear demonstrations, wickedly amongst themselves; and God guided those that believed to the truth con-derning which they disput, by His will," &c Surah il 254 * Of these prophets We have preferred some above others Some of them hath God spoken unto, and He hath ramed some of them to high dignity And We gave unto Josus, the Son of Mary evident signs, and We strengthened Him by the Holy Spirit. And if God had pleased, those that came after them would not have contended with one another, after the evident signs (or plain revelations) had come unto them Yet they fell to variance. And amongst them were those that believed and smongst them were those that disbelieved And if God had wished, they had not con-tended with one another, but God doeth that which pleaseth Him."

Sürah h 286 "The apostle behaveth in that which hath beco revealed unto hum from his Lord; and the tathful, everyone of them. beheveth in God, and in His angels, and in His books and in His apostles, we make no distinction between any one of his apostles."

Surah lvii 18 "And these that believe in God, and in His apostles these are the righteous, and the witnesses with their Lord . they have their reward and their light, but they that disbelieve, and accuse Our revelations of falsehood, these are the companion

of hell-fire

Surah ivn 25 "We have verily sent Our aposites with evident demonstrations, and We revealed unto them the Scripture, and the Balance, that men might observe justice, and We revealed (the use of) Iron wherein is great strength, and advantages to mankind, and in order that God might know who aseasteth him and his apostles in secret, for God as mighty and glorious. And verily We sent Noah and Abraham; and We placed amongst their posterity, prophecy and the Scripture; and amongst them were those that were rightly directed, I at many of them were Afterwards We caused Our evil-doore apostles to follow in their footsteps, and We caused Jesus, the Son of Mary, to moceed them, and We gave him the Gospel- and We put into the hearts of his followers compassion and mercy, and as to Monasticism they invented the same, -[We did not prescribe it unto them, ]-simply out of a desire to please God, but they have not observed it with a right observance And We have given those of them that believe, their reward, but many of them are evil-doers. Oh ye that behave! fear God, and believe in His prephet. He will give you a double portion of His mercy, and will create for you a Light wherein ye shall walk, and forgive you, for the Lord is lorgiving and mercuful."

Surah zevu. 1 "The unbelievers from smongst the people of the Book, and the idolaters, did not waver until there came unto them a clear—a prophet from God reading pure pages, containing right Scriptures And those to whom the Soriptures have been given did not fall to variance, until after a clear (Revelution) had come unto them and they are not commanded (in their own Scriptures) otherwise than that they should worship God rendering unto Him the orthodox worship, and that they should observe prayer, and give alms, and this is the right faith."

Surah lm 5 "The likeness of those who are charged with the Law (the Tourat), and do not discharge (the obligations of) it, is as the likeness of the Ass laden with books first is the likeness of the people which rejecteth the signs of God, and God doth net guide the unjust people."

Strait xivid. 28. "Muhammad is the prophet of God, and those who follow him are fleroe against the unbelievers, but compassionate among themselves. Thun mayest see them bowing down, prostrating thems lives, seeking the favour of God and his pleasure Their signs are in their faces from the marks of their prostration. This is the likeness of them in the Pentatouch and the likeness of there in the Gospel,—as a seed which putteth forth its stalk and strengtheneth it, and swelleth and rasth ou its stem, and delighteth the sower thereof, that the unbelievers may be undignant therest."

Sürah izi 6; " And when Jesus, the Son of Mary, said -O children of Israel, verily I am an Apostle of God unto you, attesting that which is before me of the Tourst, and giving glad tidings of an apostle that shall come after me, whose name is Ahmad (the Praised)"

Surah IV 48 "Hast thou not seen those to whom We have given a portion of the beilpture?—they buy error, and desire that ye may err from the way and God best knoweth your energies. God sufficet's for a patron, and God sufficeth for a helper those who profess Judaism there are that dislocate words from their places and say-"We have heard; -and, have disobeyed', and, do thou hearken without hearing,' and, · look upon us', twisting with their tongues, and reviling the faith. And if they had said, we have beard and obeyed', and, hearken', and, 'look upon us', it had been better for them and more upright but God hath oursed them for thour unbelief, and they shall not believe, excepting a fer O ye unto whom the Scriptures have been given! believe in what We have revealed attesting that (Scripture) which is with you, before We delace your countenances, and turn them front backwards, or curse them as We cursed those who (broke) the Sabbath, and the command of the Lerd was fulfilled."

Surah iv. 58 "Hast thou not seen those who faticy that they believe in that which hath been revealed unto thee, and in that which hath been revealed before thee? They desire to go for a mutual decision unto the idel Jaghat yet verily they have been com-manden to dimbelieve therein, and Satan desireth to decore them into a wide deception "

Strain iv 180 "To God belongs whatever is in the heavens and in the earth, and verily We commanded those to whom the Scripture was given before you, and you likewise,-Fear God, and, if ye disbeheve, verily to God belongeth whatsoever is in the heavens and m the earth "

Sürah 1v 185 - "O ye that believe! believe in God and in His prophet, and in the book which He hath revealed to His prophet, and in the book which He revealed from before, and whoever disbelieves in God, and in His angels, and in His books, and in His prophets, and in the last day, verify he hath wandered into a wide error ,

Surah iv. 149, "Verily they that reject God and His apostles, and seek to make a distinction between God and His sportles, and say,-We believe in a part, and we reject a part, and seek to take a path between the same, these are mudels in reality, and We have prepared for the infidels an ignomimous punishment But they that believe in God and in his apostles, and make no distinction between any of them, to these We shall surely give their reward, and God is forgiving and merciful. The people of the book will ask thee that thou cause a book to descend upon them from the heavens, and verily they asked Moses for a greater thing than that," &c

Surah iv 161 "But those of them that are grounded in knowledge, and the faithful believe in that which hath been revealed unto thee, and n that which hath been revealed before thee And those that observe prayer, and give alms, and the believers in God and in the last day, unto these shall We give a great reward Verily We have re-realed our will unto thee, as We revealed our will unto Abraham, and Ishmael, and Isaac, and Jacob, and the Tribes, and Jesus, and Job, and Jones, and Aaron, and Solomon, and We gave unto David the Psalms, and Apostles, whom We have already made mention of unto thee , and Apostles, of whom We have not made mention unto thee, and God spake with Moses in open discourse," &c

Burnh iv 169 "Ye people of the book! commut not extravagance in your religion, and say not of God other than the truth For verily the Mesalah, Jesus, the Son of Mary, is an apostle of God, and His word which he placed in Mary, and a spirit from Time ( Wherefore believe in God, and in His apostle, and say not,—"the Trinity";—re-frem it will be better for you For verily God is one God,—far exalted is He above the possibility that there should be unto Him pregeny! to Him belongeth whatever is in the heavens and in the earth, and He sufficeth as e guardum."

"God! there is no God Strah in, 2 but He, the living, the eternal He bath eaused to descend upon thee the Scripture in truth, attesting that which is before it and He sent down the Tourst and the Gospel from before for the guidance of mankind, and He sant down the Furgan. Verily they that reject the signs of God, to them shall be a fearful punishment. And God is mighty, a God of vengeance

Sürah III. 19 "And those to whom the book was given, did not fall to variance until after that the knowledge came unto them, wickedly among themselves"

Strah in 28. "Seest thou not those to whom a pertion of the Scripture hath been given? They were called unto the book of God, that it might decide between them Then a party of them turned away, and went aside That was because they say,—the fire shall not touch us. but for a limited number of days. And that which they have devised hath deceived them in their religion."

Sürah in 48 "And (God) shall teach Him (Jesus) the Scripture, and wisdom, and the Tourat, and the Gospel,—and (shall send Him as) an Apostle unto the Children of Israel (Jesus shall suy) Verniy I have come unto you——attesting the truth of that which (Scripture revealed) before me in the Tourat, and that I may make lawful unto you a part of that which is forbidden unto you."

Surah in 64 "O ye people of the Book! why do ve dispute concerning Abraham?—seeing that neither the Tourat noi the Gospel was revealed until after him, do ye not understand? Ah! ye are they which dispute concerning that of which ye have know ledge why, therefore, do ye dispute concerning that of which ye have no knowledge? and God knoweth, but we know not!

and God knoweth, but ye know not' Surah in. 68 "A party of the People of the Book desire to cause thee to go astray but they shall not cause (any) to go astray, excepting their own souls, and they perceive it not. Oh People of the Book! why do ye reject the signs of God, while ye bear testi-mony (thereto)? Opeople of the Book! why do ye clethe the truth with that which is false, and hide the truth, while ye know (it) and a party of the people of the book say -Believe in that which is sent down unto those that believe, in the early part of the day, and reject (it, in) the latter part thereof, if haply they may turn back and, believe not (any) excepting him that followeth your religion Say, Verily the direction is the direction one (i.e. God, that there should be given unto one (i.e. -Verily the direction is the direction of to Muhammad a revelation) like unto that which hath been given unto you. Or, will they dispute with you before your Lord? say,-Verily favour is in the hand of God He greath it unto whomsoever He pleaseth and God : widely comprehensive (in His mercy) and wise."

Sursh in 77 "And verily amongst them is a party that twist their tongues in (reading) the book, that ye may think it is out of the book, though it is not out of the book, and they say.—'It is from God,' and it is not from God, and they speak a 's leshood concerning God, knowingly"

Sürah iii 78 "It becometh not a man that God should give him a book, and wisdom, and prophecy, and that he should then say to mankind, Be worshippers of me besides God, but rather, Be ye perfect, masmuch as ye know the book, and masmuch as ye study 17"

Sürah III 80 "And (call to mind) when God made a covenant with the prophets, (saying) This verily is the book and the wisdom which I have given unto you, thereafter shall come an Apostle attesting the truth of that (Scripture) which is with you ye shall surely believe in him, and assist him."

Sürah iii 93 "All food was lawful to the Children of Israel, excepting that which Israel made unlawful to himself, befere the Tourat was revealed. Say—Bring hither the Tourat, and read it, if ye be true. And whoever contriveth a he concerning God after that appears they are the transcerssors."

that, surely they are the transgressors " Surah in 99 "Say, O ve People of the Book! why do ye disbelieve in the signs of God, and God is witness of that which ye do?
Say, O ye People of the Book! why do ye crooked, while ye are witnesses?"

Surah in 113 "They are not all alike Amongst the People of the Book there is an upright race that read the signs (or revelations) of God in the night sesson, and they bow down worshipping. They believe in God and the last day, and command that which is just and dissuade from that which is wicked, and they make haste in doing good works. These are the virtuous ones."

Sarah in 119 "Behold, ye are they that love them (the Jows) and they do not love you, and ye believe in the entire Scripture"

Surah m 184 "They who say that God hath made a covenant with us, to the effect that we should not believe on an apostle until he cometh unto us with a sacrince to be consumed by fire—say.—Verily apostles have come unto you before me, with evident demonstrations, and with that of which ye speak Why, therefore, have ye slain them, if we be true? and if they accuse these of imposture, verily the apostles before thee have been accused of imposture, who came with evident demonstrations, and the Scriptures, and the enlightening book"

Surah in 188 "And when God took a covenant from those to whom the book was given,—start they should unfold the same to mankind, and that they should not conceal it, and they threw it (the covenant) behind their backs, and sold it for a small price, and woeful is that which they have sold it for, think not that they who rejoice in that which they have done, and desire to be praised for that which they have not done shall escape from punishment. To them shall be a grievous punishment.

shall be a grievous punishment."

Sürah ni 199 "And verily of the People of the Book there are those who believe in God, and in that which hath been revealed to you, and in that which hath been revealed to them, submissive unto God, they sell not the signs of God for a small price. These are they who have their reward with their Lord, for God is swift in taking account."

Surah v 14-16 "And for that they have broken their covenant, We have cursed them, and We have made their hearts hard, they dislocate the word from its place, and they have forgotten a part of that whereby they were admonished Thou wilt not cease to discover decest in them, excepting a few of them But pardon them, and forgive, for God loveth the beneficent And of those that say, We are Christians, we have taken a covenant from them, and they have forgotten a part of that whereby they were admonished Wherefore We have placed enmity and hatred between them, until the Day of Judgment, and God will surely then declare unto them that which they have wrought O people of the Book! verily our apostle hath come unto you, he shall make manifest unto you much of that which ye have hidden of the book, and he shall pass over much"

Sürah v 47 "O thou apostle! let not those greve thee who make haste after infidelity from amongst them that say, 'We believe,' with their mouths, but their hearts believe not And from amongst the Jews there are that spy out in order to tell a falsehood, they spy out for another people that come not unto thee. They dislocate the word from out of its place. They say ' If this be given you, then receive it—but if it be not given you, then beware'"

Surah v 50 "And how will they make thee their judge, since they have beside them the Tourst, in which is the command of God? Then they will turn their back after that and these are not believers Verily We have revealed the Tourst, therein is guidance and light The prophets that submitted themselves to God judged thereby those that were Jews, and the doctors and priests (did the same), in accordance with that which was confided to their charge of the book of God, and they were witnesses thereof Wherefore fear not man, but fear Me, and sell not thou the signs of God for a small price And he that doth not judge by that which God hath revealed, verily they are the unbelievers. And We have written for them, -verily life for life, and eye for eye, and nose for nose, and ear for ear, and tooth for tooth, and for wounding retaliation, and he that remitteth the same as alms it shall be an atonement unto him And he that judgeth not by that which God hath sent down, they are the transgressors And We caused Jeaus, the Son of Mary, to follow in their footsteps, attesting the Scripture of the Tourât which preceded it, and We gave Him the Gospel, wherein is guidance and light, which attests the Tourat that preceded it, and a direction and an admonition to the pious,-that the people of the Gospel might judge according to that which God hath revealed therein, and he that doth not judge according to that which God hath revealed, verily they are the flagitions ones And We have revealed unto thee the book in truth, attesting that (Scripture) which precedeth it, and a custodian (or a witness) thereof Wherefore judge between them in accordance with that which God hath revealed, and follow not their vain desires (by swerving) away from that which hath come unto thee To every one of you have We given a law and a way, and if God had pleased, He had made you all of one faith,—but (He hath not done so, in order) that He might try you in that which He hath given you."

Surah v 68 "Say, O people of the Book! is there any other cause of your enmity against us, but that we believe m God, and in that which hath been revealed unto us, and in that which hath been revealed from before?-but the most of you are evil doers "

Sürah v 77 "Say —O ye people of the Book! ye are not grounded upon anything, until ye set up (or observe) the Tourst and the Gospel, and that which hath been revealed unto you from your Lord "

Surah v 91 "Thou wilt surely find the most bitter amongst mankind in their hatred towards those that believe to be the Jews and the idolaters And thou wilt surely find the most friendly inclined amongst them towards the believers, to be those who say, We are Christians That is because there are amongst them clergy and monks, and they are not arrogant When they hear that which hath been revealed to the prophet, thou will see their eyes flowing with tears because of that which they recognise of the truth. They say, O our Lord! we believe, write us down with the witnesses, and what should hinder us that we should not believe in God, and in that which hath come unto us of the truth? and we desire that our Lord should introduce us amongst the righteous God hath rewarded them for that which they have said, with gardens through which flow rivulets They shall be for ever therein and that is the reward of the virtuous."

Sürah v 119 "And (call to mind) when (lod said,-O Jesus, Son of Mary! remember My favour towards thee, and towards thy Mother, when I strengthened thee with the Holy Spirit, that thou shouldest speak unto man, in the cradle, and also in mature age, and I taught thee the Scriptures, and wiedom, and the Tourat, and the Gospel, and when thou madest of clay in the form of a bird by My command, and thou blewest thereupon, and it became a bird by My command, and thou healedst the blind and the leper by My command, and when thou didst raise the dead by My command And when I spake hy inspiration unto the apostles, saying -Believe in Me, and in My apostle (se Jesus.) they said, -We believe, bear witness that we are true believers '

Sürah lxv: 18 "And Mary the daughter of Imran, who preserved her virginity, and We breathed into her of Our spurt, and she attested the words of her Lord and His

Scriptures, and was amongst the pious'
Surah ix. 113 "Verily, God hath bought from the believers their selves and their wealth, on the condition of paradise for them if they fight in the ways of God -and whe ther they slay or be slain the promise of God thereupon is true in the Tourst, and in the Gospel, and in the Qur'an." #### OPTION [KHIYAR]

OBDINATION There is no ceremony in Islam corresponding to the Christian ordination Sometimes the Imam of a mesque is appointed by the cinef man of position binding a turban round his head. In Central Asia, Maulawis of reputation certify as to the learning and ability of their disciples by binding a turban on their heads and authorizing them to teach But it is not a custom' of the Mushm rehgion

ORNAMENTS Meh are prohibited from the use of ornaments of gold such as rings and the like, because they are expressly formidden by the Prophet Orns ments of silver are likewise unlawful, but exceptions are made with respect to signet rings girdles, or swords, which may be ornamented with silver. (Hiddych, vol. iv. p. 92)
Ibn Zuberr says the Prophet condemned the use of little bellacse ornaments for children, for he sand there was a davil in every bell Thu Malik says the Prophet forbade the wearing of gold runs, and he considered it just as had to use gold ornaments. (Mishket, book xx. ch il.)

The Wahhahis condemn the use of ornaments and silk dresses

ORPHANS. Arabic yatim (par), pl yatānā In Nulazamadan law, the term is used for a child whose father is Muhammad gave very special instructions m the Qur'an as to the treatment of orphana.

See Surah iv 2-7 -

'And give to the orphans their property and substitute not worthless things of your own for their valuable ones, and enjoy not their property in addition to your own; verily this is a great crime, and if we are appre-heneive that ye shall not deal fairly with orphans, then, of other women who seem good in your eyes, marry but two, or three, or four, and if yo still fear that ye shall not act equitably, then one only, or the slaves whom ye have acquired, this will make justice on your part easier And give women their dowry as a free gift, but if of their own free will they kindly give up aught thereof to you, then enjoy it as convenient and profitable. And entrust not to the mea-pable the substance which God rath placed with you as a means of support, but maintain them therewith, and clothe them, and speak to them with kindly speech. And make trial of orphans until they reach the age of marriage, and if ye perceive in them a sound judgment, then hand over their substance to them, but consume ye it not pro fusely and hastily Only because they have attained their majority. And less the rich guardian not even touch it, and let him who is poor, then use it for his support with discretion. And when ye make over their substance to them, then take witnesses in their presence God also taketh a sufficient Account."

According to al-Baizawt and the Jalalan, the Muslim commentators understand these verses differently Mr. Sale says the true mearing seems to be Muhammad, advising his followers that if they found they should wrong the female orphans under their care, either by merrying them against their molinations, for the sake of their riches or beauty, or by not using or maintaining them so well as they ought by reason of their having already saveral wives, they should rather choose to marry other women, to avoid all occasion of sin. Others say that when this passage was revealed, many of the Arabians, fearing trouble and temptation, refused to take upon them the charge of, orphans, and yet multiplied wives to a great excess and used them ill or, as others write, gave themselves up to formication, which occasioned the pessage And according to these, its meaning must be either that if they feared they could not act justly towards orphans, they had as great reason to apprehend they could not deal equitably with so many wives, and therefore are commanded to marry but a certain number, or else, that since fornication was a crime as well as a wronging of orphans, they ought to avoid that also by marrying according to their abilities

PARACLETE [FARAQLIT]

The Muhammadan PARADISE Paradise is called al-Januah (Link), " the garden," pl. jannat, in Arabic, and Bihisht ( ), in Persian, the word at Firdaus or Paradise, being restricted to one region in the celestial abodes of bliss There are eight heavens or paradises men-tioned in the Qur'an, and although they appear to be but eight different names for the place of bliss, Muhammadan divines have held them to be eight different stages

They are as follows (see Ghyasu 14-Luykah) -

i Januatu "I-Khuld (Süratu I Furqan, xxv 16), The Garden of Eternity

2 Dāru 's-Salām (Sūratu 'l-An'ām, vi '127),

The Dweiling of Peace 3 Daru 'l-Qarar (Süratu 'l-Mu'mın, xl 42),

The Dwelling which abideth
4. Jannatu 1-'Adn (Süratu 1-Bara'ah, ix

6 Jannatu 'n-Na'im (Süratu I Mü'ıdah, v 70), The Gardens of Delight

7 'llliyûn (Sûratu 't Tatfif, laxani 18)

8 Jannatu I-Firdaus (Süratu I Kahi, avni 107), The Gardons of Paradise

These eight stages are spoken of as eight doors in the Mishket, book ii. oh. 1) The sensual delights of Muhammad's

Paradise are proverbal, and they must have exercised a considerable influence upon the minds of the people to whom he made known his mission. There are frequent allusions to them in the Qur'an The following are spe-omen passages — Süratu "l-Inaan (lxxvi), 12-22 — God bath tewarded their constancy, with Paradise, and silken robes, reclining therein on bridal couches, nought shall they know of sun or piercing cold: its shades shall close over them, and low shall its fruits hang down and vessels of silver and goblets like flagons shall be borne round among them. flagous of silver whose measure themselves shall mete. And there shall they be given to drink of the cup tempered with sanjabil (ginger) from the fount therein whose name is Salsabil (i.e. the softly flowing) Blooming youths go When thou lookest at round among them. them, thou wouldst deem them scattered pearls, and when thou seest this, thou wilt see delights and a vast kingdom, their clothing green silk robes and rich brocade with silver bracelots shall they be adorned and drink of a pure beverage shall their Lord give them. This shall be your recompense."

Süratu I-Waqi'ah (lv1), 12-39 "In gardens of delight, a crowd of the former and a few of the later generations on inwrought couches reclining on thom face to face, bloom ing youths go round about them with goblets and ewers and a cup of flowing wine, their brows ache not from it, nor fails the sense and with such fruits as shall please them best, and with flesh of such birds as they shall long for, and thours shall be the Houris (Arabic hū ), with large dark eyes, like pearls hidden in their shells, in recompense for their labours past No vain discourse shall they hear therein, nor charge of sin, but only cry Unfailing, unfor-'Peace! Peace!' hidden, and on lofty couches and of a rare creation have we made the Hours, and we have made them ever yirgins dear to their spouses and of equal age, for the people of the right hand, a crowd of the former, and a crowd of the later generations'

Suratu 'r Rahman (lv), 54-56 "On couches with linings of brecade shall they recline, and the fruit of the two gardens shall be within their easy reach Therein shall be the damsels with return glances, whom neither man nor jum hath touched before them

Süratu 7 Muhammad (xlvu) 16, 17 "Therein are rivers of water which corrupt not rivers of milk, whose taste changeth not and rivers of wine, delicious to those who quaff it, and rivers of clarified honey. and therem are all kinds of fruit for them from their Lord."

The descriptions of the celestial regions and the enjoyments promised to the faithful are still more minutely given in the traditional sayings of the Prophet, see the Mishkāt, book xin ch xni

Abū Musa relates that "the Apostle of God said, Verily there is a tent for every Muslim in Paradise it is made of one pearl. its interior empty, its breadth 60 kos, and in every corner of it will be his wives, and they shall not see one another The Muslim shall love them alternately," &c

Abti Savid relator that "the Apostic of God said, 'He who is least amongst the people of Paradise, shall have eighty thousand slaves, and seventy two women, and has a tent pitched for him of pearls, rubies, and Those who die in the world emeralâs young or old, are made of thirty years of age, and not more, when they enter Paradise

Abu Said also relates that the Apostle of God said, 'Verily a man it Paradise rechines upon seventy cushions before he turns on his other side. Then a woman of Paradise comes to him and pats him on the shoulder, and the man sees his face in her cheek, which is brighter than a looking glass, and verily her most inferior pearl brightens the east and west. Then the woman makes a salan to him, which he returns and the man says, 'Who are you' "and she replies "I im of the number promised of God for the virtuous" And verily she will have seventy garments, and the man's eves will be fixed on them, till he will see the marrow of the houss of her legs through the carees of them and she will bare crown on ner head, the meanest pearl of which would give light between the east and west

One of the attractions of Paradissus the river ✓ Kausar [KAUMAK] According to Anas, 'the Apostle of God vaid it is a river which God has given me in Paradise, its water is whiter than milk, and sweden that hones, and on its waters are buds where relace the the necks of camels

The following is an instan e of the way in which the Prophet endeavoured to suit me paradise to the taste of the people -

Abu Aryub saye, " In Arub orme to the Prophet and said '() Apostle of God' I am fond of horses, are there any it. Paradise? The Prophet replied, 'If you are taken into Paradise, you will get a ruby horse, with two wings, and you will mount him, and he will carry von wherever von wish Abu Hurairah sail, Verily the Apostle of God said, when an Arab was sisting mear him, that a man of the people of Paradise will ask permission of his Lord to cultivate land and God will say Have you not everything you could wish for? What will you cultivate? The man will say, 'Yes, everything is present, but I am fond a cultivating,' Then he will be permitted to cultivate, and he will sow, and, quicker than the twinkling of an eye, it will grow, become ripo, and be reaped, and it will stand in sheaves like mountains."

The apologists for Islam, Carlyle for ex ample, have suggested that the sensual delights of Muhammad s paradise may, after all, be taken in a figurative sense, as the Reve lation of St John or the Song of Solomon It is quite true that such an interpretation is hinted at in the Akhlaq t-Jalali (Thompson's Egyptions (vol.: p 84) says that a binelim of some learning considered the descriptions of Paradise figurative, but such 4 not the view held by Muhammadan doctors, whether Sunni, Shi'sh, or Wahhabi. They are all agreed as to the literal interpretation of the sensual enjoyments of the Muslim paradise, and very many are the books written giving minute particulars of the joys in store for the faithful

Islam, true to its anti-Obristian character, preaches a sensual abode of bliss, in opposition to the express teaching of our Lord in Matt xxii. 30 "They neither marry nor are giver in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven

Were proof needed, to show that the Prophet tanglit a real and literal interpretation of the sensual dehigh s of the abodes of bliss, a tradition or high authority is found in the Sahihu Mustim (p. 879) vide also Mishidi, book xxiii ch 13), in which the Prophet goes to some trouble to explain the sanitary laws of the heaven't kingdon, in the most hteral

hr William Muir says "It is remarkable that the notices in the Coran of this voluptuous Paradise are almost entirely confined to a t me when, whatever the tendency of his dosnes. Mahomet was hving cheste and tem perate with a single wife of threescore years of age Gibbon characteristically observes that Mahomet has not specified the male companions of the female elect, lest he should either alarm the jealousy of the former hus bands, or disturb their felicity by the suspicion of an everlasting marriage. The remark, made in raillery, is preguant with reason, and aims a fatal blow at the Paradise of Islam Faithful women will renew their youth in heaven as well as faithful men why should not their good works ment an equal and a salogous reward? But Mahomet shrank trom this legitimate conclusion. It is note worth that in the Medina Suras-that is in all the voluminous revelations of the ten venus following the Hegira-women are only twice referred to as one of the delights of Parad se and on both occasions in these simple words - and to them (believers) there shall be therein pure wives (Surah it 28, burah iv 60) Was it that satiety had then left no longings unfulfilled, or that a closer contact with Judanesh had repressed the budding pruriency of his revelation, and covered with confusion the picture of a sensual Paradise which had been drawn at Mecca?

(Infe of Mahomet new eq. p 82 and note)
So W Mur has omitted a third passage, Sürah ni. 18, where "women of stainless purity" are spoken of, but it is remarkable bow much more restrained are the Prophet's descriptions of Paraduse in his later revela-For example, Surah xmi 28, 24, 85 -

Gardens of Eden-into which they shall enter together with the just of their fathers, and then wives and their descendants, and the angels shall go in unto them at every portal Peace be with you, say thoy because The myers ye haverendured all things flow beneath its bowers, its food and its shades are perpetual."

PARDON FOR SIN The words used to express pardon for sins on the part of the Almighty, are Afw ( Ac), Magh firah (مغفرة), and Ghufran (مغفرة) The act of seeking pardon is Istighfar (استغفار)

The following is the teaching of the Qur'an

on the subject .-

Surah lii. 82, 38 "God's is what is in the heavens and what is in the earth, that He may reward those who do evil with evil, and those who do good with good. Those who shun great sine and inquities-all but venial sins,-verily thy Lord is of ample forg178"055

Surah lavn 12 "Verily those who fear their Loid in secret, for them is forgiveness and a great reward'

Sûrah xxxiii 71 "He (God) will correct you for your works and pardon you for your uns, for he who obeys God and His Apostle has attained a mighty happiness"

Surah xxxv 8 "Those who ushieve and do right, for them as forgiveness "

Surab viii 29 "O ye who believel if ye fear God, He will make for you a discrimi nation, and will cover your offences and will forgive you, for God is the Lord of mighty grave "

Repentance is expressed in the Qur'an by the word Taubah ( ), which the Imam an Nawawi says means "turning the heart from sin ' (Commentary on Sahtha Muslim, vol is p 854) The word frequently occurs in the Qur'an. For example — Surah iv 20 "If they repent and amena, then let them be Vernly God relenteth He is merciful!

Süreh xxv 71 "Whor hath repented and hath done what is right, verily it is he who turneth to God with a true conversion" (metāb)

The teaching of the traditions on the subject of repentance and pardon for mn is in some places exceedingly wild, as will be seen from the following selections taken from the sayings of the Prophet given in the Mishkāt, hook z ch ui -"There was a man of the children of Israel, who killed ninety-nine people, after which he came out, asking if his repentance would be accepted, and having met a monk, he asked hun 'Is there acceptance for my repentance.' The monk said 'No' Then the man killed the monk, and stood asking people about the approval of his repentance. And a man said to him, Come to such a vil-lage. Then the signs of immediate doubth were upon him, and he tried to reach the village upon his knees, and died on the way Then the angels of mercy and punishment disputed about Lim Then God ordered the village towards which the man had attempted to go to be near to the corpse, and the village which he had iled from to be far away Then Ged said to the angels, from him 'Compute, and measure the distance between And it was found that the the two villages village towards which he was going was nearbr to him by one span. And he was par doned"

"An mossesut sinner has not simed that has asked pardon, although he may have sinned seventy times a day, because asking pardon is the coverer of sin.

"God has said, 'Verily if you come before Me with sins equal to the dust of the earth, and then come before Me without associating anything with Me verily I will come before you with the pardon equal to the dust of the earth."

"Verily God accepts of the repentance of His servant as long as as soul does not come into his throat"

"I swear by God that verify I ask pardon of God and repent before Him more than seventy times daily"

h Verily my heart is veiled with melan-chely, and verily I ask pardon of God one hundred times a day '

"Verily, when a true believer commits a sin, a black spet-is created in his heart; and if he repents and asks pardon of God, the black spot is rubbed off his heart, but if he increases his sins, the black spot increases. so that it takes hold of the whole heart Then this spot is a rust which God has men tioned in the Qur'an, 'their hearts became rusty from their works'"

"Verily there were two men of the childress of Israel who had a friendship for each other One of them was a worshipper of God, and the other a sinner The worshipper of God said to the sinner Give up sinning He said, 'Leave me to my Lord' At length he found him committing a very great sin, and sind, Give up sinning. The sinner said, Leave me to my Lord Were you seut as a guard over me?' The worshipper said, 'I swear by God He will not always forgive your sins, nor will He bring you into Paraduse, Then God sent ar angel to them who took both their souls and they both appeared before God together And God said to the sinner, 'Come mto Paradise' And he said to the other 'What, can you prevent My compassion on my servant?' He said, 'I cannot, O my Lord' And God said to the angels 'Carry him to the fire.'"

PARENTAGE The periods of six months and of two years are fixed as the shortest and longest periods of pregnancy, and consequently any child born within those periods is assumed to be the child of the woman's husband, even though she be either a widow or divorced This strange ruling of Muslim law is founded on a declaration of ·Ayushah who is related to have said, "The child does not remain in the womb of the mother beyond two years '

The Iman ash-Shaff's has said the longest period of pregnancy extends to four years (Hamilton's Huldyah, vol. 1 p. 883.)

If a person acknowledge the parentage of a child who is able to give an account of himself, and the ages of the parties are such as to admit of the one being the child of the other, and the parentage of the child be not well known to any person, and the child him self verify the statement, the parentage is established (Ibid, vol. in p 169)

PABENTS, Duty to, is frequently engamed in the Qur'au, for example, Surah xvil. 24, 25. "Thy Lord bath decreed that ye shall not serve other than Him, and that ye shall be kind to your parents, whether one or both of them reach old age with thee, and ye must not say, 'Fie' (Uff') nor grumble at them, but speak to them a generous speech And lower to them the wing of humility out of compassion, and say, 'O Lord ! have compassion on them, as they brought me up when I was little!"

PARISH In connection with the mosques of cities and villages there are appointed districts not unlike English parishes Within these districts the linem of the mosque is held responsible for the marriages sud bursals of the people, and his services can be claimed for these ceremonies, for which he receives customary fees Any other Maulawi performing marriages or burials, is expected to obtain the permission of the Imam of the parish In fact, the position of the Imam of a mosque is similar to that of a beneficed clergyman He receives the marriage and burial fees, fees at the ceremony of circumcision, thank offerings on the birth of a child, or on recovery from sickness, presents on the festival days, &c, as well as the wagf, or endowment, of the mosque

PARSI [MAJUS] PARTURITION NIFAS

PATIENCE Arabic subr (,...), is frequently enjoined in the Qur'an, eg Surah it 148; "O ye who believe! seek help through patience and prayer, verily God is with the patient

PESTILENCE Arabic toʻun (west), waba' (ve) According to the teaching of Muhammad in the traditions, a postilence is a punishment sent by God, it is also an occasion of martyrdom, and that Muslim will abides in the place where he is at the time of a pestilence, and dies of it, is admitted to the rank of a martyr It is also enjoined that Musalmans shall not enter a place where there is a pestilence raging, but remain where they are until it is passed (Michkat, book v ch 1)

PHARAOH Arabic Fur'aun Heb פַּרעה. The King of Egypt in the time of Moses Considered by all Muhammadans to be the vry personnication of wickedness

Al-Baizāwi says Firtaun was the common title of the kings of Rgypt, just as Osean was that of the Roman Emperors, and that the name of Pharaoh, according to some. was al-Walid ibn Mus ab, and according to others Mus'ab ibn Raiyam, and according to others Qabus, and that he hved 620 years Abulfida' says that Mus'ab being 170 years old, and having no child, whilst he kept his herds, he saw a cow calf, and heard her say at the same time "O Mus'ab, be not grieved, thou shalt have a son, a wicked son, who shall be cast into hell," and that this son was the wicked Firaun of the time of Moses

In the Qui'au, Surah xxxviii 11, he is surnamed Firmun Zū 'l-Autād, or "Pharach the master of the Stakes, who called the Apostles hars" Some say the stakes refer to the strength of his kingdom, others that they were instruments of torture and death which he used

Pharach was drowned in the Red Sea, and the commentators say that Gabriel would not let his body sink, but that it floated as a sign and a warning to the children of Israel. (See Quran, Surah x 90-92)
A further account of Pharach, as given in the Qui'an, will be found in the article on The Pharach of Joseph's time is said to be Raiyan ibn al Walid al-'Amliqi, the ancestor of the renowned Pharach in the time of Moses [MOSES]

PHILOSOPHY, MUSLIM Arabic falsafah (فلسغة), or ʻrlmu l-hıkmak The following account of Arabian philosophy is taken with permission from Professor Ueberweg's History of Philosophy, translated by G S Morris, M A

"The whole philsophy of the Arabians was only a form of Aristotelianism, tempered more or less with Neo-Platonic conceptions.
The medical and physical science of the Greeks and Greek philosophy became known to the Arabs especially under the rule of the Abassida (from A.D 750 on), when medical, and afterwards (from the time of the reign of Almamun, in the first half of the ninth century) philosophical works were translated from Greek into Syriac and Arabic by Syriac Christians The tradition of Greek philosophy was associated with that combination of Platoman and Anatotehanism which prevailed among the last philosophers of antiquity and with the study by Christian theologians of the Aristotelian logic as a formal organon of dogmatics, but in view of the rigid monotheism of the Mohammedan religion, it was necessary that the Aristotelian metaphysics, and especially the Aristotelian theology, should be more fully adopted among the Arabs than among the Neo-Platonists and Christians, and that in consequence of the union among the former of philosophical with medical studies, the works of Aristotle on natural scionce should be studied by them with especial zeal.

"Of the Arabian philosophers in the East, the most important were Alkendi (al-Kindi), who was still more renowned as a mathematician and astrologer, Alfarabi (al-Fărâbi), who adopted the Neo-Platonic doctrine of emanation; Avicenna (Abū Sinā), the representative of a purer Aristotelianism and a man who for centuries, even among the Christian scholars of the later mediæval centuries stood in the highest consideration as a philosopher, and, still mòre, as a teacher of medicine, and, finally, Algazel (al-Ghazzālı), who maintained a philosophical skepticism in the interest of theological orthodoxy

"The most important Arabian philosophers in the West were Avempace (Ibn Badja), Abubacer (Abu Bakr Ibn Tufail), and Averroes (Ibn Rashid) Avempace and Abubacer dwell in their works on the idea of the independent and gradual development of man. Abubacer (in his 'Natural Man') develops this idea in a spirit of opposition to positive religion, although he affirms that positive religion and philosophical doctrine pursue the same end, namely, the union of the human intellect with the divine Averroës, the celebrated commentator of Aristotle, interprets the doctrine of the latter respecting the active and the passive intellect in a sense which is nearly pantheistic and which excludes the idea of individual immortality He admits the exist-ence of only one active intellect, and affirms that this belongs in common to the whole human race, that it becomes temporarily par ticularized in individuals, but that each of its emanations becomes finally reabsorbed in the original whole, in which alone, therefore,

they possess unmortality
"The acquaintance of the Mohammedan Alabs with the writings of Aristotle was brought about through the agency of Syrian Christians Before the time of Mohammed. many Nestorian Syrians lived among the Arabs as physicians Mohammed also had intercourse with Nestonan monks Haieth Ibn Calda, the friend and physician of the Prophet, was a Nestorian. It was not, how ever, until after the extension of the Moham-medan rule over Syria and Persia, and chiefly after the Abasadas had commenced to reign (A D 750), that foreign learning, espe cially in medicine and philosophy, became gene rally known among the Arabs Philosophy had already been cultivated in those countries during the last days of Neo Platonism, by David the Armenian shout 500 AD , his Prolog to Philos and to the Isagoge, and his commentary on the Categ, in Brandis' Collection of Scholin to Arist, his works, Venice, 1828 on him of O F Neumann, Paris, 1829) and afterwards by the Syrians, especially Christian Syrians, translated Greek authors, particularly medical, but afterward philosophical authors also, first into Syriac, and then from Syriac into Arabic (or they, perhaps, made use also of earlier Syriac translations some of which are to-day extant)

"During the reign and at the instance of Almamun (AD, 818-838), the first translations of works of Aristotle into Arabic were made, under the direction of Johannes Ibn al-Batrik is the son of the Patriarch, who, according to Renan [11, p 57], is to be distinguished from Johannes Mesue, the physician), these translations, in part still extant, were regarded

"A man more worthy of mention'is Honein Ibn Ishak (Johannstins), a Nestorian, who flourished under Motewakkel, and died in Acquainted with the Syriac, Arabic, and Greek languages, he was at the head of a school of interpreters at Bagdad, to which his son Ishak Ben Honem and his nephew Hobersch-el-Asam also belonged The works not only of Aristotle himself, but also of several ancient Aristotelians (Alexander Aphrodisiensis, Themistius, and also Neo-Platonic exegetes, such as Porphyry and Ammonius), and of Galemis and others, were translated into (Syriac and) Arabic these translations, also, some of those in Arabic are still existing, but the Syriac translations are all lost (Honem's Arabic translation of the Categories has been edited by Jul Theod Zenker, Leips 1846) In the tenth century new translations, not only of the works of Aristotle, but also of Theophrastus, Akxander of Aphrodisias, Theo mistius, Syrianus, Ammonius, etc., were produced by Syrian Christians, of whom the most important were the Nestorians, Abu Baschai Mata and Jahja ben Adi, th Tagritan, as also Isa Ben Zaraa The Syriac translations (or revisions of earlier translations) by these men nave been lost, but the Arabic translations were widely circulated and have in large measure been preserved, they were used by Alfarabi, Avicenna, Averroes, and the other Arabian philosophers The Republic, Timous, and Laws of Plate, were also translated into Arabic Averroes (in Spain, about 1150) possessed and paraphrased the Rep, but he did not the Politics of Aris-totle, the book existing in MS at Paris, entitled Staset (Stynsah), 1 e Politica, 1s the spurious work De Regimine Principum s Secretum Secretorum, the Politics of Aristotle is not known to exist in Arabic Farther, extracts from the Neo Platonists, especially from Proclus, were translated into Arabic The Syrians were led, especially in consequence of their contact with the Arabe, to extend their studies beyond the Organon, they began to cultivate in the Arabic language all the branches of philosophy on the basis of Aristotle's works, and in this they were after wards followed by the Arabsthemselves, who soon surpassed their Synan teachers rabi and Avicenna were the scholars of Syrian and Christian physicians The later Syrian philosophy bears the type of the Arabian philosophy The most important representative of the former was Gregorius Barhebraus or Abulfaragins, the Jacobite, who lived in the thirteenth century, and was descended from Jewish parents, and whose compendium of the Peripatetic philosophy (Butyrum Suprentia) is still of great authority among the Syrians

"Alkendi (Abu Jusuf Jacub Ibn Eshak al
Kendi, se the father of Joseph, Jacob, son of Isaac, the Kendwan, of the district of Kendah) was born at Busra on the Persian Gulf, where later, in the tenth century, the Brothers of Purity' or the 'Sindere Brothers,' who collected m an Encyclopedia the learning then acceptable to the Arabians, were located. He lived during and after the first haif of the ninth century, dying about 870 He was renowned as a mathematician, astrologer, physician, and philosopher He composed commentaries on the logical writings of Aristotle, and wrote also on metaphysical problems. In theology he was a rationalist. His astrology was founded on the hypothesis that all things are so bound together by harmomous causal relations, that each, when completely conceived, must represent as in a mirror the whole universe.

Affarabi (Abn Nasr Mohammed hen Mo-hammed ben Tarkhan of Farab), born near the end of the ninth century, received his philosophical training mainly at Bagdad, where he also began to teach. Attached to the mystical sect of the Saft, which haid Abul Chair had founded about A v 820 (under the unmustakable raduence of Buddhism, slihough Tholuck ["Senfirmus" Berlin, 1821, and Bisithensammlung aus der Morgenland Mystik, Berlin, 1825] seeigns to it a purely Mohammedan origin), Aliarabi went at a later emeh to Alappo and Damascus, where he died A.D 950 In logie Alfarabi follows Aristotle almost without exception Whether logic is to be regarded as a part of philosophy or not depends according to Alfarabi on the greater or less extension given to the conception of philosophy, and is therefore a useless question Argumentation is the instrument by which to develop the unknown from the known, it is employed he the utens logicum, logica docens is the theory which relates to this instrument, argumentation, or which treats of it as its subject (subjectum). Yet logic also treats of single concepts (incomplexa) as elements of judgments and argumentations (according to Alfarabi, as reported by Albertus M, De Pradiculal 1 2 seq, of Dentil Gasch der Log, 11 p 302 seq.) Alfa Prantl, Gesch der Log , 11 p 302 veq.) rabi defines the universal (see Ali M. De Praed, 11 b) as the unum de multis et in multis, which definition as followed immediately by the inference that the universal bas no existence spart from the individual (non habit case separatum a multis) It is worthy of notice that Affarabi does not admit in its absolute sense the aphonism singulare sentition unversale intelligitue but touches that the singular. although in its material aspect an object of sensible por option, exists in its formal aspect in the intellect and, on the other hand, that the universal, although as such belonging to the intellect, exists also in sensu, in so far as it exists blended with the individual (Alb. An post 1 1, 3) Among the contents of the Metaphysics of Alfarabi, mention should be made of his proof of the existence of (hod, which was employed by Albertue Mugnus and later philosopherse This proof is founded on Plat, Tim, p 28 To yevopera puper in dirlou rivos dváykov elvai yeverbai and Arist. Metaph, sin 7 dort roun ti kai o wiver, etc., or on the principle that all change and all development must have a cause. Alfarabi distinguishes (Fontes Guas-tionum ch. 3 seq., in Schmoldars Dec Phil Ar, p 44), between that which has a possible and that which has a necessary existence, just as Plate and Aristotle distinguish between the changeable and the sternal) If the possable is to exist in reality, a cause is necos-sary thereto. The world is composite, hence it had a beginning or was caused (ch 2) But the series of causes and effects can neither recede in aginitum, por return like a circle into itself it must, therefore, depend upon some necessary link, and this link is the first being (ens prinum) This first being exists necessarily, the supposition of its nonexistence involves a contradiction. It is uncaused, and needs in order to its existence no cause external to itself. It is the cause of all that exists Its eterminy implies its perfection It is free from all accidents It is simple and unchangeable. As the absolutely Good it is at once absolute thought, absolute object of thought, and absolute thinking being, (untelligentiu, intelligible, intelligens) It has. wisdom, life, meight might, and will beauty excellence, buglitues, it enjoys the highest happiness, a the first willing being and the first object of will (desire) In the knowledge of this heing, Alfarabi (De rebus studio Arist phil praintt Comm, th 4 ap Schmölders, Dor ph Arab p 22), sees the end of philosophy, and he d fines the practical duty of man as consisting in thing, so far as human force permits it, into likeness with God In his teachings respecting that which is caused by or derived from God (Fontes Quast, ch 6 seq), Alfarabi follows the Neo-Platomsts His fundamental conception is expressed by the word emanation The first created thing was the Intellect, which came forth from the first being (the Novs of Plotinus, this doctrine was logically consistent only for Piotinus not for Alfarabi, since the former represented his One as superior to all pre dicates, while Alfarabi in agreement with Aristotle and with religious dogmatics, recognized in his first being intelligence) From this intellect flowed forth, as a new emanation, the Cosmical Soul, in the complication and combination of whose ideas the basis of corporealisy is to be found Emanstion procoeds from the higher or outer spheres to the lower or unor ones In bodies, matter and form are necessarily combined with each other Perrestrial bodies are composed of the four clements The lower phys cal powers, up to the potential intellect, are dependent on matter. The potential intellect through the operation (in-beaming) of the active divine intellect, is made actual (intellectus in actu or in effectu), and this actual intellect, as resulting from development, may be called acquired intellect (intellectus acquisitus, after the dec-trine of Alexander of Aphrodisias, concerning the rous eninemos) The actual human intellect is free from matter, and is a simple substance, which alone survives the death of the body and remains indestructible. Evil is a necessary condition of good in a finite world All things are under divine guidance and are good, since all was created by God. Between the human understanding and the things which it seeks to know there exists (as Alfarabi teaches, De Intellecto et Intellecto, p. 48 seg.) a similarity of form, which anses from their having both been formed by the same flist being, and which makes know-ledge possible

"Avicenna (Abu Alı Al Hosam Abdallah Ibn Sina) was born at Afsenna, in the province of Bokhara, in the year 980 His mind was early developed by the study of theology, philosophy, and medicine, and in his youth he had already written a scientific encyclopedia He taught medicine and philosophy in Ispahan. He died at Hamadan in the fifty-eighth year of his life. His medical Conon was emplayed for centuries as the basis of instruction. In philosophy he set out from the doctrines of Alfarabi, but modified them by omitting many Neo Platonic theorems and approximating more nearly to the real doctrine of Aristotle The principle on which his logic was founded, and which Averroes adopted and Albertus Magnus often cites, was destimed to exert a great influence. It was worded thus Intellectus in forms agit universalitatem (Alb., De Prædicub, ii B and 6) The gonus, as also the species, the differentia the accidens, and the proprium, are in thomselves neither universal nor singular. But the thinking mind, by comparing the similar forms forms the genus logicum, which answers to the definition of the genus, viz. That it is predicated of many objects specifically different and answers the question, What is it? (tells the quiditas) It is the genus raturale which furnishes the bases of comparison When the mind adds to the generic and spe cific the individual accidents, the sugular is formed (Avic, Loy, Venice edition, 1505, 1 12, cm. Prantl Geschichte der Loyik, ii 347 seq) Only figuratively according to Avicanna, can the genus he called matter and the specific difference form, such phrasoology (frequent in Aristotle) is not strictly correct Avicenna distinguishes several modes of generic existênce, viz ante res, in rebus, and post res. Genera are aste res in the mind of God, for all that exists is related to God as a work of art is related to an artist it existed in his wisdom and will before its ontrance into the world of manifold existence, in this sense, and only m this sense, is the universal before the individual. Realized with its accidents in metter, the genus constitutes the natural thing, res naturalis, in which the universal essence is immanent The third mode of the existence of the genus is that which it has in being conceived by the human intellect when the latter abstracts the form and then compares it again with the individual objects to which by one and the same definition it belongs, in this comparison (respects) is contained the universal (Avic., Log., f. 12, Metaph. v. 1, 2, f. 87, in Practl., ii. p. 849) Our thought which is directed to things, contains nevertheless dispositions which are paculiar to itself, when things are thought, there is added in thought something which does not exist outside of thought. Thus universality as such, the generic concept and the specific différence, the subject and predicate, and other similar elements, belong only to thought Now it as possible to direct the attention, not merely to things, but also to the dispositions which are peculiar to thought, and this takes place in logic (Mctaph., 1 2, ut. 10, in Prantl ii. p 320 seq). On this is based the distinction of first and second intentions. The direction of attention to things is the first intention (intentio prima) the second intention (intenno secunda) is directed to the dispositions which are peculiar to our thinking concerning things Since the universal as such belongs not to things but to thought it belongs to the second intention. The principle of in dividual plurality, according to Avicenna, is matter, which he regards, not with Alfarabi as an emanation from the Cosmical Soul, but with Aristotle as eternal and unorested, all potentiality is grounded in it, as actuality is in God Nothing changeable san come forth directly from the unchangeable first cause. His first and only direct product is she intelhgentra prima (the vous of Plotinus, as with Altarabi), from it the chain of emanations extends through the various celestial spheres down to our earth But the issuing of the lower from the higher is to be conceived, not as a single, temporal act, but as an eternal act, in which cause and effect are synchronone The cause which gave to things their existence must centinually maintain them in existence, it is an error to imagine that things once brought into existence continue therein of themselves Notwithstanding its dependence on God, the world has existed from eternity Time and motion always were (Avic Metaph, vi 2, et al, of the account in the Tractains de Erroribus, a) Haureau, Ph Se, 1 p 868) Avicenna distinguishes a twofold dovelopment of our potential unversioned ing into actual ty the one common depending on instruction, the other rare, and dependent on immediate divine ill mination. According to a report transmitted to us by Avertoes. Avicenia, in his Phelosophia Orientales, which has not come down to us, contradicted his Aristotelian principles, and con-ceived God as a heavenly body

"Algazel (Abu Hamed Mohammed Ibn Achmed Al-Chazzali), born a.b 1059 at Gnazzalish in Knorasan taught first at Bag dad, and alterwords, having become a Shri, resided in Syria. He died a.b 1111 at Tus. He was a sceptic in philosophy, but only that his faith might be all the stronger in the doctrines of theology. His course in this respect marked a reaction of the exclusively religious principle of Mohammedanism against philosophical speculation—which in spite of all accommodation had not made itself fully orthodox—and particularly again t Aristothanism between the mystotem of the Neo Platonists, on the contrary and the Strism of Algazel there existed an essential affinity, in his Makacad al filastic (Magazela t-Fali-afat), 'The Aims of the Philosophers, Algazel sets forth the doctrines of philosophy following essentially Alfarab; and particularly Avicenna These doctrines are then subjected by him to a hostile enticism in his Tehafot al Alasıfa (Takafıtu 'l-Falāsıfah), Agamst the Philosophers, while in his 'Fundamental Principles of Faith,' he presents positively his own views Averroes wrote by way of rejoinder his Destructio Destructionis Philosophorum. Algazel exerted himself especially to excite a fear of the chastisements of God, since in his opinion the men of his times were hving in too great assurance. Against the philosophers he defended particularly the religious dogmas of the creation of the world in time and out of nothing, the reality of the divine attributes, and the resurrection of the body, as also the power of God to work mi racles, in opposition to the supposed law of cause and effect In the Middle Ages, his exposition of logic, metaphysics, and physics, as given in the Makacid, was much lead "The result of the scepticism of Algazel was in the East the triumph of an unphiloso phical orthodoxy, after him there arose in that quarter no philosopher worthy of mention On the other hand, the Arabian philosophy began to flourish in Spain, where a succession of thinkers cultivated its various branches

"Avempace (Abu Bekr Mohammed ben Jahja Ibn Badja), born at Saragossa near the end of the eleventh century, was celebrated as a physician, mathematician, astro nomer, and philosopher About 1118 he wrote, at Seville, a number of logical treatiess At a later period he lived in Granada, and afterwards also in Africa He died at a not very advanced age in 1138, without having completed any extensive works, yet he wrote several smaller (mostly lost) treatises, among which, according to Munk (Melanges, p 386), were Logical Fractates (still existing, according to Casiri, Biblioth Arabaco-Hisp Escurealensis, 1 p 179, in the library of the Escurial), a work on the soul, another on the conduct of the solitary (regime de solitaire), also on the union of the universal intellect with man, and a farewell letter to these may be added commentaries on the Physics Meteorology, and other works of Aristotle relating to physical science Munk gives the substance of the Conduct of the Solitary, as reported by a Jewish philoso pher of the fourteenth century, Moses of Nar bonne (Mel, pp 389-409) This work treats of the degrees by which the soul rises from that instructive life which it shares with the lower animals, through gradual emancipation from materiality and potentiality to the acquired intellect (intellectus (icquisitus) which is an emanation from the active intel lect or Deity Avempace seem (according to Averroes, De Anima, fol 1684) to have identified the intellectus materialis with the imaginative faculty In the highest grade of knowledge (m self-consciousness) thought is identical with its object.

"Abubacer (Abu Bakr Mohammed hen Abd al Malie Ibn Tophail al Keisi) was born in about the year 1100, at Wadi-Asch (Guadix), in Andalusia, and died in 1185, in Morocco He was celebrated as a physician, mathematician, philosopher, and poet, and pursued still further the path of speculation opened up by Ibn Badja. His chief work, that has come down to us, is entitled Han Ibn Jakdhan (Hanyu bau Yaqzān), the Living One, the Son of the Waking The fundamental idea is the same One as in Ibn Badja's 'Conduct of the Solitary' it is an exposition of the gradual deve lopment of the capacities of man to the point where his intellect becomes one with the Divine But Ibn Tophail goes considerably farther than his predecessor in maintaining the independence of man in opposition to the institutions and opinions of human society In his theory he represents the individual as developing himself without external aid That independence of thought and will, which man now owes to the whole course of the previous history of the human race, is regarded by him as existing in the natural men, out of whom he makes an extra historical ideal (like Rousseau in the eighteenth century) Ibn Tophail regards positive religion, with its law founded on neward and punishment, as only a necessary means of discipline for the multitude, religious con-ceptions are in his view only types or envelopes of that truth to the logical comprehension of which the philosopher gradually approaches

"Averrocs (Abul Walid Molammed Ibn Achmed Ibn Roschd), born A.D 1126, at Cordova, where his grandfather and father filled high judicial offices, studied first positive theology and jurisprudence and then medicine, mathematics, and philosophy He obtained subsequently the office of judge at Seville, and afterwards at Cordova. He was a jumor contemporary and friend of Ibn Tophail, who presented him to Calif Abu Jacub Jusuf soon after the latters ascent of the throne (1163), and recommended him, in place of himself, for the work of preparing an analysis of the works of Aristotle Ibn Roschd wen the favour of this prince, who was quite familiar with the problems of philosophy, and at a later epoch he became his physician in ordinary (1182) For a time also he was in favour with a son of the prince, Jacub Almansur, who succeeded to his father's rule in 1184, and he was still honoured by him in 1195 But soon after this date he was accused of cultivating the philosophy, and science of antiquity to the projudice of the Mohammedan religion, and was robbed by Almansur of his dignities and banished to Elisana (Lucena) near Cordova, he was afterwards tolerated in Morocco A strict prohibition was issued against the study of Greek philosophy, and whatever works on logic and metaphysics were discovered were delivered to the flames Averroës died in 1198, in his seventy third year Soon after, the rule of the Moors in Spain came to an end The Arabian philosophy was extinguished, and liberal culture sunk under the exclusive rule of the Koran and of dog-

"Averroes shows for Aristotle the most unconditional reverence, going in this respect much farther than Avisenna; he considers him, as the founders of religion are went to be considered, as the man whom alone, among all men, God permitted to reach the highest summit of partection, Aristotle was, in his opinion, the founder and perfecter of scientific knowledge In logic, Averroes everywhere lunits himself to merely annotating Aristotle The principle of Avicenna intellectus in formis ugit universalitatem, is also his (Averr , De An , 1 8 of Alb M. De Producab, 11 ch b) become treats not of universal things, but of individuals under their universal aspect, which the understanding recognises after making abstraction of their common nature (Destr destr fol 17 Scientia autem non est scientia rei universalis, sed est scientia particularrum modo universals quem facit intellectus in particularibus, quum abstrahit ab eis naturam unan communem, quo divisu est in materie.)
The forms, which are developed through the influence of higher forms, and in the last resort through the influence of Desty are contained embryonically in matter

"The most noticeable thing in his psychology in the explanation which he gives of the Aristotelian distinction between the active and the passive intellect (rous madyrikos and ποιητικός). Thomas Aquinas, who opposes the explanation, gives it in these words. Inteliectum substantium esse omnino ab anima separatam, esseque unum in omnibus hominibus. noc Doum facore posse quod sent plures entellectus; but, he says, Avervoes added per rationem concludo de necessitate quod intellectus est unus numero, firmiler tamen teneo oppontuin per fidem. In his commentary to the twelfth book of the Metaphysics Averroes compares the relation of the active reason to man with that of the sun to vision, as the sun, by its light, brungs about the act of seeing, so the active reason enables us to know, hereby the rational capacity in man is developed into actual reason, which is one with the active reason. Averages attempts to recognise two epinions, the one of which he ascribes to Alexander of Aphrodistas, and the other to Themistius and the other commentators. Alexander, he says, had held the passive intellect (νους παθητικός) to be a mere disposition' connected with the animal faculties, and in order that it might be able perfectly to receive all forms, absolutely formless, this disposition was in us, but the active intellect (vous mointeres), was without us, after our death our individual intellects no longer existed Themistius, on the contrary, and the other commentators, had regarded the passive intellect not as a mere disposition connected with the lower psychical powers, but as mhering in the same substratum to which the active intellect belonged, this substratum, according to them, was distinct from those animal powers of the soul which depend on material organs, and as it was immaterial, immortality was to be predicated of the individual intellect inhering in it. Averroes, on the other hand, held that the passive intellect (vous madyrings) was, indeed, more than a mere disposition, and assumed (with Themistius and most of the other Commentators, except Alexander) that the same substance was passive and active intellect (namely, the fermer in so far as it received forms, the latter m so far as it constructed forms), but he desied that the same substance in reself and in its individual existence was both passive and active, assuming (with Alexander) that there existed only one active intellect in the world, and that man had only the 'disposition' in virtue of which he could be affected by the active in ellect, when the active intellect came in contact with this disposition there arose in us the passive or material intellect, the one active intel lect becoming on its entrance into the plurality of souls particularized in them, just as light is decomposed into the different colours in bodies. The passive intellect was (according to Munk's translation) · Une chose composée de la disposition qui existe en nous et d'un intellect qui se joint a cette dis-position, et qui, en tant qu'il y est joint, est un intellect predisposé (en puissance) et non pas un intellect en acte, mais qui est intellect en acte en tant qu'il n'est plus joint a la dispon-tion' (from the Commentaire moyen sus le traité de l'Ame, in Munk's Mél., p. 447), the active intellect worked first upon the passive, so as to develop it into actual and acquired intellect, and then on this latter, which it absorbed into stacif, so that after our death it could be said that our vous, mind, continued to existthough not as an individual substance, but only as an element of the universal mind. But Averroes did not identify this universal mind (as Alexander of Aphrodisias identified the νούς ποιητικός) with the Deity himself, but conceived it (following in this the earlier Arabian commentators and directly the Nec-Platon: (a) as an emanation from the Deity, and as the mover of the lowest of the celestial circles, se the sphere of the moon. doctrine was developed by Avertors, particularly in his commentaries on the Jie Anima, whereas, in the Paraphrase (written earlier) he had expressed himself in a nore individualistic sense (Averr, ap Munk, Mélanges, p 442 seq ) The psychological teaching of Averrors resembled, therefore, in the character of its definitions, that of Themistius, but in its real content that of Alexander Aphrodisiensis, since both Avertees and Alexander limited the individual existence of the human intellect (vous) to the period procoding death, and recognized the eternity only of the one universal active intellect (vous mountinos) For this reason the dectrue of the Alexandrists and of the Averroists were both condemned by the Catholic Church

"Averroes professed himself in no sense hostile to religion, least of all to Mohammedanism, which he regarded as the most perfect of all religions. He demanded in the philosopher a grateful adherence to the religion of his people, the religion in which he was educated. But by this adherence he meant only a skilful accommodation of his views and life to the requirements of positive religion-a course which could not but fail to satisfy the real defenders of the religious principle. Averroes considered religion as containing philosophical truth under the veil of figurative representation, by allegorical interpretation one might advance to purer knowledge, while the masses held to the literal sense The highest grade of intelligence was philosophical knowledge the pecu-liar religion of the philosopher consisted in the deepening of his knowledge, for man could offer to God no worthier cultus than that of the knowledge of his works, through which we attain to the knowlege of God himself in the fulness of His essence (Averroes in the larger Commentary on the Metaph , ap Munk, Melanges, p 455 seq )"

Dr Marcus Dods remarks that "in philosophy the attainments of the Arabians have probably been overrated (see Let Hest of Middle Ages, by Berrington p 445) rather than depreciated As middle-men or transmitters indeed, their importance can scarcely be too highly estimated They were keen students of Aristotle when the very language in which he wrote was unknown in Roman Christendom and the commentaries of Averroes on the most exact of Greek philosophers are said to be worthy of the text. It was at the Mohammedan university in his native city of Cordova, and from Arabian teachers that this precursor of Spinosa derived those germs of thought whose fruit may be seen in the whole history of scholastic theology And just before Averroes entered these learned halls, a young man passed from them, equipped with the same learning, and gifted with genius and penetration of judgment which have made his opinions final wherever the name of Memonides is known Undoubtedly these two fellow-citizens-the Mohammedan Arab and the Arabic-speak ing Jew-have left their mark deep on all subsequent Jewish and Christian learning And even though it be doubted whether their influence has been wholly beneficial, they may well be claimed as instances of the intellectual ardour which Mohammedan learning could mapire or awaken A recent writer of great promise in the philosophy of religion has assigned to the Arab thinkers the honourable function of creating modern philosophy Theology and philosophy became in the hands of the Moors fused and blended, the Greek scientific theory as to the origin of things interwound with the Hebrew faith in a Creator And so speculation became in a new and higher sense theastic, and the interpretation of the universe, the explication of God's relation to it and its relation to God. (Fairbairn's Studies, p 898) But speculation had become theistic long before there was an Arab philosophy The same ques tions which form the staple of modern philosophy were discussed at Alexandria three centuries before Mohammed; and there is scarcely a Christian thinker of the third or fourth century who does not write in presence of the great problem of God's connection with the world, the relation of the Infinite to the finite, of the unseen intangible Spirit to the crass material universe. What we have here to do with, however, is not to ascertain whether modern philosophy be truly the offspring of the unexpected marriage of Aristotle and the Koran, but whether the religion promulgated in the latter is or is not obstructive of intellectual effort and enlightenment. And enough has been said to show that there is nothing in the religion which necessarily and directly tends to obstruct either philosophy or science, though when we consider the history and achievements of that race which has for six centuries been the leading representative of Islam, we are inclined to add that there is nothing in the religion which necessarily leads on the mind to the highest intellectual effort Voltaire, in his own nervous way, exclaims, 'I detest the Turks, as the tyrants of their wives and the enemies of the arts' And the religion has shown an affinity for such uncivilised races It has not taken captive any race which possesses a rich literature, nor has it given birth to any work of which the world demands a translation, and precisely in so far as individuals have shown themselves possessed of great speculative and creative genus, have they departed from the rigid orthodoxy of the Koran. We should conclude, therefore, that the outburst of literany and eccentrific enthusiasm in the eighth century was due, not directly to the influence of the Mohammedan religion, but to the mental awakening and exultant consciousness of power and widened horizon that came to the conquering Saracens At first their newlyawakened energy found scope in other fields than that of philosophy 'Marte undique ob-strepents, musis vix erat locus' But when the din of war died down, the voice of the Muses was heard, and the same fervour which had made the Saracen arms irresistible, was spent now in the acquirement of knowledge "_Mohammed, Buddha, and Christ, p 118)

PLAGUES OF EGYPT The following references occur to the ten plagues of Egypt in the Qur'an

Sirah viii. 127-135 "Already had we chartised the people of Pharach with dearth and searcity of fruits, that haply they might take warning and when good fell to their lot they said, 'This is our due.' But if ill hefell them, they regarded Moses and his par-tizans as (the birds) of ill omen. Yet, was not their evil omen from God? But most of them knew it not And they said, 'Whatever sign thou bring us for our enchantment, we will not believe on thee And we sent upon them the flood and the locusts and the qummal (hoe) and the frogs and the blood, -clear signs-but they behaved proudly, and were a simful people. And when any plague fell upon them, they said, 'O Moses ! pray for us to thy Lord, according to that which he hath covenanted with thee Truly if thou take off the plague from us, we will surely believe thee, and will surely send the children of Israel with thee.' But when we had taken off the plague from them, and the time which God had granted them had expired, behold they broke their promise Therefore we took vengeance on them and drowned them in the sea, because they treated our signs as islsehoods and were heedless of them. And we gave to the people who had been brought so low, the eastern and the western lands, which we had blessed as an heritage and the good word of thy Lord was fulfilled on the children of Israel because they had borne up with patience and we destroyed the works and the structures of Pharaoh and his people And we brought the children of Israel across the sea, and they came to a people who gave themselves up to their idols They said, 'O Moses' make us a god, as they have gods He said, 'Verily, ye are an ignorant people for the worship they practice will be destroyed, and that which they do is vanity!""

In the Surah xvii 103-104, they are referred to as "nine clear signs," which some commentators understand to be the commandments of Moses

"We heretofore gave to Moses nine clear signs. Ask thou, therefore, the children of Israel how it was when he came unto them, and Pharach said to him, 'Verily, I deem thee, O Moses, a man enchanted'

"Said Moses, 'Thou knowest that none hath sent down these clear signs but the Lord of the Heavens and of the Earth, and I surely deem thee, O Pharach a person

Mr Sale, translating from the Jalalan and al-Baixawi, says "These were, the changing his red into a serpent, the making his hand white and shining, the producing locusts, hee, frogs, and blood, the dividing of the Red Sea, the bringing water out of the rock, and the shaking of Mount Sinal over the children of larael. In lieu of the three last, some reckon the mundation of the Nile, the blasting of the corn and scarcity of the fruits of the earth. These words, however, are interpreted by others not of nine miraeles, but of nine commandments, which Moses gave his people and were thus numbered up by Muhammad

It will be seen that the Arabian arrangement of the planets is that of Ptolemy, who placed the earth in the centre of the universe, and nearest to it the moon, whose synodic revolution is the shortest of all, being performed in 20½ days. Next to the moon he placed Mercury, who returns to his conjunctions in 116 days. After Mercury followed Venus, whose periodic time is 584 days. Beyond Venus he placed the Sun, then Mars next Jupiter, and lastly Saturn, beyond which are the fixed stars.

but a reminder and a plain Qur'an."
Sürah lxix. 40, 41 "Verily it is the speech of a noble apostle, and it is not the speech of a poet"

The Qur'an being in manifest rhythm, and in some places actual poetry, the declaration of the Prophet, that he was not a poet has much perplexed the commentators But the Imam Fakhra 'd Din ar-Razi, has hit upon the following clever explanation of the difficulty He says, that in order to be a poet it is absolutely necessary that the poems should not be ampromptu verses, but deliberately framed, and that, therefore, although the Quran contains poetry (for example, in Surah zelv, which begins thus

الم نشرح لك مدرك ورضعنا عنك وزرك

Alum nashrah laka sadraka Wa wazainā anku wizruku

"Have we not opened thy breast for thee? And taken off from thee thy burden ' ')

it, is not really poetry, because the writer did not deliberately intend to produce the rhythm!

The same excuse is urged for the lines which Muhammad is related to have uttered impromptu when his toe was wounded in battle .

Arabic scholara (see Kushju Istelāhāti 'l-Funun, in loca) divide the Arabic poets into six períods

(1) Al Jahrliyun, those in the time of 14norance or before Islam, such as the ancient Arabic poets Zuhair, Tarafah, Imru 1 Qais 'Amr ibn Kuleum, al-Häris and Antarah

(2) Al-Mukhzaramun (111 'spurions'), these born in the time of ignorance but who embraced Islam, as Labīd and Hassan, whose names occur in the traditions

(8) Al-Mutagaddimun (lit_" first") those who were born in the time of Islam of parents who were converts to Islam, as Jain and

Farazdaq
(4) Al-Muwalladun, those who were born of true-born Muslims, as Bashai

(5) At-Muhdigun, the third generation of Muslim poets, as Abū Tammām, and Bukhtari. (6) Al-Muta'akhkhreun (ht "the last"), all succeeding poets

The Mulagaddimum, the Muwalla lun, and the Muhdiaun, correspond with the Achab, the Tabi un, and the Tabi Tabi un or the three first generations of Muslims

There are seven posms of ancient Arabia, who are known in history as the Mu'allaqat, or "suspended," because they had been in turn suspended on the walls of the Makkan temple. They are also known as Muzahhabat, or the "golden" poems, because they were written in gold The names of their authors are Zuhair, Tarafah, Imru 'l-Qais, 'Amru ibn Kulgum, al-Haris, Antarab, and Labid The last of the seven embraced Talam. It is related that Labid had posted up in the Kathah his poem, heginning

ألا كل هي ما عملا الله باطل

Alā kulla sha'ın mā khala 'llāha bāţılu

"Know that everything is vanity but (lod"

But that when he saw the first verses of the Süratu T-Baqarah (11) of the Quran posted up, he withdraw his verses and em-braced leium Muhammadrepain Labid with the complement that the words, 'Know that everything is vanity but God," were the truest words ever uttered by a post. (Mishkal, book xxu ch x)

In the earlier part of his mission, Muhammad affected to despise the poets, and in the Qur'an we flud have saying (Surah xxvi 224), "Those who go astray follow the poets", and in the Traditions, Michkel, book xxii ch x. "A belly full of purulent matter is better than a belly full of poetry" But when Labid and Hassan embraced Islam, the poets rue into favour, and the Proj het utters the wise but cautions saying, that "poetry is a kind of composition, which if it is good it is good, and if it is bad it is bad" In the battle with the Banu Quraizah, the Prophet called out to Hassan the poet, Abuse the infidels in your verse, for truly the Holy Spirit (in the Hadis it is Gabriel) will help you" It is also re-lated that the Prophet used to say "O I ord' help Hassan the post by the Holy Spirit (or Gabriel,"

It is generally admitted by Arabic scholars that the golden age of Arabic poetry was that immediately preceding or contemporaneous with Muhammad and that from the time of Muhammad there was a gradual decline This is not surprising, in ismuch as the Our'un is considered the most perfect model of composition ever revealed to mankind and to be written in the language of Paradise

Baron MacGuckin de Slane, in his Introduction to Ibn Khallikan's Dictionary, says -

"The oldest monuments of Alabic literature which we still possess were composed within the century which preceded the birth of Muhammad Thes consist in short pieces of verse uttered on the spur of the moment, narrations of combats between hostile tribes, passages in rhythmical prose and kasidas (qasidahs), or elegies The study of these remains reveals the existence of a language perfect in its form and application, admirably suited to express the various ideas which the aspect of nature could suggest to a pastoral people, and as equally adapted to postray the fiercer passions of the mind The varie, y of its inflictions, the regularity of its syntax, and the harmony of its proceedy, are not less striking, and they furnish in themselves a sufficient proof of the high degree of culture which the language of the Arabic nation had already attained. The superior ment of this early literature was ever afterwards acknowledged by the Arabs themselves It furnished them not only with models, but ideas for their poetical productions, and its influence has always continued perceptible in the Kasida, which still contains the same thoughts, the same allusions as of old, and drags its slow length along in monotonous dignity. (p xv)

"The decline of Arabic poetry can be easily traced down from the accession of the Abbasides to the time of the Aivubites for many centuries the patrons of the belleslettres were of foreign extraction, and writers who sought their favour were obliged to conform their own judgment to that of persons who were in general unable to appreciate the true beauties of literary compositions. Works which had obtained the patronage of the prince could not fail to fix the attention of other poets, who took them as medels which they strove to imitate and to surpass. The common held in the schools that the ancient kasıdas were masterpieces of art, contributed also to the perversion of good taste, their plan and ideas were servilely copied, and it was by refinement of expression alone that writers could display their talent, verbal quibbles, far fotched allusions, thoughts borrowed from the old writers, and strained so as to be hardly recognisable, such were the means by which they strove to attam originality, sense was sacrificed to sound, the most discordant ideas were linked together for the futile advantage of obtaining a recurrence of words having a similar written form or a similar pronunciation, poets wrote for the ear and the eye, not for the mind, and yet the high estimation in which their productions were held may be judged from the readiness of Ibn Khalikan to quote them His taste was that of the ag in which he lived, and the extracts which he gives enable the reader to form an idea of the Arab mind at the period of the Crusades The same feeling of impartiality which induces me to express so severe a consure on the generality of the Islamic poets, obliges me also to make some exceptions The kasidas of al-Mutanabbi are full of fire, daring originality, and depth of thought, he often reaches the sublime, and his style, though blemished by occasional faults, is very fine al-Bohtori is remarkable for grace and elegance, Abû-l Alâ but Ibn al-Farid for dignity and beauty seems superior to them all, his pieces teem with sentiment and poetry, in his mystic reve ries he sours towards the confines of another world pervaded with spiritual beauty, and glides with the reader from one enchanting scene to another, the judgment is captivated by the genius of the poet, and can hardly perceive the traits of false taste which disfigure, from time to time, his admirable style Having pointed out the influence of the ka-sida, or elegy, it may not be amies to sketch the plan generally followed in this species of composition The poet, accompanied by two friends, approaches, after a long journey shrough the desert, to the place where he saw his mistress the year before, and where he hopes to meet her again. At his request, they direct the camels on which they are mounted towards the spot, but the ruins of the rustic dwellings, the withered moss, brushwood, and branches of trees, with which were formed the frail abodes where the tribe had passed the summer, the hearthstenes blackened by the fire, the solutary raven hovering around in search of a scanty nourishment every object he perceives strikes him with the conviction that his beloved and her family have removed to some other region in the desert Overcome with grief, heedless of the consolations of his friends, who exhort him to be firm, he long remains plunged in silent affliction, at length he finds relief in a torrent of tears, and, raising up his head, he extemporares a mournful elegy He commences by mentioning the places which he had already visited in hopes of finding her whom he loved, and calls to mind the dangers which he had encountered in the desert. He describes the camel which, though fatigued, still full of ardour, had borne him into the depths of the wilderness, he vaunts his own courage and extels the glory of his tribe. An adventure which happened on the previous night then comes to his memory a fire blazing on a lofty hill, had attracted their attention and guided them to the tent of a generous Arab, where they found shelter and hospitality He then praises the charms of his mistress, and complains of the pains of love and absence, whilst his companions harry hun away He casts a parting look towards the place where she had resided, and lol a dark cloud, fringed with rain, and rent with lightnings, overhangs the spot. This sight fills his heart with joy! an abundant shower is about to shed new life upon the parched soil, and thus onsure a rich herbage for the flocks, the family of his beloved will then soon return, and settle agein in their former habitati vii

'Such may be considered as the outline of the pastoral kasida. In these productions the same ideas almost constantly recur, and the same words frequently serve to axpress them. The eulogistic kasida, or poem in praise of some great man, assumes also the same form, with the sole difference that in place of a mistress it is a generous patron whom the poet goes to visit, or else, after praising the object of his passion, he celebrates the noble qualities of the man who is always ready, with abundant gifts, to bestow consolstion on the afflicted lover

"It results from this that a person familiar with the mode of composition followed in the kasida, can often from a single word verse, perceive the drift of the poet, and discover, almost intuitively, the thoughts which are to follow He has thus a means of determining the true readings amidst the mass of errors with which copyists usually disfigure Arabic poetry knowing what the poet intends to say, he feels no longer any difficulty : disongaging the authors words from the harity as frequently perceptible as pasces of a few verses, these generally reproduce some of the ideas contained in the kasida, and for this reason they are justly styled fragments by Arabic Writers.

"There exist, also, some compositions of an original form such are the debust, or distich, and the mandisa, both borrowed from the Persians, and the muwashshaha, invented in Spain by Ibn Abd Rabbih. Pieces of this kind became general favourites by the novelty of their form and matter, the mawalia was adopted by the dervishes, and the muwashshaha was cultivated with passion and attained its perfection in Andalusia, whence it was transported to the East It cannot be denied that the Moorish poets, with all their extravagance of thought and expression, were far superior in their perception of the beau-ties of nature and the delicacies of sentiment, to their brethren of the East, and the European reader will often discover in their poems, with some surprise, the same ideas, metaphors, and systems of versification, which characterise the works of the troubadours and the early Italian poets

"An idea borrowed from the ante-Islamic poets, and of frequent recurrence in the kasidas of later authors, is the taif at khidi (taifu 'l-bhydi), or phantom The lover journeys with a caravan through the desert, for many nights his grief at being separated from his beloved prevents him from sleeping, but at length he yields to fatigue and closes his eyes. A phantom then approaches towards him, unseen by all but himself, and in it he recognises the image of his mistress, come to visit and console him It was sent to him by the beloved, or rather it is herself in spirit, who has crossed the dreary waste and fleeted towards his couch, she, too had slept, but it was to go and see her lover in her dreams They thus meet in spite of the foes and spies who always surround the post, ready to betray him if he obtain an interview with the beloved, and who are so jealous, that they hinder him from sleeping, lest he should see her image in his dream, it is only when they slumber that he dare close his eyes.

"The figurative language of the Muslim poets is often difficult to be understood parciesus is the eye, the feeble stem of that plant bends languidly under its flower, and thus recalls to mind the languor of the eyes. Pearls signify both tears and teeth, the latter are sometimes called hallstones, from their whiteness and moisture, the lips are come hans or rubies, the gums a pomegranate flower, the dark foliage of the myrtle is synonymous with the black hair of the beloved, or with the first down which appears on the cheeks of youths at the period of The down steelf is called the szár puberty or head-stall of the bridle, and the curve of the Izar is compared to the letters lum and nun. Ringiets trace on the cheek or neck the letter waw they are also called scorpions, either for their dark colour or their agitated movements, the eye is a sword, the cyclids, scabbards the whiteness of the complexion, camphor and a mole or beauty spot, mask, which term denotes also dark hair A mole as sometimes compared also to an ant cleeping on the cheek towards the honey of the mouth, a handsome face is both a full-moon and day, black hair is night, the waist is a willow-branch, or a lance, the water of the face is self-respect, a poet selfs the water of his face when he bestows mercenary praises on a rich patron devoid of every noble quality

"Some of the verses in Arabic poetry (as in all Eastern poetry) are of a nature such as precludes translation. Had they been composed by a female on a youth whom she loved, they would seldom offer anything objectionable, but as the case is not so, they are utterly repugnant to European readers It must not, however, be supposed that they are always the produce of a degraded pas-sion, in many cases they were the usual ex-pression of simple friendship and affection, or of those platonic attachments which the translated works of some Greel, philosophers first taught the Moslims Indeed, love and friendship are so closely confounded by them, that they designate both feelings by the same word, and it is not uncommon to meet epistles addressed by one aged doctor to another, and containing sentiments of the strongest kind, but which are the expression of friendship only It often happens, also, that a poet describes his mistress under the attributes of the other sex, lest he should offend that excessive prudery of Oriental feelings which, since the fourth century of Islamism, scarcely allows an allusion to women, and more particularly in poetry, and this rigidness is still carried so far, that at Cairo public singers dare not amuse their auditors with a song in which the beloved is indicated as a female Some of those pieces have also a mystic import, as the commentators of Hafiz, Sasdi, and Shebisters, have not failed to observe. (1b, p xxxii et seq)

POLL-TAX. [JIZYAH]

POLYGAMY In Muhammadan-1sm, polygamy has the express sanction of the Qur'an, and 1s, therefore, held to be a divine 1nstitution Vide Süratu 'n-Nisa', or Chapter 1v 3—

"But if ye cannot do justice between orphans, then marry what seems good to you of women, by twos, or threes, or fours and if ye fear that ye cannot be equitable, then only one, or what your right hand possesses " (i e female slaves)

Compare this with the teaching of the Tal-

"A man may marry many wives, for Rabba saith it is lawful to do so, if he can provide for them. Nevertheless, the wise men have given good advice, that a man should not marry more than four wives" (Arbak. Turim. Ev. Hazaer, 1)

But although permission to indulge in polygamy is clear and unmistakable, the opening verse of the Surah from which the above is taken, seems to imply some slight leaning to monogamy as the highest form of married life, for it reads thus

"O ye men! fear your Lord, who orested you from one soul, and created therefrom its mate, and diffused from them twain numerous men and women."

In the Ames-Akbars, it is related that a certain Mujtahid, or enlightened doctor, married eighteen wives, for he rendered the Arabic word magaa, "double," and read the text already quoted, "Marry whatever wemen you like two and two, three and three, and four and four" And in the same work it is said that another learned Maulawi married eight wives, because he read the verse—"two + three + four = nine"!

Al-Basawi, the Jalalan, and other Sunni commentators, are all agreed that the true reading of the verse limits the number of lawful wives to four The Shi'ahs also hold the same opinion, but they sanction Mut'ah, or temporary marriages." [MUTAH.]

In the face of the united testimony of Islam founded upon the express injunctions of the Quran, Syed Ameer Ali has the audacity to state in his Critical Examination of the Life and Teachings of Muhammad, p. 323, that "the greatest and most reprehensible mustake committed by Christian writers, is to suppose that Mahammad either adopted or legalised polygamy. The old idea of his having introduced it—a sign only of the ignorance of those who hold it—is by this time exploded, but the opinion that he adopted and legalised the custom is still maintained by the common masses as by many learned in Christendom No belief can be more false"!

In his more recent work on the Personal Law of the Muşammadans, the same writer remarks —

" Muhammad restrained polygamy by limiting the maximum number of contemporaneous marriages, and by making absolute equity towards all obligatory on the man. It is worthy of note that the clause in the Qurán, which contains the permission to contract four contemporaneous marriages is im-mediately followed by a sentence which cuts down the significance of the preceding passage to its normal and legitimate dimensions The former passage says, 'You may marry two, three, or four wives, but not more The subsequent lines declare, 'but if you cannot deal equitably and justly with all you shall marry only one' The extreme importance of this provise, bearing especially in mind the meaning which is attached to the word 'equity' ('adl') in the Quranic teachings, has not been lost sight of by the great thinkers of the Moslem world. Even so early as the third century of the era of the Hijra during the reign of al-Mamon, the first Motacalite dectors taught that the developed Quranic laws inculcated monogamy And though the cruel persecutions of the mad bigot, Mutawwakil, prevented the general diffusion of their teachings, the conviction is gradually forcing itself on all aides, in all advanced Moslem communities, that polygamy is as much opposed to the Islamic laws as it is to the general progress of civilised society and true culture. In India especially, this idea is becoming a strong moral, if not a religious conviction, and many extraneous circumstances in combination with this growing feeling are tending to root out the existence of polygamy from among the Mussulmans A custom has grown up in that country, which is largely followed by all classes of the community, of drawing up a marriage deed containing a formal renunciation, on the part of the future husband, of any right or semblance of right which he might possess or claim to possess to contract a second marriage during the existence of the first. This custom serves as a most efficacious check upon the growth and the perpetuation of the institution of polygamy In Indu more than ninety-five per cent. of Muhammadans are at the present moment, other by conviction or necessity, monogamists Among the educated classes, versed in the history of their ancestors, and able to compare it with the records of other nations, the custom is regarded with disapprohation, amounting almost to disgust In Persia, according to Colonel Macgregor's statement, only two per cent of the population enjoy the questionable luxury of plura-lity of wives. It is carnestly to be hoped that before long a general synod of Moslem doctors will authoritatively declare that poly gainy, like slavery, is abhorrent to the laws of Islam (Personal Law of the Muhamma-dans, p. 28)

Synd Ahmad Khan Bahadur, in his essay, Whether Islam has been beneficial or injurious to Society in general, on the contrary, defends the institution of polygamy as divine, and quotes John Milton, Mr. Davenport, and Mr Higgins, as Christian writers who defended

the practice

The Prophet claimed considerable indulgence for himself in the matter, and married eleven wives [wives OF THE PROPHET]

eleven wives [wives of The PROPHET]
The views of Dr Marcus Dods in his Mohummed, Buddha, and Christ (p 55), give an uble and interesting summary of the subect -

" The defence of polygamy has been undertaken from various points of view, and with varying degrees of insight and of earnestness. But one cannot detect much progress among its defenders F W Newman has nothing to say in its favour which had not previously been suggested by Voltaire, nothing, we may say, which does not occur to anyone who wishes to present the argument for a plurality of wives It is somewhat late in the day to be called upon to argue for monogamy as abstractly right Speculators like Aristotle (Econ 1 2, 8), who have viewed the subject both as stateamen having a regard to what is practicable and will conduce to social prosperity, and as philosophers reasoning from first principles, have long ago demanded for their ideal society, not only monogamy, but also that mutual respect and love, and that strict purity and modesty, which polygamy kills. Let us say briefly that the only ground conscience recognises as warranting two persons to become one in flesh is that they be, first of all, one in spirit. That absolute surfirst of all, one in spirit render of the person which constitutes marriage is justified only by the circumstances that it is a surrender of the heart as well, and that it is mutual. To an ideal love, polygamy is abhorrent and impossible. As Mowith more than his usual profundity, said, God has not put two hearts in you' This is the grand law imbedded in our nature, and by which it is secured that the children born tate the world be the fruit of the devoted sur render of one human spirit to another, by which, in other words, it is secured that love the root principle of all human virtue and duty, be transmitted to the child and born in it. This is the beneficent law expressed in monogamy, and this law is traversed and robbed of its effects precisely in a far as even monogamous marriages are prompted by fieshly or worldly rather than by spuitual The utilitarian argument Mr Lecky (Hist European Morals, vol 11 p 295) has summed up in three sentences Nature, by making the number of males and females nearly equal, indicates it as natural. In no other form of marriage can the government of the family, which is one of the thief ends of marriage, be so happily sustained and in no other does the woman assume the position or the equal of man. But we have here to do only with Mohammedan apologists, and their reasonings are somewhat perplexing a for they first mamtain that nature intended us to be polygamists (see Synd Ahmad's Essay, p 8, Synd Ameen Min Cut Exam, p 225), and then, secondly, declare that the greatest and most reprehensible mistake commifted by Christian writers is to suppose that either adopted or legalised Probably the most that can Mehammed polygamy" Probably the most that can be said for Mohammed in regard to this matter, 14 that he restricted polygamy, and tnat its abolition was impossible and unsuitable to the population he had to do with

"The allegation, however, that Mohammed confined polygamy within nairower limits than the Arabs had previously recognised, though true, is immaterial. For in the first place, he restricted polygamy indeed in sthers, but not in his own case, and thus left upon the minds of his followers the ine vitable impression that an unrestricted polygamy was the higher state of the two

"In the second place, while he restricted the number of lawful wives, he did not restrict the number of slave-concubines. In the third place, his restriction was practically of little value, because very few men could affere to keep more than four wives. And, lastly, as to the principle, he left it precisely where it was, for as Mr Freeman justly ebsaves. Lectures, p. 69). I has is one of the cases in which the first rep is everything. The difference between one wife and two is accorpting that letween four and five thou sand is comparatively nothing.

"And if the principle be defended as at least relatively good, nothing is to be urged against this as matter of fact although the circumstance has been overlooked, that already very many thousands of Christian Arabs had found it quite possible to live in monogamy But that polygamy is not incompatible with a sound, if not perfectly developed, morality, and with the highest tone of feeling, no one who has read the history of Israel will be disposed to deny. That it may suit a race in a certain stage of its development, and may in that stage lead to purer living and surer moral growth than its prehibition would, may be granted. But necessarily the religion which incorporates in its code of morals such allowances, stamps itself as something short of the final religion.

PRAYER Arabic salāt (ملوة), pl salawāt Persian namas (منوز), pl namāzhā.

Prayer 14 the second of the five foundations, or pillars of pratical religion in Islam, and 14 3 devotional exercise which every Muslim is required to render to God at least twe times a day, namely, at the early morning, middity afterneon, evening, and night

ing, midday afterneon, evening, and night.
The general duty of prayer is frequently enjoined in the Quran, but it is remarkable that in no single passage are the five periods.

mentioned

See Suratu 'r-Rûm (xxx), 17 "Glorify God when it is evening (maxa') and at morning (subh),—and to him be praise in the heavens and the earth,—and at afternoon (ashs), and at noou-tide (zuhr)" (But all commentators are agreed that maxa' includes both sunset and after sunset, and, therefore, both the Maghrib and Ashryah prayers)

Surah xi 110 Observe prayer at early morning, at the close of the day, and at the approach of might, for the good deeds drive away the evil deeds '

bursh xx 130 'Put up then with what they say, and celebrate the praise of thy Lord before the sunrise, and before its setting, and some time in the night do thou praise Him, and in the extremes of the day, that thou haply mayest please Him" that thou haply mayert please Him."

Surah xvii 80 'Observe prayer at sunset, till the first darkening of the might and the daybreak reading—for the daybreak reading hath its witnesses and watch unto it in the night this shall be an excess in service."

Sûrah is 42 "Seek a d w th patience and prayer"

Surah iv 1-4 'When ye have fulfilled your prayer, remember God standing and sitting, and lying on your sides, and when ye are in safety, then be steadfast in prayer. Verily prayer is for the benevers prescribed and timed"

According to the Traditions Muhammad professed to have received instructions to recite prayers five times a day, during his mirry or ascent to heaven. The tradition runs thus

'The divine injunctions for prayer were originally fifty times a day And as I passed Moses (in heavon, during my ascent), Moses said to me, 'What have you been ordered?' I replied, 'Fifty times!' Then Moses said, 'Verily your people will never be able to hear it, for I tried the children of Israel with fifty times a day, but they could not manage it' Then I returned to the Lord and asked for some remission. And ten prayers were taken off Then I pleaded again and ten more were remitted. And so on until at last they were reduced to five times Then I they were reduced to five times Then I went to Moses, and he said, 'And how many prayers have you been ordered?' And I replied 'Five' And Moses said, 'Verily I tried the children of Israel with even five, but it did not succeed Return to your Lord, and ask for a further remission.' But I said, 'I have asked until I am quite ashaned, and I cannot ask again.'" (See Sahahu Muslim, vol. i p 91)

This Solat, or liturgical service, has thus become one of the most prominent features of the Muhammadan religion, and very numerous are the injunctions regarding it which have been handed down in the traditions. There are various minor differences amongst the numerous sects of Islam regarding the formula, but its main features are alike in all countries.

We shall describe prayer according to the Hanafi sect of Sunni Muslims

It is absolutely necessary that the service should be performed in Arabia, and that the clothes and body of the worshipper should be clean, and that the praying-place should be free from all ampurity. It may be said either privately, or in company, or in a mosque—although services in a mosque are more meritorious than those elsewhere

The stated prayers are always preceded by the ablution of the face, hands, and feet.

[ABLUTION]

At the time of public prayer, the mu'azzın, or "orier," ascends the minaret, or stands at the side of the mosque nearest the public thoroughfare, and gives the azān, or 'call to prayer," as follows—

"God is great! God is great! God is great! God is great!

I bear witness that there is no god but God!

I bear witness that there is no god but God!

I bear witness that Muhammad is the Apostle of God!

I bear witness that Muhammad is the Apostle of God!

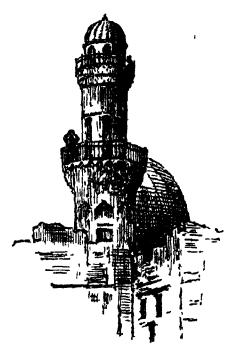

Come to prayers ! Come to prayers!
Come to salvation! Come to salvation!

(The Shirahs add "Come to good works!")

There is no other god but God!"

(The Shi ahs resite the last sentence twice)

In the early norms, the following sentence is added 'Prayers are better than sleep!"

THE MU'AZZIN CALI ING THE AZAN FROM A MINARRY (A F Hole.)

When the prayers are said in a congregation or in the mosque, they begin with the Iqamah, which is a recitation of the same words as the azān, with the addition of the santence, "Prayers are now ready!" The regular form of prayer then begins with the Negal, which is said standing, with the hands on either side

"I have purposed to offer up to God only, with a sincere heart this morning (or, as the case may be), with my face Qiblah-wards, two (or, as the case may be) rak'sh prayers Farz (Sunnah, or Naft)"

THE TAKBIR-I FAHRIMAH

Then follows the Takber-1 Tahremah, said with the thumbs touching the lobules of the ears and the open hands on each side of the face -

" God is great!"

THE OTTAM

The Qiyam, or standing poor on The right hand placed upon the left, below the navel (the Shafi'is, and the two other orthodox sects place their hands on their breasts as also the Wahhabis, the Shrahs keep their hands on either side. In all the sects the women perform the Qiyam with their hands on their breasts), and the eyes looking to the ground in self-abasement. During which is said the Subhan (the Shr'ahs omit the Subhan) -

"Holmess to Thee, O God! And praise be to Thee! Great is Thy name! Great is Thy greatness! There is no deity but Thee!"

The Taiawwuz, or Aiuzubillah, is then said as follows -

'I seek refuge from God from cursed Satan

After which the Tasmiyah is repeated -

"In the name or God, the compassionate, the merciful."

Then follows the Fatthah, use the first chapter of the Qur'an .

"Praise be to God, Lord of all the worlds! The compassionate, the merciful!

King of the day of reckoning ! Thee only do we worship, and to Thee only do we cry for help Guide Thou us in the straight path, The path of these to whom Thou hast been gracious,

With whom I hou art not angry, And who go not astray —Amen"

After this the worshipper can repeat as many chapters of the Quran as he may wish, he should, at least, recute one long or two short verses The following chapter is usually recited, namely the Suratu'l-Ikhlas, or the 112th chapter

"Say He is God alone God the Eternal! He begetteth not, And is not begotten, And there is none like unto Him."

THE RUKUS

The Takber-e-Ruku, said whilst making an inclination of the head and body and placing the hands upon the knees, separating the fingers a little

"God is great "

The Tasbih-1-Rukü<sup>4</sup>, said in the same pos-

"I extol the holmess of my Lord, the Great!

> (The Shirahs here add "and with His praise" This is also added by the Shi'ahs to the Tashib-i Sijdah)

"I extol the holmess of my Lord, the Great!

"I extol the holmess of my Lord, the Great!

The Qıyam-ı-Samı Ullah or Tasmi, said with the body erect, but, unlike the former Aryam, the hands being placed on either

THE TASMI

The Imam says aloud (when the prayers are said by a person alone, he recites both sentences) —

"God hears him who praises Him " The people then respond in a low voice-' O Lord, Thou art praised."

TAKBIRU '8-BIJDAH

Takber e-Sydah, said as the worshipper drops on his knees

"God is great!"

Tasbib-t-Sijdsh, recited as the worshipper puts first has nose and then has forehead to the ground

THE TASBIR-I-SIJDAR.

"I extol the holiness of my Lord, the most Hogh!

"I extol the holiness of my Lord, the most High!

"I extel the holmess of my Lord, the most High in Then raising his head and body and sinking backward upon his heels, and plucing his hands upon his thighs, he says the Takbir 1-Jalsah (the Shi ahs here omt the Takbir, and say instead, "I rise and sit by the power of God!"

' God is great!"

THE TAKBIR-I JALSAR.

Then, whilst prostrating as before, he says the Takbur-i-Sydah

"God is great!"

And then during the prostration the Tasbibt-Sijdah us before

"I extel the heliness of my Lord, the most High!"

"I extol the holmess of my Lord, the most High!"

"I extol the holiness of my Lord, the most High!"

Then, if at the close of one rak'ah, he repeats the Takhir standing, when it is called Takhir-i-Quyan, but at the end of two rak ahs, and at the close of the prayer, he repeats it sitting, when it is called Takhir-1-Qu'ad (The Shi ahs here recite the Takbir — God is great!" with the thumbs touching the lobules of the ear, and add, "I seek forgiveness from God, my Lord, and I repent before Him!"

" God is great!"

Here ends one rak ah or form of prayer The next rak ah begins with the Fatihah or 1st chapter of the Qur'an At the close of every two rakiahs he recites the Tahiyah, which is said whilst kneeling upon the ground. His left foot bent under him he sits upon it, and places his hands upon his knees and says (the Sheahs omit the Takıyah) -

HAYIHAT INT

"The adorations of the tengue are for God, and also the adorations of the body and alms-giving!

"Peace be on thee, O Prophet with the mercy of God and His blessing!

"Peace be upon ns and upon God's righteous servants!"

THE TASHABIUD

Then raising the first finger of the right hand he recites the Tashahhūd -

"I testify that there is no derty but God (the Shrahs add, "who has no partner"), and I testify that Muhammad is the servant of God, and the messenger of God!"

(Every two rak ahs close with the Tashah had The Darud is said whilst in the same posture)

"O God have mercy on Muhammad and on his descendants (the Shi als mercly recits "God have mercy on Muhammad and his descendants" and omit the rest), as Thou didst have mercy on Abraham and on his descendants Thou art to be praised, and Thou art great O (rd, bless Muhammad and his descendants, as Thou didst bless Abraham and his descendants!

"Thou art to be praised, and Thou art great ! "

Then the Dura' -

"O God our Lord, give us the blessings of this life, and also the blessings of life everlasting Save us from the torments of (The Du'il is amitted by the Ski'ahs, who recite the fullouing instead, "Peace be on thes, O Irophet with the mercy of God and His blessing! Peace be upon us, and upon God righteous servants!"

He then closes with the Sulam

THE SALAM

Turning the head round to the right, he "The peace and mercy of God be with you "

THE SALAM.

Turning the head round to the left, he says "The peace and mercy of God be with yon"

At the close of the whole set of prayers, that is of Farz, Sunnah, Naft, or Wetr, the worshipper raises his hands and offers up a Munajat, or "supplication" This usually consists of prayers, selected from the Qur'an or Hadis They ought to be said in Arabic, although they are frequently offered up in the vermacular

Such supplications were highly commended by Muhammad, who is related to have said -

"Supplication is the marrow of worship." "There is nothing better before God than supplication."
"Supplicate God when ye are cartain of its approval, and know that God accepts not the supplication of a negligent heart"

"Verily your Lord is ashamed of his servants when they raise up their hands to Him in supplication to return them empty"

These daily prayers are either Farz, Sunnak, Naft, or Wetr Farz, are those rakahs (or forms of prayer), said to be enjoined by God Sunnah, those founded on the practice of Muhammad. Nah, the voluntary performance of two rak'ahs, or more, which may be omitted without sin. Witr, an odd number of rak'ahs, either one, three, five, or seven, said after the night prayer. These divisions of player are entirely distinct from each other. They each begin afresh with the Nayah, and worshappers may rest for awhile between them, but not converse on worldly The Wahhābis think it correct to say the Sunnah prayers in their houses and only the Farz prayers in the mosque

The five times of prayer are known as Luhr, 'Asr, Maghrib, Isha, and Fajr There are also three voluntary periods called Ishraq,

Luha, and Tahamud

The following is a table showing the exact number of rak'she to be performed at each Service -

Muslim recites the same form of prayer at least seventy-five times in the day

'Abdu 'lish ibn 'Umar relates that the Prophet said, "The time for Zuhr prayers begins from the inclination of the sun towards the west and closes at the time when the shadow of a person shall be the length of his own stature, which time marks the beginning of the 'Asr prayers, and the time of the 'Asr prayers is from that time till the sur assumes a yellow appearance The time of Maghreb prayers is from sunset as long as the red appearance in the horizon remains The time of 'Isha' prayers is from that time tall midnight And the time of the Fayr prayers is from the break of day till the sun rises Therefore, when the sun has risen you must not recite the morning prayer, for the sun rises between the horns of the devil" (Mishkat, book iv ch 11.)

It is the ordinary custom of Muslims to say then prayers with their feet uncovered, but strictly according to the Traditions it is lawful to cover the feet with boots or shoes during prayer, provided they are free from impurity

Shaddad ibn Aus relates that Muhammad said, "Act the reverse of the Jews in your prayer, for they do not pray in boots and shoes"

Abu Sa'id al-Khudri relates that ' the Prophet said prayers with his companions, and all on a sudden took off his shoes, and put them down on his left side, and when the people observed it, they took off theirs also, and when the Prophet had finished the prayers, he said 'What caused you to take off your shoes?' They replied, 'We did so in order to follow your example' And the Prophet said, 'Verily Gabriel came to me and told me there was a little filth upon my shoes, therefore, when any one of you goes into a Masjid, look well at your shoes first, and if you perceive any dirt, wipe it off, and then say your prayers in them (Mıshkät, book w ch ix pt 2)

Any wandering of the eyes, or of the mind, a coughing or the like, answering a question, or any action not prescribed to be performed, must be strictly avoided (unless it is between the Sunnah prayers and the ferz, or be difficult to avoid, for it is held allowable to make three slight irregular motions, or deviations from correct deportment), otherwise, the worshipper must begin again and recite his prayers with due reverence

If a person arrive late, he merely recites the Niyah and Takbur, and then joins the congregation in that part of the service in which they are engaged.

The Muslim may say his five daily prayers in his home, or shop, or in the street or road, but there are said to be special blessings attending prayer recited in a congregation

In addition to the daily prayers, the fol lowing are special services for special occa-

The liturgical service of the Muslim is not given in the Qur'an, but is founded upon very minute matructions given by the Prophet, and which are recorded in the Traditions, and for which the Arabic scholar can refer to Sahihu 'l-Bukharı, vol 1 p 50, Sahihu Muslim, vol. 1 p 164, Sunanu 'l-Tirmizi, p 22, Sunanu Abu Da'ud, p 56 Sunanu Muwatta', p 50, and the English reader to Matthew's Mashkāt book iv

The following are selections from the sayings of Muhammad with reference to the Liturgical prayers (vide Mishhāt, book iv ) —

'That which leads a creature into infidelity is neglect of prayers"

"Not one of you must say your prayers in a garment without covering your whole body

"God accepts not the prayers of a woman arrived at puberty unless she covers her

'People must not lift up their eyes whilet saying their prayers, or they will become blind"

"The prayers which are said in congregation increase the rewards of those said alone by twenty seven degrees." [MOSQUE]

"The five stated prayers erase the suns which have been committed during the intervals between them, if they have not been mortal sins "

"That prayer preparatory to which the teeth shall have been cleaned with the Miswak is more excellent than the prayer without Miswak by seventy" [MISWAK]

"The prayers of a person will not be accepted who has broken his ablution until he completes another ablution."

"That person who leaves even one hair without washing after uncleanness, will be punished in hell accordingly " "When any one of you stands up for prayer, he must not smooth the ground by wiping away pebbles, because the com-passion of God descends upon him at that time"

"Order your children to say the stated prayers when they are seyen years of age, and beat them if they do not do so when they are ten years old, and when they reach ten years, divide their beds "

"When you stand up to prayer, spit not in front, because you are then in God's pre sence, neither spit on your right side, because an angel is there. Spit, therefore either on your left side or under your feet, and then throw earth over it"

"Whoever says twelve rak'ahs of Sunnals prayers in the day and night, will have a house built for him in Paradise, four rak'ahs before the noon-day prayer, and two rak'ahs after it, and two after sunset prayer, and two rak'ahs after evening prayer, and two before morning prayer"

""Tell me if any one of you had a rivulet before his door and bathed five times a day in it, whether any dirt would remain upon his body' The Companions said, 'Nothing would remain' The Prophet said 'In this manner will the five daily prayers as ordered by God erase all little sins'"

"When any one of you says his prayers, be must have something in front of him, but if he cannot find anything for that purpose, he must put his walking-stick into the ground, but if the ground be hard, then let him place it lengthways in front of him, but if he has no staff, he must draw a line on the ground, after which there will be no detri ment in the prayers from anyone passing in front of it " [SUTRAH.] "The best prayers for God were those of

David the prophet, and the best fast are his David used to sleep half the night and would be woke, and in prayer a third part of the night and would fast one day and cut another "

The form of prayer, or rak ahs, as given above, admit of no variations whether they are used in private or public, and consequently notwithstanding the beauty of its devotional ianguage, it is simply a superstitions act having very little in common with the Chris tian idea of prayer

We translate the Arabic Salāt, and the Parsian Numaz by the English word prayer although this "second foundation" of the re ligion of Muhammad is something quite dis tinct from that prayer which the Christian post so well describes as the "soul's sincere destre uttered or unexpressed " It would be more correct to speak of the Muhammadan Salāt as a service, "prayer" being more correctly rendered by the Arabic du'ā' In Islam prayer is reduced to a mechanical act, as distinct from a mental act, and in judging of the spiritual character of Muhammadan-18m, we must take into careful consideration the precise character of that devotional service which every Muslim is required to render to God at least five times a day, and which undoubtedly, exercises so great an influence upon the character of the followers of Muhammad

The devotions of Islam are essentially "vain repet tions," for they must be said in the Arabic language, and admit of no change or variety. The effect of such a constant round of devotional forms, which are but the service of the hips, on the vast majority of Muhammadans, can be easily imagined absence of anything like true devotion from these services, accounts for the fact that religion and true piety stand so far apart in the practice of Islam

The late Dean Stanley remarks (Eastern Church, p 279), "The ceremonial character of the religion of Musalmans is, in spite of its simplicity, carried to a pitch beyond the utmost demands either of Rome or of Russia Prayer is reduced to a mechanical act as distinct from a mental act, beyond any ritual observances in the West It is striking to see the figures along the banks of the Nile going through their prostrations at the rising of the sun, with the uniformity and regularity of clockwork, but it resembles the worship of machines rather than of reasonable beings"

PRAYERS FOR THE DEAD According to the teaching of Muhammad, it is the duty of all true Mushms to pray for the dead (Durru 'l-Mulhtar, p 135) See also Mishkāt, book v chap iii.

"God most certainly exalts the degree of a virtuous servant in Paradise, and the virtuons servant says, 'O my Lord, from whence is this exalted degree for me?' and God says, 'It is on account of your children asking pardon for you"

"The Prophet passed by graves in al-Madinah and turned his face towards them, and said, Peace be to you, O inhabitants of the graves! may God forgive us and you. Yo have passed on before us, and we are following you"

'A dead person in the grave is like one over his head in water, who calls to somebody to take him by the hand. For he has hope that his father or mother, or his brother, or his friend will pray for him For when the prayer reaches the dead person, it is more esteemed by him than the whole world, and all that is in it, and verily God most certainly gives to the dead, on account of the prayers of the people of the earth, rewards like mountains, for verily the offerings of the living for the dead are asking forgiveness for

Sürah lxxi. 29 And Noah said, O my

God, forgive me and my parents

Surah ix. 114, 115 "It is not for the Prophet to pray for the forgiveness of those, who, even though they be near of kin, associate other gods with God, after it hath been made clear to them that they are to be the inmates of bell. For neither did Abraham ask forgiveness for his father, but in pursuance of a promise which he had promised him, and when it was shown him that he was an enemy of God, he declared humself clear of him yet Abraham was pitiful and kind

It is related in the Traditions that the Prophet visited his mother's grave, and wept in such a way as to cause those who were standing around him to weep also. And the Prophet said, "I have asked my benefactor permission to ask pardon for my mother, which was not granted then. asked my Lord's permission to visit her grave and it was granted, therefore do ye visit graves, because they remind you of death"

PREACHER Preaching are four words generally used for a preacher kkatib (ملکر), muzakkır (ملکر) wā'ız (المامع), and nasek (والعدا)

Khatib is always applied to the official who recites the khutbah, or oration, in the Friday service. The other three terms are applied generally to preachers

In the present day, preaching seldom takes place in a mosque except on Fridays, when the khutbah is recited, although it is not forbidden, and Muhammad was frequently in the habit of addressing his people after the prayers were over

No Maulawi of reputation preaches in the street, but paid preachers sometimes under take the office.

PREDESTINATION Arabic qadar (قدر), the word generally used in the Hadis, taqdir (مقدير), the word usually employed in theological works Expressions which mean 'measuring out, or preordering '

Tagdir, or the absolute decree of good and evil, is the sixth article of the Muhammadan creed, and the orthodox believe that whatever has, or shall come to pass in this world, whether it be good or had, proceeds entirely from the Divine Will, and has been irrevocably fixed and recorded on a preserved tablet by the pen of fate The doctrine, which forms a very important feature in the Muslim systen is thus taught in the Qui'an — Sürah liv. 49 "All thirgs have been created after fixed decree" (qadar)

Surah in. 189 "No one can die except by God's permission according to the book that fixeth the term of hic Surah lxxxvii 2 "The Lord hath created and balanced all things and hath fixed their destines and guided them" Surah viii 17 "God slew them, and those shafts were God's, not thine Surah ix 51 "By no means can aught befall us but what God has destined for us <sup>8</sup>

Sürah xun 30 "All sovereignty is in the hands of God."

Sürsh xiv 4 "God misleadeth whom He will, and whom He will He guideth" Sürsh xviii. 101 "The infidels whose eyes were veiled from my warning and had no power to hear"

The teaching of Muhammad, as given in the Traditions handed down by al-Bukhari and Muslim, is as follows ;--

"God created Adam, and touched his back with his right hand, and brought forth from it a family, and God said to Adam, I have created this family for Paradise, and their actions will be like unto those of the people of Paradise' Then God touched the back of Adam, and brought forth another family, and said, I have created this for hell, and their actions will be like unto those of the people of hell. Then a man said to the Prophet, Of what use will deeds of any kind be? He said, 'When God createth His servant for Paradiso, his actions will be deserving of it until he die, when he will enter therein, and when God createth one for the fire, his actions will be like those of the people of hell till he die, when he will enter therein."

"'There is not one amongst von whose place is not written by God, whether in the fire or in Paradise' The Companions said, O Prophet! since God hath appointed our places may we confide in this and abandon our religious and moral duties?' He said, 'No, because the righteous will do good works and the wicked will do bad works After which the Prophet read this yerse from the Quran 'To him who giveth alms, and feareth God and yieldeth assent to the excellent creed, to him will we make easy the path to happiness But to him who is worldly and is indifferent, and who does not believe in the excellent creed, to him will we make easy the path of misery

'The first thing which God created was a pen, and He said to it 'Write' it said, 'What shall I write? And God said, 'Write down the quantity of every individual thing to be created ' and it wrote all that was and that will be, to eternity"

' God hath pre-ordained five things on his servants, the duration of hie their actions, their dwelling-places, their travels, and their portions "

When God bath ordered a creature to die in any particular place, he causeth his wants to direct him to that

"There is not one born but is created to Islam, but it is their fathers and mothers who make them Jews and Christians and Majūsī."

"It was said, 'O Prophet of God! inform me respecting charms, and the medicines which I swallow, and the shields which I make use of for protection, whether they prevent any of the decrees of God?' Muhammad said, These also are by the decree of God'"

"Verily God created Adam from a handful of earth, taken from all parts, and the children of Adam became different, like the earth, some of them red, some white, and some black, some between red, white and black, some gentle, and some severe, some impure and some pure"

"The Prophet of God was asked about the children of polythersts who might die in their infancy, whether they would go to heaven or hell. He said, 'God knoweth best what their actions would have been had they hved, it depends on this'"

"The Prophet of God came out of his house when the Companions were debating about fate, and he was angry, and became red in the face, to such a degree that you would say the seeds of a pomegranate had been bruised on it And he said, 'Hath God ordered you to debate of fate? Was I sent to you for this? Your forefathers were destroyed for debating about fate and destiny, I adjure you not to argue on those points "

(See Ahadigu 'l-Bukhari and Muslim, in loco) [PRESERVED TABLET]
The doctrine is expressed in an Arabic treatise on the subject, as follows -

"Faith in the decrees of God, is that we believe in our heart and confess with our tongue that the Most High God hath decreed all things, so that nothing can happen in the world, whether it respects the conditions and operations of things, or good or evil, or obedience and disobedience, or faith and infidelity, or sickness and health, or riches and poverty, or life and death, that is not contained in the written tablet of the decrees of God God hath so decreed good works, obedience, and faith, that He ordains and wills them, and that they may be under His decree, His salutary direction, His good pleasure and command On the contrary, God hath decreed, and does ordain and determine evil, disobedience and infidelity yet without His salutary direction, good pleasure, and command; but being only by way of seduction, indignation, and prohibition But whoseever shall say that God is not delighted with good faith, or that God hath not an indignation against evil and unbelief, he is certainly an mfidel "

There are three well defined schools of thought on the subject

"First —The Jabrians (Jabariyan), so called from the word "jabr" compulsion, deny all free agency in man and say that man is necessarily constrained by the force of God's eternal and immutable decree to act as he does They hold that as God is the absolute Lord, He can, if He so wills, admit all men into Paradise, or cast all into hell This sect is one of the branches of the Ash'arians with whom on most points they agree

" Secondly -The Qudrians (Qadariyun), who deny Al-Qadr, or God's absolute decree, say that evil and injustice ought not to be attributed to God but to man, who is altogether a free agent God has given him the power to do or not to do an act. This sect is generally considered to be a branch of the Mutamitte body (Mu'tamiah), though in reality it existed before Wasil quitted the school of his master Hasan As Wasil, however, followed the opinions of Mabad-al-Johní, the leading Qadrian divine, the Mutazilites and

Qadrians are practically one and the same
"Thirdly—The Ash'arians maintain that God has one eternal will which is applied to whatsoever He willeth, both of His own actions and those of men, that He willeth that which He knoweth and what is written on the preserved table, that He willeth both good and evil. So far they agree with the Jabrians, but then they seem to allow some power to man The orthodox, or Sunni belief is theoretically Ash'arian, but practically the Sunnis are confirmed Jabrians The Mutazilite doctrines are looked upon as quite

"No subject has been more warmly discussed in Islam than that of predestination The following abstract of some lengthy discussions will present the points of difference.

"The Ash'erians, who in this matter represent in the main orthodox views, formulate their objections to the Mutazilite system thus -

"(1) If man is the causer of an action by the force of his own will, then he should also have the power of controlling the result of that action

"(11.) If it be granted that man has the power to originate an act, it is necessary that he should know all acts, because a creator should be independent in act and choice Intention must be conditioned by knowledge To this the Mutazilites well reply that a man need not know the length of a road before he walks, or the structure of the throat before he talks

"(iii) Suppose a man wills to move his body and God at the same time wills it to be steady, then if both intentions come to pass there will be a collection of opposites, if neither, a removal of opposites, if the exal tation of the first, an unreasonable prefer-

"(1v) If man can create an act, some of his works will be better than some of the works of God, eg a man determines to have faith now faith is a better thing than reptiles, which are created by God

'(v) If man is free to act, why can he not make at once a human body, why does he need to thank God for grace and faith?

"(vi) But better far than all argument, the orthedox say, is the testimony of the Book All things have we created under a fixed deoree' (Sura hv 49) 'When God created you and that ye make' (Sura xxxvii 94) Some of them there were whom God guided and there were others decreed to err' (Sura xv: 88) As God decrees faith and obedience He must be the causer of it, for 'on the hearts of these bath God graven the Faith' (Sura lvm 22.) 'It is he who causeth you to laugh and weep, to die and make alive' (Súra lin. 44) 'If God pleased He would surely bring them, one and all, to the guidance '(Súra vi 36) 'Had God pleased, He had guided you all aright' (Súra vi 150) 'Had the Lord pleased, He would have made markind of one religion.' (Sura zi 120) 'God will mislead whom He pleaseth, and whom He pleaseth He will place upon the straight path' (Súrah vi 39) Tradition records path' (Surah vi 39) Tradition records that the Prophet said 'God is the maker of all makers and of their actions

"The Mutazilites took up the opposite side of this great question and said -

"(1) If man has no power to will or to do, then what is the difference between praising God and sinning against Him, between faith and infidelity, good and evil, what is the use of commands and prohibitions, rewards and punishments promises and threats wha is the use of prophets books &c

"(ii.) Some acle of men are bad, such as tyranny and polytheum If these are created by God it follows that to tyramise and to ascribe plurality to the Deity is to render obedience To this the Ash arians reply that orders are of two kinds, immediate and me diate The former, which they call 'Amr-i-takwini,' is the order Be and it was' This comprehends all existences and according to it whatever is ordered must come to pass The latter they call 'Amr-1 tashri 1,' an older given in the Law This comes to men through prophets and thus is to be obeyed True obedience is to act according to that which is revealed, not according to the secret intention of God, for that we know not

"(in) If God decrees the acts of men, He should bear the name of that which he de crees Thus the causer of infidelity is an infidel, of tyranny a tyrant, and so on but to speak this of God is blasphemy

"(iv) If infidelity is decreed by God He must wish it, but a prophet desires faith and obedience and so is opposed to God. To this the orthodox reply that God knows by His eternal knowledge that such a man will die an infidel If a prophet intends by bringing the message of salvation to such an one to make God's knowledge become ignorance he would be doing wrong, but as he does not know the secret decrees of God his duty is to deliver his message according to the Hadis A prophet has only to deliver the clear message

"(v) The Mutaulites claimed as on their aide all verses of the Quran, in which the words to do, to construct, to renew, to create, &c., are applied to men Such are the verses · Whatever is in the heavens and the earth is God's that He may reward those who do evil according to their deeds and those who do good will He reward with good things' (Sura lin 82) 'Whose shall have wrought cvil shall not be recompensed but with its like but whose shall have done the things that are right whether male or female and is a he haver these shall enter Paradise (Súra xl 43) 'Say the truth is from the Lord let him then who will, believe and let him who will, be an infidel (Sura xviii 28) 'Those who add gods to God will say If God had pleased neither we nor our fathers had given Him companions Say Verily ve follow Him companions Say Verily ve follow only a concent ye utter hee' (Sura vi 149) The Hadis is also very plain. 'All good is in Thy bands and evil is not to Thee

'The Ash'arians have one famous text which they bring to bear against all this reasoning and evidence. It is 'This truly is a warning, and whose willeth, taketh the way of his Lord, but will it ye shall not, unless God will it, for God is knowing, wise (Súra lxxvi 29, 80) To the Hadis they reply (1) that there is a difference between acquies cence in evil and decreeing it Thus the ex pression 'God willeth not tyranny for His servants, does not mean that God hath not decreed it, but that tyranny is not one of His attributes so evil is not to Thee means it is not an attribute of God and (2) the Hadis must be explained in accordance with the teaching of the Quran

"The Muslim philosophers tried to find a way out of the difficulty Averhoes says We are free to act in this way or that, but out will is always determined by some exte-Hor cause For example, we see something which pleases us, we are drawn to it in spite of ourselves Our will is thus bound by exterioi causes These causes exist according to a certain order of things which is founded on the general laws of nature. God alone knows beforehand the necessary connection which to us is a mystery The connection of our will with exterior causes is determined by the laws of nature. It is this which in theo logy we call, 'decrees and predestination (Mélanges de Philosophie Juive et Arabe, par S Munk, p 458.)

PRE-EMPTION Arabic Shufak Let "Adjunction" ( desb ) right of pre emption is a power of possess ing property which is for sale, and is established upon the teaching of Muhammad It applies not to movable property but to im movable property ('agar) This right of movable property ('agar) This right of pre emption appertains in the first place to the combarer or partner in the property. secondly, to a shares in the immunities and appendages of the property, such as the right to water, or to roads, and thirdly, to the neighbour (Hidayah, vol in p 594)

PRE-EXISTENCE OF SOULS 18 taught both m the Qu'ran and the Traditions.

lyshab relates that Muhammad said, " Souls before they became united with bodies were like assembled armies, and afterwards they were dispersed and sent into the bodies of maukind" (Mishkat, book xxii ch xvi)

There is said to be a reference to this doc trine in the Qur'an -

Surah vii 171 " And when the Lord drew forth their posterity from the loins of the sons of Adam

The commentator, al-Baizawi says God stroked Adam's back and extracted from his loins his whole posterity, which should come into the world until the Resurrection one generation after another and that these souls were all assembled together like small ants and after they had in the presence of the angels confessed their dependence upon God, the) were again caused to return into the loins of Adam" (See Tafsiru 'l-Baizaun, in

PRESERVED TABLET According to the teaching of Muhammad, both the actions of men and the Quran were recorded before creation upon a preserved tablet called Louis Mahfuz (harris), Sürah xxxv 32 "And if they treat thee as a har, so did those who were before them treat their Apostles who came to them with the process of their mission, and with the Scriptures and with the clear Book". and Imain Afubia (مراحة على المحالة), Sürah xxxvi 11 "Verily, it is We who will quicken the dead, and write down the works which they have sent on before them, and the traces which they shall have left behind them and everything have we set down in the clear Book of our decrees [PREDESTIMATION, QURAN]

PRIDE, Arabic kibr ( ), is forbidden in the Quran, see Surah avi: 39 "Walk not proudly on the earth, truly thou canst by no means cleave the earth neither canat thou reach the mountains in height all this is evil with thy Lord and odious."

PRIEST There is no sacerdotal class of ministers in the Muhammadan religion. The leader of the daily prayers is called an Imam. [IMAM.]

PRIVACY OF DWELLINGS is established by the teaching of Muhammed, and it is therefore unlawful to enter the house without Islagan, or asking permission. The injunction is given in the Quran Surah xxiv 27-29—

"O ye who believe! enter not into other houses than your own, until ye have sked leave, and have saluted its inmates. This will be best for you haply ye will bent this in mind. And if we find no one therein, thou enter it not till loave be given you, and if it be said to you, 'Go ye hank' then go ye back. This will be more blameless in you, and God knoweth what yo do. There shall be no harm in your entering houses in which no one dwelleth, for the supply of your needs, and God knoweth what ye do openly and what ye hide?"

Atā ibn Yasar relates that "A man once asked the Prophet Must I ask leave to go into the room of my mother?' The Prophet said, 'Yes' Then the man said, 'But I live in the same home' The Prophet said, Yes even if you live in the same home' The man said, 'But I wait upon her!' The Prophet, But you must ask permission, for, what' would you like to see your mother naked?' It is further related that Muhammad al-

It is further related that Muhammad always went first to the right and then to the left of a door which had no curtain, and salamed several times before he outered. (Miskkal, book xxii ch ii)

This has necome an established role in the East and it is considered very rude to enter any dwelling without first giving netice

PROHIBITED DEGREES OF MARRIAGE According to the Qui in they are seven 1, mother 2 daughter, 3 sixter. 4, paternal aunt, 5, maternal aunt, 6 sister's daughter, 7, brother's daughter And the same with regard to the other sex. It is also unlawful for a Muslim to marry his wife's sister (see Lev xviii, 18) or his wife's aunt during the histome of his wife. Foster age in Muslim law establishes relationship, and therefore a fdater-sister or a fester-brother is unlawful in marriage [MARRIAGE.]

PROPHET The Arabic words used to express the prophetic office are sabi (رسول), pl ambiya', rasid (رسول), pl. rusul, and mussal (مرسول), pl mussalin. In Per sian, the three titles are invariably translated by the word paughambar (ربوعي) (دو ي mossenger)

Nabe is the Hebrew nabi Name, which Gesenius says means "one who bubbles forth" as' a fountain. The Arabic lexicon, the Gamus, derives the word from nuhe, "to be exaited."

According to Muhammadan writers a nabiis anyone directly inspired by God, and resuland mursal, one to whom a special mission has been entrusted

Muhammad is related to have said (Mishkat, book xxiv ch. pt. d) that there were 124 000 ambigat, or prophets, and 315 apostles or messengers. Nine of these special messengers are entitled Utū l-Azm, or 'possessors of coustancy, numely, Nosh Abraham, David, Jacob Joseph, Joh, Mores, Jerus, and Muhammad. Six are dignified with special titles. Adam bofuju 'llan, the Chosen of God, Nosh, Nabigu 'llāh, the Preacher of God, Ab. iham, Khaliu 'llāh, the Friend of God, Muses Kalimu 'llāh, the Converser with God, Jesus, Ruhu 'llāh, the Spirit of God, Muham mad Rasālu 'llāh the Messenger of God

The number of sacred hooks delivered to mankind is said to have been 104 (see Mayo-lisu !- 1b-ār, p 55), of these, ten were given to Adam, fifty to Seth (a name not mentioned in the Qurün), thirty to Enoch, ten to Abrabam, the Faurat to Moses, the Zabūr to David the lnjil to Jesus, and the Qur'ün to Muhammiad

The one hundred scriptures given to Adam Seth, Enoch, and Abraham are termed Sahrfok (a pamphlet), and the other four Kitab (a book), but all that is necessary for the Mushm to know of these inspired records is supposed to have been retained in the Qur'an

Muhammad's enumeration of the Old and New Testament prophets, both as to name and chronological order, is exceedingly confused, and it is acknowledged to be a matter of doubt amongst Muslim commentators whether or not Alexander the Great and Esop were inspired prophets

The names of twenty-eight prophets are said to occur in the Qur'an —

Adam, Adam, Idris, Enoch, Nüb, Noah, Hud, Heber?, Säleb, Mothusaleh, Ibrahm, Abraham, Ismäul, Ishmael Ishäg, Isaac, Ya'qüb, Jacob Yüsuf Joseph, Lül, Lot, Müsa Moses Härür, Aaron, Shu'aib, Jethro? Zakarīyā, Zacharias, the father of John the Baptist, Yahyā, John Baptist, 'Isū, Jesus, Da'ūd, David, Sulamās, Solomon, Ilyās, Elias, Alyava', Elisha Aiyūb Job, Yunus Jonah; 'Uzar Ezra, Luqmān, Esop? more likely Balaam, Zū 'l-Kif, Isaish or Obadish? Zū 'l Qarnain, Alexander the Great.

An account of these prophets will be found under their respective names

A Persian book, entitled the Quasu 't-Ambiya, the "Tales of the Prophets," professes to give an account of the prophets mentioned in the Qur'an, but the utter recklessness of the writer passes all description for example, it is a matter of uncertainty whether Zu 'l-Qarnam is Alexander the Great or some celebrity who lived in the days of Abraham!

PROPHETESSES It is said that only three women have been prophetesses Sarah, the mother of Moses, and Mary, the daughter of 'Imran for Sarah received by revelation the news of Isaac's burth, the birth of Moses was divinely communicated to his mother, and Mary received from an angel the happy tidings of the birth of Jesus (See happy tidings of the birth of Jesus (See Hist of Temple of Jerusalem translated from the Arabic )

PSALMS OF DAVID, The, [EABLE ]

PUBERTY Arabic bulūgh (طوع), bulugh yat (الرخية) The puberty of a boy is established as soon as the usual signs of manhood arc known to exist, but if none of these signs exist, his publity is not clearly established until he have completed his eighteenth year. The puberty of a gul is established in the same way, but if the usual signs of womanhood are known not to exist her puberty is not established until her seventeenth year has been completed This is according to the teaching of the Iniam Abu Hanifah But his two disciples maintain that upon either a boy or girl completing the fifteenth year, they are to be declared adult The Imam ash Shah I concurs in this opinion, and it is said there is also a report of Abu Hanifah to the same effect. Inc earliest period of puberty with respect to a boy is twelve years, and with respect to a girl nine years

When a boy or garl approaches the age of puberty and they declare themselves adult, their declaration must be oredited and they then become subject to all the laws affecting adults, and must observe all the ordinances of Translation, vol in p 483 Janan'r Ruma. the Muslim faith Jánan 'r Rumūz, Durru 'l-Mukhtar )

Syed Ameer All says -

"The validity of marriages contracted for minors by any guardian other than the father or the grandfather, is not established until ratified by the parties on arriving at puberty Such ratification in the case of males must be express, and in the case of females may be either express or implied. On arriving at puberty, both the parties have the right of either ratifying the contract entered into during their minority or of cancelling it According to the Sunnis, in order to effect a dissolution of the matrimonial tie, in exercise of the right of option reserved to the parties, it is necessary that there should be a decree of the judge, and until such necree is made, the marriage remains intact. If before a decree has been obtained one of the parties should die, the survivor would be entitled to inherit from the deceased

"The Shighs differ materially from the Sunnis on this They hold that a marriage contracted on behalf of minors by any unauthorised person (fuzuli), ie any person other than a father or a grandfather, remams in absolute suspension of abeyance until assented to by the parties on arriving at puberty, that in fact, no legal effect arises from it until such ratification, and if in the interval previous to ratification, one of the parties should die the contract would fall to the ground and there would be no right of (Personal Law inheritance in the survivor ' of the Mahommedans, p 269)

PULPIT The pulpit or mimbar سنمر), used for the recital of the khutbah on Fridays in the chief mosque is usually a wooden structure of three steps and movable, but in the large mosques of Turkey and Egypt it is a flature of brick or stone

It is related that the Prophet, when addressing the people, stood on the uttermost step, Abū Bakr on the second, and 'Umar on the third or lowest 'Usman being the most humble of men, would gladly have descended lower, but this being impossible, he fixed upon the second step, from which it is now usual to recite the khutbah on Fridays and on the two great festivals [MOSQUE MIM BAR.]

PUNISHMENT is divided into three classes · (1) Hadd (-), (2) Qısās (قماص), (3) Ta'zib (تعذيب)

(1) Hadd (12), pl Hudud (ht. "That which is defined'), is that punishment the limits of which have been defined in the Qur in and The following belong to this class -

(a) Adultery, zing (all), for which the adulterer must be stoned, ram ( ) (Mishkāt, book zv ch 1)

(b) Formcation, zino (all), for which the guilty persons must receive one hundred at ripes (Qui'an, Surah xxiv 2)

(c) The faine accusation of a married per son with adultery, quef (قذف), for which the offender must receive eighty stripes (Qur'an, Sürah xxiv 4)

- (d) Apostacy, ertidad (القال), which is punishable with death (Mishkat, book xiv ch v)
- (e) Drinking wine, shurb (حرب), for which the offender must receive eighty lashes (Mishkat, book xv ch. 1v)
- (f) Theft, saraqah (سرقة), which is punished by cutting off the right hand. (Quran, Sürah v 42.)
- (g) Highway robbery, qat u't-tariq (200 for robbery only, the loss of hands and feet, and for robbery with murder, death, either by the sword or crucifixion (Qur'an, Sürah v 87)
- (2) Qsaās (قساص), kii "retaliation," is that punishment which, although fixed by the law, can be remitted by the person offended against, or, in the case of a murdered person, by his heirs It is applicable to cases of murder and of wounding Quees is the lex talsons of Moses "Eye for eye, tooth for tooth, burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe (Exodus xxi 24), but in allowing a money compensation, Muhammad departed from the Jewish Code (Qur'an, Suich ii
- (3) Ta'zib (أملية), is the punishment which is left to the discretion of the Qāzī or Judge. [HADD, QISAS, TA'ZIB.]

PUNISHMENTS THE GRAVE. [AFABU 'L-QABR ]

PURGATORY [BABZAKH]

PURIFICATIONS Arabic jaharah (قارة). The legal methods of purification under the Muhammadan law vary but slightly from those which were enjoined in the Talmudic law of the Jews, with the remarkable difference that whilst with the Muslim the simple act of purification suffices, the Jew was taught by the use of expiatory offering to discern to its full extent the connection between the outward sign and the inward fount of impurity

The most minute regulations with reference to the subject of legal purification, were laid down in the Jewish law, and are found in a treatise of the Mishna entitled Yadaim. Sealso Leviticus zv

The following are the different acts of purification existing in Muhammadan law -

- 1 Ghust (غسل) The washing of the whole body to absolve it from uncleanliness and to prepare it for the exercise of prayer, after the following acts pollutio nocturna, menses, costus puerpersum. [GHUBL]
- 2 Ghusl masnum (غسل مسنون) Such washings of the whole body as are founded upon the sunnah or practice and precept of Muhammad, although they are not supposed to be of divine institution, namely, upon the admission of a convert to Islam before the Friday prayer, on the festivals, after washing the dead, and after blood-letting [GRUSL MASNUM ]
- 3 Wazu' (وطوه), or the simple ablation of hands, arms, ears, face, mouth, &c , before the recital of the usual prayers [ABLUTION ]
- 4 Tayyammum ( ), or the use of sand or dust instead of water for the ward [ MUMMAYAT]
- ة Istinja' (منحما), or the abstersion of the private parts [ISTINJA'] 6 Miswak (منحوالي), or the cleansing of
- the teeth [MISWAR]
- 7 Mash (----), or the touching of the boots whereby they become purified for prayer [MASAH.]
- 8 Tather ( yeld), or the cleaning of vessels, articles of clothing, &c, from impurity. which is generally done by applying either water, or sand and dust, the mere sprinkling being sufficient [TATHIR]

QAZF (ILL. "Throwing at " Accusing a virtuous man or woman of adultery, the punishment for which is eighty lashes, or, in the case of a slave, forty lashes. This punishment was established by a supposed revelation from beaven, when the Prophet's invounte wife, 'Ayubah, was accused of improper intimacy with Salwan Ibau 'l-Mu'attil Vide Qur'an Suratu 'n-Nur (xxiv), 4 "But to those who accuse married persons of adultery and produce not four witnesses, them shall ye scourge with four score stripes" (Hiddysk, vol ii. p 58.)

QIBLAH (44) "Anything opposite." The direction in which all Muhammadans must pray, whether in their public or in their private devotions, namely, towards Makkah. It is established by the express injunction of the Qur'an, contained in the Suratu l-Bagarah (n), 136-145 —

"Fools among men will say, What has turned them from their Qiblah on which they were agreed? Say, God's is the east and the west, He guides whom He will unto the right path. Thus have we made you a middle nation to be witnesses against men, and that the apostle may be a witness against you We have not appointed the qibish on which thou wert agreed, save that we might know who follows the Apostle from him who turns upon his heels, although it is a great thing save to those whom God doth guide But God will not waste your faith, for verily God with men is kind and merciful We see thee often turn about thy face in the heavens, but we will surely turn thee to a giblah thou shalt like Turn, then, thy face towards the Sacred Mosque, wherever ye be turn your faces towards it, for verily those who have the Book know that it is the truth from their Lord God is not careless of that which ye do And if thou shouldst bring to those who have been given the Book every sign, they would not follow your giblah, nor do some of them follow the giblah of the others, and if thou followest their lusts after the know ledge that has come to thee, then art thou of the evil-doors Those whom we have given the Book know him as they know their sons, although a sect of them do surely hide the truth the while they know The truth (18) from thy Lord, be not therefore one of those who doubt thereof Every sect has some one side to which they turn (in prayer), but do ye hasten onwards to good works, wherever ye are, God will bring you all together Verily, God is mighty over all From whencesoever thou comest forth, there turn thy face towards the Sacred Mosque for it is surely truth from thy Lord, God is not careless about what ye do And from whencesoever thou comest forth, there turn thy face towards the Sacred Mosque, and wheresoever ye are, turn your faces towards it, that men may have no argument against you, save only those of them who are unjust, and fear them not, but fear me, and I will fulfil my favour to you, perchance ye may be guided vet '

In explanation of these verses (which are allowed to be of different periods), and the change of Qiblah, al-Baizāwı, the commentator, remarks that when Muhammad was in Makkah he always worshipped towards the Kabah, but after the flight to al-Madinah, he was ordered by God to change his Qiblah towards as Sakhrah, the rock at Jerusalem on which the Temple was formerly erected, in order to conciliate the Jews, but that, about sixteen months after his arrival in al-Madinah, Muhammad longed once more to pray towards Makkah, and he besought the Lord to this effect, and then the instructions were revealed, "Verily we have seen thee turning thy face," &c , as given above. (See al-Barzawi, in loco)

This temporary change of the Qiblah to Jerusalem is now regarded as "a trial of faith," and it is asserted that Makkah was always the true Qiblah But it is impossible for any non-Muslim not to see in this transaction a piece of worldly wisdom on the part of the Prophet

Jalalu 'd-din as-Suyūtī admits that the 110th verse of the 1md Sunah—which reads "The east and the west is God's, therefore whichever way ye turn is the face of God "--has been abrogated by a mere recent verse. and that at one time in the history of Muhammad's mission there was no Qiblah at

the Arabs, p 58 —
"There have been few incidents more disastrous in their consequences to the human race than this decree of Muhammad, changing the Kibls from Jerusalem to Mekka Had he remained true to his earlier and better faith, the Arabs would have entered the religious community of the nations as peace-makers, not as enemies and destroyers To all alike— Jews, Christians, and Muhammadans—there would have been a single centre of holiness and devotion, but the Arab would have brought with him just that element of conviction which was needed to enlarge and vivily the preceding religions. To the Jew he would have been a living witness that the God who spake in times past to his fathers by the prophets still sent messengers to men, though not taken from the chosen seeds—the very testimony which they needed to rise out of the conception of a national derty to that of a God of all men

' To the Christians, his deep and ardent conviction of God as a present hving and working power, would have been a voice recalling them from their petty sectarian squabbles and virtual idolatry, to the presence of the living Christ By the change of the Kible. Islam was placed in direct antagonism to Judaism and Christianity It became a rival faith, possessing an independent centre of existence It ceased to draw its authenticity from the same wells of inspiration. Jew and Christian could learn nothing from a creed which they knew only as an exterminator, and the Muhammadan was condemned to a moral and intellectual isolation. And so long as he remains true to his creed, he cannot participate in the onward march of men. The keystone of that oreed is a black pebble m a heathen temple All the ordinances of his faith, all the history of it, are so grouped round and connected with this stone, that were the odour of sanctity dispelled which surrounds it, the whole religion would inevitably perish. The further and the faster men progress elsewhere, the more hopeless becomes the position of the Muslim He can only hate the knowledge which would gently lead him to the light Chamed to a black stone in a barren wilderness, the heart and reason of the Muhammadan world would seem to have taken the similitude of the objects they reverence, and the refreshing dews and genial sunshines which fertilise all else, seek in vain for anything to quicken there." (Islam under the Arabs, p. 58)

Copt The Christian descendants of the Ancient Egyptians, derived from Coptos, a great city in Upper Egypt now called Gooft The favourite clave of Muhammad, Māriyah, was a Copt, and is known in Muslim history as Mariyatu l Qibtivah [Muhammad, Wives of]

QISAS (in the footsteps of an enemy in the law of retaliation. The lex talsons of the Mosaic law with the important difference that in the Muslim law the next of kin can accept a money compensation for wilful murder.

The subject of retaliation must be considered, first, as to occasions affecting life and, secondly, as to retaliation in matters short of life

(1) In occasions affecting life, retaliation is mourred by wilfully killing a person whose blood is under continual protection, such as a Muslim or a Zimmi, in opposition to aliens who have only an occasional or temporary protection. A freeman is to be slain for a freeman and a slave for a slave, but according to Abū Hanifah, a freeman is to be slain for the murder of a slave if the slave be the property of another. A Muslim is also slain for the murder of a zimmi, according to Abū Hanifah, but ash-Shāfit disputes this, because the Prophet said a Muslim is not to be put to death for an infidel. A man is slain for a woman, an adult for an infant, and a sound person for one who is blind, infirm, dismembered, lame, or insane A father is not to be slam for his child, because the Prophet has said, "Retaliation must not be executed upon the parent for his offspring", but a child is slam for the murder of his parent A master is not slain for his slave, and if one of two partners in a slave kill such a slave, retaliafron is not incurred. If a person inherit the right of retaliating upon his parent, the retalistion fails Retaliation is to be executed by the next of kin with some mortal weapon or sharp instrument capable of inflicting a mortal wound.

If a person immerse another, whether an infant or an adult into water from which it is impossible to escape, retaliation, according to Abū Hanīfah, is not incurred, but his two disciples maintain otherwise

(2) Of retaliation short of life. If a person wilfully strike off the hand of another, his hand is to be struck off in return, because it is said in the Qur'an (Surah v 49), "There is retaliation in case of wounds" If a person strike off the foot of another, or cut off the nose, retaliation is inflicted in return. If a person strike another on the eye, so as to force the member, with its vessels, out of the sorket, there is no retaliation, it is impossible to preserve a perfect equality in extract-ing an eye. If, on the contrary, the eye remain in its place, but the faculty of seeing be destroyed, retaliation is to be inflicted, as in this case equality may be effected by extinguishing the sight of the offender's corresponding eye with a hot iron If a person strike out the teeth of another, he mours retaination for it is said in the Qur'an, "A tooth for a tooth." (Sülah v 49)

Retaliation is not to be inflicted in the case of breaking any bones except teeth, because it is impossible to observe an equality in other fisctures. There is no retaliation, in offences short of life, between a man and a woman, a free person and a slave, or one slave and snother slave, but ash-Shāfi'i maintains that retaliation holds in these cases. Retaliation for parts of the body holds between a Muslim and an unbeliever, both being upon an equality between each other with respect to fines for the offences in question.

If the corresponding member of the mainer be defective, nothing more than retaliation on that defective member, or a fine, and if such member be in the meantime lost, nothing whatever is due

There is no retaliation for the tongue or the virile member

(8) Retaliation may be commuted for a sum of money When the heirs of a murdered person enter into a composition with the murderer for a certain sum, retaliation is remitted, and the sum agreed to is due, to whatever amount This is founded upon an express injunction of the Qui an "Where the heir of the murdered person is offered anything, by way of compensation, out of the property of the murderer, let him take it." And also in the Traditions, it is related that Muhammad said (Mushkut book xiv) where heir of the murdered person is at liberty either to take retaliation, or a fine with the murderer's consent. Moreover, it is main tained by Muhammadan jurists that retaliation is purely a matter which rests with the next of kin who are at liberty to remit entirely by pardon, and that therefore a compensation can be accepted which is advantageous to the heirs and also to the murderer.

When a person who has incurred retaliation dies, the right to retaliation necessarily ceases, and consequently no fine is due from the murderer's estate [MURDER.]

QISSIS (""") Persian kashish A Christian presbyter or priest. The word oscurs once in the Qur'an, Sürah v. 80 "Thou shalt certainly hind those to be nearest in affection to them who say 'We are Christians' This because some of them are pricets (quesisin) and monks (ruhban), and because they are free frein pride" intexcating, it is, therefore, evident that opium and all intexicating drugs are also forbidden

Cryan-1-Khaf: is seen in the following example —In the Hadis it is enjoined that one goat in forty must be given to God. To some poor persons the money may be more acceptable, therefore, the value of the goat may be given instead of the goat.

QUBA' (ab.) A place three miles from al-Madinah, where the Prophet's shecamel, al-Qaşwa' knelt down as she brought her master on his flight from Makkah, and where Muhammad laid the foundations of a mosque This was the first place of public brick with his javoim and marked out the direction of prayer. It is this mosque which is mentioned in the Qur'an, Surah ix 109—"There is a mosque founded from its first day in piety. More worthy is it that thou enter therein therein are men who aspire to parity, and God loveth the purified."

It is esteemed the fourth mosque in rank, being next to that of Makkah, al Madinah, and Jerusalem, and tradition relates that the Prophet said one prayer in it was equal to a lesser pilgitimage to Makkah [UMRAH.]

Captain Lurton says -

"It was originally a square building of very small size Osman enlarged it in the direction of the immaret, making it sixty-six cubits each way. It is no longer 'mean and decayed as in Burckhardt's time. The Sultan Abdel Ham it father of Mahmud, created a neat structure of out stone, whose created a neat structure of out stone, whose created as heat took more like a place of defence than of prayer. It has, however, no preten sions to mandeur. The minaret is of l'urkish shape. To the south, a small and nurrow Riwak out ago, or raised hypostyle, with unpretend g columns, looks out northwards upon a little open area simply sanded over and this is the whole building."

AL-(UDDUS (July) "The Holy" me of the minety mine names of God It occurs in the Qur'an, Surah in 23 'He is God beside whom there is no deity, the Ling, the Holy'

A special supplication and after the Wift prayers, or, according to some, after the morning prayers. It was at such times that the Prophet would pray for the liberation of his friends and for the destruction of his enemies.

For the different forms of supplication, see Mishkat, book iv chapters xxxvi and xxxvii. The following is the one usually recited. O God! direct me amongst those to whem Thou hast shown the right road, and keep me in safety from the calamities of this world and the next and love me amongst those Thou hast befriended Increase Thy tavours on me, and preserve me from ill, for verily Thou panet order at Thy will, and canst not be ordered. Verily none are sumed that Thou befriendest, nor are any made great with whom Thou art at enmity "

(تربش / QURAISH The Arabian tribe from which Muhammad was descended, and of which his grandfather, 'Abdu I-Muttallb was chief or prince This tribe occupies a very prominent place in the Qur'an and in Muhammadan history In the Tradi tions, a special section is set spart for a record of the savings of the Prophet regarding the good qualities of this tribe

Muhammad is related to have said "Who seever wishes for the destruction of the Quraish, him may God destroy "

Ibn 'Umar relates that the Prophet said, "The office of Khalifah should be in the Quraish as long as there are two persons left in the tribe, one to be ruler and the other to be ruled " (Mishkāt, book xxiv c xii)

(قريطة) QURAIZAH A tribe of Jews located near al-Madinah in the time of Muhanmad They at first professed to support his mission, but afterwards became disaffected The Prophet asserted that he had been commanded by God to destroy them, and a complete massacre of the men took place, and the women and children were taken captive. The event is referred to at length in the xxxiird Surah of the Qur'an

Sir William Muii thus records the event -"The men and women were penned up for the night in separate yards, they were sup plied with dates, and spent the night in prayer, repeating passages from their Scriptures, and exhorting one another in constancy During the night graves or trenches sufficient to contain the dead bodies of the men were dug in the chief market place of the city When these were ready in the morning, Mahomet, himself a spectator of the tragedy, gave command that the captives should be brought forth in companies of five or six at a time. Lacn company was made to sit down by the brink of the trench destined for its grave, and there beheaded Party after party they were thus led out, and butchered in cold blood, till the whole were slain () ne woman alone was put to death. It was she who threw the millstone from the battlements For Zoheir an aged Jew, who had saved some of his allies of the Bani Aus in the battle of Boath, Thabit interceded and procured a pardon, including the freedom of his family and restoration of his property what hath become of all our chiefs,—o of Kab, of Huwey, of Ossal, the son of Samuel? asked the old man As one after another he named the leading chiefs of his tribe, he re ceived to each inquiry the same reply,-they had all been slain already 'Then of what use is life to me any longer? Leave me not to that bloodthursty man who has killed al. that are dear to me in cold blood But elsy me also, I entreat thee Here, take my me also, I entreat thee sword, it is sharp, strike high and hard Thabit refused, and gave him over to another who under Ah's orders, beheaded the sged man, but attended to his last request in obtaining freedom for his family When Mahomet was told of his saying. Slay me also. that I may go to my home and join those that have preceded me, he answered, 'Yes he shall join them in the fire of hell?'

"Having sated his revenge, and drenched the market-place with the blood of eight hundred victims, and having given command for the earth to be smoothed over their remains, Mahomet seturned from the horrid spectacle to solace immself with the charms of Rihâna, whose husband and all whose male relatives had just perished in the massacre. He invited her to be his wife, but she declined, and chose to remain (as, indeed, having refused marriage, she had no alternative) his slave or concubine She also dechined the summons to conversion, and continued in the Jewish faith, at which the Prophet was much concerned It is said, however, that she afterwards embraced Islam She lived with Mahomet till his death

"The booty was divided into four classes lands, chattels, cattle and slaves, and Ma-homet took a fifth of each There were (besides little children who counted with their mothers) a thousand captives, from his share of these, Mahomet made certain presents to his friends of slave girls and The rest of the women and female servants children he sent to be sold among the Bedouin tribes of Najd, in exchange for horses and arms for he kept steadily in view the advantage of raising around him a body of efficient (Life of Mahomet, vol ill. p 276.) horse '

in the Arabic language

The word Qur'an is derived from the Arabic Qara which occurs at the commencement of Sürah zev, which is said to have been the first chapter revealed to Muhammad, and has the same meaning as the Heb Karā, "to read," or "to recite," which is frequently used in Jeremiah xxxvi. as well sa in other places in the Old Testa-It 18, therefore, equivalent to the ment Heb Nach mikra, rendered in Nebemush vill B, "the reading ' I' is the title given to the Muhammadar Scriptures which are naily appealed to and quoted from as al-srān al-Majīd, the "Glorious Qur'ān", Qur'ān ash-Sharīf, the "Noble Qur'ān , d is also called the Fürgān, "Distu-nisher', Kalāmu'llah, the "Word of God", According to Jalain 'd-din as-Snyūṭī, in s Itqān, p 117, the Qur'an is distinguished the text of the book by the following ity-five special titles -

I -The Inspiration of the Qur'an

According to Abu Hanifah the great Sunni Imum, the Qur'an is eternal in its original essence He says, "The Qur'an is the Word of God and is His inspired Word and Revelation It is a necessary attribute (sifak) of God It is not God, but still it is (sifak) of God inseparable from God It is written in a volume, it is read in a language, it is remembered in the heart, and its letters and its vowel points, and its writing are all created, for these are the works of man, but God's word is uncreated (ghairu 'l-makh/ūq) words, its writing, its letters, and its verses, are for the necessities of man, for its meaning is arrived at by their use, but the Word of God is fixed in the essence (zat) of God, and he who says that the word of God is created (See Kıtābu 'l-Wasıyah, ıs an ınfidel" p 77)

Muhammadans believe the Qur'an to have been written by 'the hands of noble, righteous scribes" mentioned in the Suratu Abasa (lxxx) 15 and to have been sent down to the lowest heaven complete, from whence it was revealed from time to time to the Prophet by the angel Gabrier [GA-BRIEL

There is, however, only one distinct asser tion in the Qur'an of Gabriel having been the medium of inspiration, namely, Surata 1 Baqarah (11), 91 and this occurs in a Medinah Sürah revealed about seven years after the Prophet's rule had been established In the Suratu 'sh-Shu'arā' (xxvi), 193, the Qui'an is said to have been given by the Ribu ''-Amm, or "Faithful Spirit", and in the Suratu 'n-Najm (lui), 5, Muhammad claims to have been taught by the Shadidu "LQuwa, or "One terrible in power", and in the fraditions the agent of inspiration is generally spoken of as "an angel" (malak)
It is, therefore, not quite certain through what agency Muhammad believed himself to be inspired of God, the Holy Spirit or the angel Gabriel

According to the traditions, the revelation was first communicated in dreams . Ayishah, one of the Prophet's wives, relates (Mishkat, xxiv 5)

"The first revelations which the Prophet received were in true dreams, and he never dreamt but it came to pass as regularly as the dawn of day After this the Prophet was fond of retirement, and used to seclude himself in a cave in Mount Hira' and worship there day and night He would, whenever he wished, return to his family at Mak kah, and then go back again, taking with him the necessaries of life. Thus he continued to return to Khadijah from time to time, until one day the revelation came down to him, and the angel (Arabic malak, Heb malakh, "an angel a prophet", a name of office, not of nature [See Wilson's Hebrew Lexicon, p 13]) came to him and said, 'Read' (1972'), but the Prophet said, 'I am not a reader' And the Prophet related that he (18 the angel) took hold of me and squeezed me as much as I could bear, and he then let me go and said again, 'Read!' And I said, 'I am not a reader' Then he took hold of me a second time, and squeezed me as much as I could bear, and then let me go, and said, 'Read!' And I said, 'I am not a reader' Then he took hold of me a third time and squeezed me as much as I could bear, and said.—

"'Read! in the name of Thy Lord who created,

Created man from a clot of blood in the womb

Read! for thy Lord is the most bene ficent ficent, He buth taught men the use of the pen, He hath taught man that which he knoweth not?

(These are the first five verses of the xc with Surah of the Qur an. The other verses of the Surah being of a later dute)

"Then the Prophet repeated the words himself, and with his heart trembling he returned (re from Hira'to Makkah) to Khadi-jah, and said, 'Wrap me up, wrap me up' And they wrapped him up in a garment till his fear was dispelled, and he told Khadijah what had passed, and he said 'Verily I was afraid I should have died' Then Kha dijah said, 'No, it will not be so I swear by God, He will never make you melinchely or sad. For verily you are kind to your relatives, you speak the truth, you are faithful in trust, you bear the afflictions of the people, you spend in good work- what you gain in trade, you are hospitable, and you assist your fellow men After this Khadijah took the Prophet to Waraqah, who was the son of her uncle, and she said to him, O son of my uncle! hear what your brothers son says' Then Waraqah said to the Prophet, 'O son of my brother' what do you see?' Then the Prophet told Waraqah what he saw, and Waraqah said 'That is the Namus [NAMUS] which God sent to Moses' 'Āyıshah also relates that Haris ibn Hishām asked the Prophet, 'How did the revelation come to you?' and the Prophet said, 'Some times like the noise of a bell, and sometimes the angel would come and converse with me in the shape of a man'"

According to 'Ayıshah's statement, the Süratu 'l-'Alaq (xvvi) was the tirst portion of the Qur'an revealed, but it is more probable that the poetical Süraha, in which there is no express declaration of the prophetic office, or of a divine commission, were composed at an earlier period Internal evidence would assign the earliest date to the Süraha az-Zalzalah (xcix), al-'Asr (cix.); al-'Adyāt (c), and al Fātiḥah (1), which are rather the utterances of a searcher after truth than of an Apostle of God.

Although the Qur'an now appears as one book, the Muslim admits that it was not all made known to the Prophet in one and the same manner

Mr Sell, in his Faith of Islam, quoting from the Mudărija n-Nubawah p 509, gives the following as some of the modes of inspiration—

"I It is recorded on the authority of 'A' yesha, one of Muhammad's wives, that a brightness like the brightness of the morning came upon the Prophot According to some commentators, this brightness remained six months In some mysterious way Gabriel, through this brightness or vision, made known the will of God

"2. Gabriel appeared in the form of Dah-1ah (Dahyah), one of the Companions of the Prophet, renowned for his beauty and gracefulness. A learned dispute has arisen with regard to the abode of the soul of Gabriel when he assumed the bodily form of Dahiah At times, the angelic nature of Gabriel overcame Muhammad, who was then translated to the world of angels. This always happened when the revelation was one of bad news, such as denunciations or predictions of wor. At other times, when the message brought by Gabriel was one of consolation and comfort, the human nature of the Prophet overcame the angelic nature of the angel, who, in such case, having assumed a human form, proceeded to deliver the mes-

"3 The Prophet heard at times the noise of the tinking of a bell. To him alone was known the meaning of the sound He alone could distinguish in, and through it, the words which Cabriel wished him to understand The effect of this mode of Wahi (Wahy) was more marvellous than that of any of the other ways When his ear caught the sound his whole frame became agitated On the coldest day the perspiration, like beads of silver, would roll down his face. The glorious brightn 44 of his countenance gave place to a ghastly hue, whilst the way in which he bent down his head showed the intensity of the emotion through which he was passing. If riding, the camel on which he sat would fall to the ground. Prophet one day, when reclining with his head on the lap of Zeid, heard the well-known sound Zeid, too, knew that something unusual was happening for so heavy became the head of Muhammad that it was with the greatest difficulty he could support the weight

"4 At the time of the Mi'ray, or night ascent into heaven, God spoke to the Prophet without the intervention of an angel it is a disputed point whether the face of the Lord was veiled or not.

"5 God sometimes appeared in a dream, and placing his hands on the Prophet's shoul ders made known his will.

"6 Twice, angels having each six hundred wings, appeared and brought the message from God

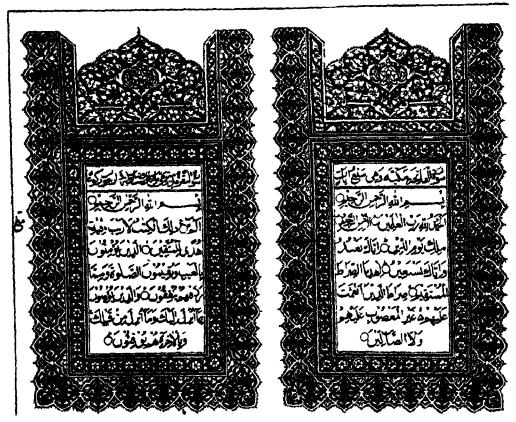

"7 Gabriel, though not appearing in bodily form, so inspired the heart of the Prophet, that the words he uttored under its influence were the words of God This is technically called lika (Ilqā'), and is by some supposed to be the degree of inspiration to which the Traditions belong (See as-Suyāti' Itqān,

"Above all, the Prophet was not sllowed to remain in any error if, by any chance he had made a wrong deduction from any provious revelation, another was always sent to rectify it. This idea has been worked up to a soletice of abrogation according to which some verses of the Quran abrogate others. Muhammad found it necessary to shift his stand-point more than once, and thus it be same necessary to annul earlier portions of his revelation. [Mansukh.]

"Thus in various ways was the revelation made known to Muhammad At first there seems to have seen a season of doubt, the dread lest after all it might be a mockery But as years rolled on, confidence in himself At times, too, and in his mission came. there is a joyousuess in his utterances as he swears by heaven and earth, by God and man but more often the visions were weird and terrible fradition says -" He roared like a camel, the sound as of belis well-nigh rent his hear in pieces" Some strange power moved him, his fear was uncentred lable. For twenty years or more the revela tions came, a direction on things of heaven and of earth, to the Prophet as the spiritual guide of all men, to the Warrior Chief, as the founder of political unity among the Arab tribes

II - The Collation of the Quran

The whole book was not arranged until after Muhammad's death, but it is believed that the Prophet lumself divided the Surahs [surahs] and gave most of them their present titles, which are chosen from some word which occurs in the chapter—the following is the account of the collection and arrange ment of the Qur'an, as it stands at present as given in traditions recorded by al-Bukhari (see Sahihu 'l-Bukhari Arabic ed , p 745)

"Zaid ibn Sabit relates — Abn Bakr sent a person to me, and called me to him, at the time of the battle with the prople of Yamāmah, and I went to him and 'Umar was with him and Abn Bakr said to me, 'Umar came to me and said, Verily a great many of the readers of the Qur'an were slain on the day of the battle with the people of Yamā-mah; and really I am afraid that if the slaughter should be great, much will be lost from the Qur'an, because every person remembers something of it, and, verily, I see it advisable for you to order the Qur'an to be collected into one book ' I said to 'Umar, How can I do a thing which the Prophet has not done?' He said, 'I swear by God, this collecting of the Qur'an is a good thing' And 'Umer used to be constantly returning to me and saying 'You must collect the Qur'an' till at length God opened my breast so to do, and I saw what Umar had been advising' And Zaid ibn Sabit says that. 'Abu Bakr said to me, "You are a young and sensible man, and I do not suspect you of forgetfulness,- negligence, or perfidy, and, verily, you used to write for the Prophet his matructions from above, then look for the Quran in every place and collect it. I said, I swear by God that if people had ordered me to carry a mountain about from one place to another, it would not be heavier upon me than the order which Abn Bakr has given for collecting the Qur'an " I said to Abn Bakr, "How do you do a thing which the Prophet of God did not?" He said, "By God, this col-lecting of the Quran is a good act." And he used perpetually to return to me until God put it into my heart to do the thing which the heart of Abu Bakr had been set upon Then I sought for the Qur'an, and collected it from the leaves of the date, and white stones and the breasts of people that remembered it, till I found the last part of the chapter entitled Tunba (Repentance), with Abu Khuzaimah al-Ausari, and with no other person These leaves were in the possession of Abu Bakr, until God caused him to die, after which 'Umar had them in his life-time, after that, they remained with his daughter, Hafaah after that, 'Usman compiled them into one book '

Anas ibn Mālik relates 'Huzuifah came to Usman and he had fought with the people of Syria in the conquest of Armenia, and had tought in Azurbaijan, with the people of al-'Iraq, and he was shorked at the different ways of people reading the Qur'un And Husaifah said to 'Uaman, 'O 'Uaman, assist this people, before they differ in the Book of God, just as the Jews and Christians differ in their books." Then 'Usman sent a person to Hafsah ordering her to send those portions which she had, and saying, "I shall have a number of copies of them taken, and will then return them to you" And Haisah sent the portions to 'Usman, and 'Laman ordered Zaid ton Sabit, Ansari, and Abdu 'liah ibn az Zubair, and Saudibn Alias, and 'Abdu 'r-Rahman ibn al-Harıs ibn Hisham, and these were all of the Quraish tribe except Zaid ibn Sabit and 'Usman And he said to the three Quraishites, "When you and Zaid ibn-Sabit differ about any part of the dialect of the Qur'an, then do ye write it in the Quraish dialect, because it came not down in the language of any tribe but theirs" Then they did as Usman had ordered, and when a number of copies had been taken. 'Usman returned the leaves to Hafsah. And 'Usman sent a copy to every quarter of the countries of Islam, and ordered all other leaves to be burnt, and Ibn Shahab said 'Khārījah, son of Zaid ibn Sābit, informed me, saying, 'I could not find one versa when I was writing the Qur'an, which, verily, I heard from the Prophet then I looked for it, and found it with Khuzaimah, and entered it into the Süratu 'I-Ahzab'.

This recension of the Qur'an produced by the Khalifah 'Usman has been handed down to us unaltered, and there is probably no other book in the world which has remained twelve centuries with so pure a text

Sir William Muir remarks in his Lafe of Mahomet -

"The original copy of the first edition was obtained from Haphsa's (Hafsah) depository, and a careful recension of the whole set on foet. In case of difference between Zaid and his conductors the voice of the latter, as demonstrative of the Coreishite idiem, was to preponderate, and the new collation was thus assimilated to the Meccan dialect, in which the Prophet had given utterance to his inspiration. Transcripts were multiplied and forwarded to the chief cities in the empire, and the previously existing copies were fill, by the Caliph's command committed to the ilames. The old original was returned to llaphsa's custody

"The recension of Othman ('Usman) has been handed down to us unaltered. So carefully, indeed, has it been preserved, that there are no variations or importance,—we rought almost say no variations at all, amongst the innumerable copies of the Coran scattered throughout the vast bounds of the empire of Islam.

' Contending and embittered factions, taking their rise in the murder of Othman himself within a quarter of a century from the death of Mahomet, have ever since rent the Mahometan world Yet but one Coran has been current amongst them, and the consentaneous use by them all in every age up to the present day of the same Scripture, is an irrefragable proof that we have now before us the very text prepared by command of the unfortunate Caliph There is probably in the world no other work which has remained twelve centuries with so pure a text. The various readings are wonderfully few in number, and are chiefly confined to differences in the vowel points and discritical signs. But these marks were invented at a later date

They did not exist at all in the early copies, and can hardly be said to affect the text of Othman Since, then, we possess the undoubted text of Othman's recension, it remains to be inquired whether that text was an honest reproduction of Abu Bakr's edition, with the simple reconcilement of unimportant variations. There is the fullest ground for believing that it was so No early or trustworthy traditions throw suspicion of tampering with the Coran in order to support his own claims upon Othman. The Sheeahs (Shi'ahs)" of later times, indeed, pretend that Othman left out certain Suras of passages which favoured Ali But this is meredible. He could not possibly have done so without it being observed at the time and it cannot be imagined that Ali and his followers (not to mention the whole body of the Mussulmans who foully regarded the Coran as the word of God, would have permitted

such a proceeding

"In support of this position, the following arguments may be adduced. First When Othman's edition was prepared, no open breach had yet taken place between the Omeyads and the Alvites The unity of Islam was still complete and unthreatened Ali's pretensions were as yet undeveloped No sufficient object can, therefore, be assigned for the perpetration by Othman of an offence which Moslems regard as one of the blackest dye Second On the other hand, All from the very commencement of Othman's reign. had an influential party of adherents strong enough in the end to depose the Caliph, to storm his palace in the heart of Medina and to put an end to his life Can we conceive that these men would have remained quiet. when the very evidence of their leader's superior claims was being openly expunded from the book of God Third At the time of the recension, there were still multitudes alive who had the Coran, as origina y deli vered, by heart, and of the supposed passages favouring Ali-had any ever existedthere would have been numerous transcripts in the hands of his family and followers Both of these sources must have proved an effectual check upon any attempt at suppres sion. Fourth The party of Ali shortly after assumed an independent attitude, and he himself succeeded to the Caliphate. Is it possible that either Alı or his party, when thus arrived at power, would have tolerated a mutilated Ceran-mutilated expressly to destroy his claims. Yet we find that they used the same Coran as their opponents and raised no shadow of an objection against it

The insurgents are indeed said to have made it one of their complaints against Othman that he had caused a new edition to be made of the Coran, and had committed all the old copies to the flames but these proceedings were objected to simply as unauthorised and sacreligious No bint was dropped of any alteration of omission Such a supposition, palpably absurd at the time, is altogether an after-thought of the modern

"We may, then, safely conclude that Othman's recension was, what it professed to be. a reproduction of Abu Bakr s edition with a more perfect conformity to the dialect of Mecca, and possibly a more uniform arrange ment of its parts, but still a faithful repro duction

"The most important question yet remains, VIA Whetner Abu Baki's edition was itself an authentic and complete collection of Mahomets Revelutions The following considers tions warrant the behef that it was authentic and, in the main, as complete as at the time was possible

"First -- We have no reason to doubt that Abu Bakı was a sincere follower of Mahomet, and an earnest believer in the divine origin of the Coran His faithful attachment to the Prophets person, conspicuous for the last twenty years of his life, and his simple consistent, and unambitious deportment as Caliph, admit no other supposition Firmly believing the revelations of his friend to be the revelations of God himself, his first object would be to secure a pure and complete transcript of them A similar argument applies with almost equal force to Omar, and the other agents in the revision. The great mass of Mussulmans were undoubtedly sincere in their belief From the scribes themselves, employed in the compilation, down to the humilest believes who brought his little store of writing on stones or palm-loaves, all would be influenced by the same earnest desire to reproduce the very words which their Prophet had declared as his message from the Lord And a similar guarantee existed in the feelings of the people at large, in whose soul no principle was more deeply rooted than an awful reverence for the sup posed word of God The Coran itself con tains frequent denunciations against those was should presume to 'fabricate anything in the name of the Lord, or conceal any part of that which He had revealed. Such an action, represented as the very worst description of crime, we cannot believe that the first Moslems, in the early ardour of their faith and love, would have dared to contemplate

"Second — The compilation was made within two years of Mahomet's death. We have seen that several of his followers had the entire revelation (excepting, perhaps, some obsilete fragments) by heart, that every Moslem tressured up more or less some portions in his memory and that there were official Recitors of it, for public worship and tuition, in all countries to which Islam extended. These formed an unbroken link between the Revelation fress from Mahomet's lips and the edition of it by Zeid Thus the people were not only sincero and fervent in wishing for a fathrol copy of the Coran, they were also in possession of ample means for realising their desire and for testing the accuracy and completeness of the volume placed in their hands by Abu Baki

"Third -A still greater security would on obtained from the fragmentary transcripts which existed in Mahomets life time, and ah ch must have greatly multiplied before the Coran was compiled. These were in the possession, probably, of all who could read And as we know that the compilation of Abu Sakr came into immediate and unquestioned

&quot; Hayatu 1 Qulab, leaf 420 'The Angars were ordained to oppose the claims of the family of Muhammad and this was the reason why the other wretches took the office of Khalifah by force After thus treating one Khalifah of God, they then mutilated and changed the other Khalifah, which is the book of God.'

use, it is reasonable to conclude that it embraced and corresponded with every extent fragment, and therefore by common consent, superseded them. We hear of no fragments, sentences, or words, intentionally omitted by the compilers, nor of any that differed from the received edition Had any such been discoverable, they would undoubtedly have been preserved and noticed in those traditional repositories which treasured up the minutest and most trivial acts and sayings of the Prophet

"Fourth -The contents and the arrangement of the Coran speak forcibly for its authenticity All the fragments that could possibly be obtained have with artless simplicity been joined together The patchwork bears no marks of a designing genius or a moulding hand It testifies to the farth and reverence of the compilers, and proves that they dared no more than simply collect the sacred fragments and place them in juxtaposition. Hence the interminable repetitions, the palling reiteration of the same ideas, truths, and doctrines , hence, scriptural stories and Arab legends, told over and over again with little verbal variation, hence the pervading want of connection, and the startling chasms between adjacent passages Again, the frailties of Mahomet, supposed to have been noticed by the Deity, are all with evident faithfulness entered in the Coran. Not less undisguised are the frequent verses which are contradicted or abrogated by later revelations The editor plainly contented himself with compiling and copying out in a continuous form, but with scrupulous accuracy, the fragmentary materials within his reach He neither ventured to select from repeated versions of the same incident, nor to reconcile differences, nor by the alteration of a single letter to connect abrupt transitions of context, nor by tampering with the text to soften discreditable appearances. Thus we possess every internal guarantee of confidence

"But it may be objected,—if the text of Abu Bakr's Coran was pure and universally received, how came it to be so soon corrupted, and to require, in consequence of its variations, an extensive recension? Tradition does not afford sufficient light to determine the cause of these discrepancies They may have been owing to various readings in the older fragmentary transcripts which remained in the possession of the people, they may have originated in the diverse dialects of Arabia, and the different modes of pronunciation and orthography, or they may have sprung up naturally in the already vast domains of Islam, before struct uniformity was officially enforced. It is sufficient for us to know that m Othman's revision recourse was had to the original exemplar of the first compilation, and that there is otherwise every security, internal and external, that we pos-sees a text the same as that which Mahomet himself gave forth and used." (Lefe of Ma-Aomst, new ed., p. 557 et segq )

are not such as are usually understood by the term in English authors, but different dialects of the Arabic language. Ibn 'Abbas says the Prophet said, "Gabriel taught me to read the Qur'an in one dialect, and when I recited it he taught me to recite it in another dislect, and so on until the number of dislects increased to seven." (Mishkät. book n ch. ii)

Muhammad seems to have adopted this expedient to satisfy the desire of the leading tribes to have a Qur'an in their own dialect, for 'Abdu 'l-Haqq says, "The Qur'an was first revealed in the dialect of the Quaraish, which was the Prophet's native tongue, but when the Prophet naw that the people of other tribes recited it with difficulty, then he obtained permission from God to extend its currency by allowing it to be recited in all the chief dialects of Arabia, which were seven—Quraish, Taiy Hawazin, Yaman, Saqif, Huzail, and Banu Tamim Every one of these tribes accordingly read the Quran in its own dialect, till the time of Usman, when these differences of reading were prohibited '

These seven dislects are called in Arabic Sabatu Ahruf, and in Persian Haft Qəra at

III -The Divisions of the Qur'an

The Qur'an, which is written in the Arabic language, 18 divided into Harf, Kalimah, Ayah, Surah, Ruku, Rub, Nigf, Suig, Juz', Manzal

1 Harf (pl Huruf), Letters, of which there are said to be $28,671, or according to some authorities, 338,606.

2 Kalımah (pl. Kalımat), Words, of which there are 77,984 or, according to some writers, 79.984

8. Ayah (pl Ayat), Verses Ayak (Heb. 77N) is a word which signifies "sign." It was used by Muhammad for short sections or verses of his supposed revelation. The division of verses differs in different editions of the Arabic Qur'an The number of verses in the Arabic Qur'ans are recorded after the title of the Surah, and the verses distinguished in the text by a small cypher or circle. The early readers of the Quran did not agree as to the original position of these circles, and so it happens that there are five different systems of numbering the verses.

(a) Küfah verses. The Readers in the city

(a) Küfah verses. of al-Kufah say that they followed the custom of 'Ali Their way of reckoning is generally adopted in India They reckon 6,289 verses.

(b) Basrah verses The Readers of al-(b) Basrah verses The Beaders of al-Basrah follow Asim ibn Hajjāj, a Compa-nion. They reckon 5,204. (c) Shāmi verses, The Readers in Syria Sham) followed 'Abdu 'llah ibn 'Umar, a Companion. They reckon 6,225 verses

(d) Makkah verses. According to this arrangement, there are 6,219 verses. This way of reading

(e) Madinah verses contains 6,211 varses

4 Surah (pl. Sumar), Chapters A word which signifies a row or series, but which is now used exclusively for the chapters of the Qur'an, which are one hundred and four teen in number. These chapters are called after some word which occurs in the text, and, if the Traditions are to be trusted, they were so named by Muhammad himself, although the verses of their respective Surahs were undoubtedly arranged after his death, and sometimes with little regard to their sequence. Muslim doctors admit that the Khalifah 'Usman arranged the chapters in the order in which they now stand in the Qur'an

The Surahs of the Muhammadan Qur'an are similar to the forty-three d isions of the Law amongst the Jews known as DTTD Sidarum, or "orders" These were likewise named after a word in the section, e.g. The first is Bereshith, the second Noah &c. (See Buxtorf's Tiberias, p. 181)

Each Surah of the Qur'an, with the exception of the 1xth, begins with the words—

9 Juz' (pl. Ajza') Persian Suparah Thirty divisions of the Guran which have been made to enable the devout Muslim to recite the whole of the Guran in the thirty days of Ramazan Muhammadans usually quote their Gur'an by the Suparah or Juz' and not by the Surah

IV ... The Contents of the Qur'an and the Chronological Arrungement of its Chapters

In the Arabic Qur'an, the Surahs are placed as they were arranged by Zaid ibn Sabit, who seems to have put them together regardless of any chronological sequence The initial, or opening prayer, stands first, and then the longest chapters But the Muhammadan commentators admit that the Qur'an is not chronologically arranged, and Jalalu 'd-din, in his Itqan, has given a list of them as they are supposed to have been revealed This list will be found under the Divisions of the Qur'an in the present article And, what is still more confusing, all Muhammadan doctors allow that in some of the Surahs there are verses which belong to a different date from that of other portions of the chapter, for example, in the Suratu 1-'Alaq, the first five verses belong to a much earlier date than the others, and in Suratu 'l Bagarah, verse 284 is acknowledged by all commentators, to have been revealed after verse 240, which it abrogates

If we arrange the Sürahs or Chapters according to the order given in Suyüti's Itaan, or by Sir William Muir, or by Mr Rodwell, we cannot fail to mark the gradual development of Muhammad's mind from that of a mere moral toacler and reformer to that of a prophet and warnor-chief. The contrast between the earlier, middle, and later Sürahs is very instructive and interesting.

In the earlier Surahs we observe a predominance of a poetical element, a deep appreciation of the boauty of natural objects, fragmentary and impassioned utterances, denunciation of wee and punishment being expressed in these earlier Surahs with extreme brevity

" With a shange however, in the position or Muhammad when he openly assumes the office of 'public warner,' the Süraha hegin to wear a more prosaic and didactic tone though the poetical ornament of rhyme is preserved throughout We lose the poet in the missionary aiming to convert and in the warm assorter of dogmetic truths, the descriptions of natural objects, of the Judgment of Heaven and Hell make way for gradually increasing historical statements first from Jewish, and subsequently from Christian histories, while in the twenty-nine (thirty?) Surshs revealed at Medina we no longer listen to vague words often as it would seem, without defininite aim, but to the earnest disputant with the opponents of the new faith, the Apostle pleading the cause of what he believes to be the trutu of God. He who at Mecoa is the admomsher and persuader, at Medina is the legislator and the warrior dictating obedience, and who uses other wespons than the pen of the poet and the scribe, while we are startled by finding obedience to God and the Apostle, God's gifts and the Apostle's God's pleasure and the Apostle's, spoken of in the same breath, and epitheta and attributes elsewhere applied to Allah openly applied to hunself 'Whose obeyeth the Apostle obeveth Allah'

"The Suras, viewed as a whole, will thus appear to be the work of one who began his career as a thoughtful inquirer after truth, and as an earnest asserter of it in such rhetorical and postical forms as he deemed most likely to win and attract his countrymen, but who gradually proceeded from the dogmatic teacher to the political founder of a system for which laws and regulations had to be provided as occasions arose. And of all the Suras, it must be remarked that they were intended not only for readers but for hearers -that they were all promulgated by public recital—and that much was left, as the imperfect sentences show, to the manner and suggestive action of the reciter"

Preface to the Quran) (Rodwell's

The absence of the historical element from the Qur'an, as regards the details of Muhammad's daily life, may be judged of by the fact that only two of his contemporaries (Abu Lahab and Zaid) are mentioned in the entire volume, and that Muhammad's name occurs but five times, although he is all the way through addressed by the angel Gabriel as the recipient of the divine revelations, with the word "Sav" Perhaps also such passages as Sarah n verses 5, 246, and 274 and the constant mention of guidance, direction, wan dering, may have been suggested by reminiscences of his mercantile journeys in his earlier years.

Sir William Muir has very skilfully arranged the Surahs into six periods (See Corda, S P C K ed.), and although they are not precisely in the chronological order given by Jaialu d-Din in his Itaan the arrangement secoms to be fully horne out by internal evidence With the assistance of Prof Paimer's "Table of Contents" slightly altered (The Qur'ën, Oxford ed 1880), we shall arrange the contents of the Qur'ën according to these periods

V-Sources of the Qur'an

Muhammadanism owes more to Judaism (see a book by M Geiger, entitled, Was hat Muhammed aus dem Judenthume aufgenommen, in which that learned lew has traced all the leading features of Islam to Talmudic sources, also Literary Remains of Emanuel Deutsch, Essay on Islam, also article on Judaism in the present work) than it does to either Christianity or Saheanism, for it is simply Talmudic Judaism adapted to Arabia, plus the Apostleship of Jesus and Milhammad, and wherever Muhammad departs from the monotheistic principles of Judaism, as in the idclatrous practices of the Pilgrimage to the Kabah, it is evident that it is done as a necessary concession to the national feelings and sympathies of the people of Arabic and it is absolutely impossible for Munammadan divines to reconcile the idelatrous rites of the Ks can with that simple monothersm which it was evidently Muhammad's intention to establish in Arabia.

'The sources (says Mr Rodwell) whence Muhammad derived the materials of his Koran, are, over and above the more poetical parts which are his own creation, the legends of his time and country, Jowish traditions based upon the Talmud, and the Christian traditions of Arabia and of S Syria later period of his career, no one would ven ture to doubt the divine origin of his whole book But at its commencement the case was different. The people of Mecca spoke openly and tauntingly of it as the work of a poet, as a collection of antiquated or fabulous legends, or as palpable sorrery They aclegends, or as palpable sorcery cused him of having confederates, and even specified foreigners who had been his coad Such were Salman the Persian (Salman al-Farisi), to whom he may have owed the descriptions of heaven and hell, which are analogous to those of the Zendavesta, and the Christian monk Sergius, or, as the Muliammadans term him, Boheira (Buhai rah) From the latter, and perhaps from other Christians, especially slaves natura lized at Mecca, Muhammad obtained access to the teaching of the Apocryphal Gospels, and to many popular traditions of which those gespels are the concrete expression. His wife Chadijah (Khadijah) as well as her cousin Waraka (Waraqab), a reputed convert to .Christianity, and Mubanimad's intimate friend, are said to have been well acquainted with the doctrines and sacred books, both of Jews and Christians And not only were several Arab tribes in the neighbourhood of Mesca converts to the Christian faith but on two occasions single. All nad travelled with his uncle Abn Talib, as far as Bostra where he must have had opportunities of learning the general outlines of Oriental Christian doc trine, and perhaps of witnessing the ceremo nial of their worship

"It has been supposed that Muhammac derived many of his notions concerning Christianity from Gnosticism and that it is to the numerous Gnostic sects the Koran allade when it repreaches the Christians with having 'split up their religion into parties' But for Muhammad thus to have confounded Gnos ticism with Christianity itself, its prevalence in Arabia must have been far more universa than we have reason to believe that it reall' was In fact, we have no historical authority for supposing that the doctrines of thes heretics were taught or professed in Arabi at all It is certain, on the other hand, tha the Basilidans, Valentinians, and other Gnos tic sects had either died out, or been reab sorbed into the Orthodox Church, toward the middle of the fifth century, and had dis appeared from Egypt before the mxth. I remains possible, however, that the Gnosts doctrine concerning the Crucifizion may have been adopted by Muhammad as likely to re concile the Jews to Islam as a religion em bracing both Judaism and Christianity, i they might believe that Jesus had not bee put to death, and thus find the stumbling block of the Atonoment semoved out of ther path line Jews would, in this case, hav simply been called upon to believe in Jesu as a divinely born and inspired teacher, who like the patriarch Enoch, or the prophe Elijah, had been miraculously taken from the earth But, in all other respects, the sobe and matter of fact statements of the Koran relative to the family and history of Jeans are opposed to the wild and fantastic doc trines of Gnostic emanations, and especially to the manner in which they supposed Jesus, a his baptism, to have been brought into union with a higher nature. It is more clear tha Muhammad borrowed in several points from the doctrines of the Ebionites, Essenes, and Sabertes Epiphanius describes the notion of the Ebionites of Nabathes, Mosbites, and Basanites, with regard to Adam Jesus, almos in the very words of Sura iii. 52 He tells u that they observed circumcision, were opposed to celibacy, forbade turning to the sunrise, bu enjoined Jerusalem as their Keola (Qiblah), (a did Muhammad during twelve years), that they prescribed (as did the Sabeites) wash ings, very similar to those enjoined in the Koran and allowed oaths (by certain natura objects, as clouds, aigns of the Zodiac, oil, the winds, etc.), which also we find adopted therein These points of contact with Islam knowing as we do Muhammad's eclecticism can hardly be accidental.

"We have no evidence that Muhammad has acress to the Christian scriptures, though 1 is just possible that fragments of the Old o New Testament may have reached him through Chadijah or Waraka, or other Mec can Christiana, posser-ing Mas of our sacred volume l'nore is dui one direct quotation

(Sura xx: 105) in the whole Koran from the Scriptures, and though there are a few passages as where aims, are said to be given to be seen of men, and as, none forgiveth sens but God only, which might seem to be identical with texts of the New Testsment, yet this annularity is probably merely accidental It is, however, curious to compare such passages as Deut. xxvi 14, 17, and 1 Peter v 2 with Sura xxiv 50, and Sura x 78-John vn 15, with the 'witerate' prophet—Matt xxiv 36, and John xii 27, with the use of the word hour, as meaning any judgment or crisis, and the last Judgment—the voice of the Son of God which the dead are to hear, with the exterminating or awakening cry of Gabriel, etc. The passages of this kind, with which the Koran abounds, result from Muhammad s general acquaintance with scriptural phraseology, partly through the popular legends, partly from personal intercourse with Jews and Christians And we may be quite cer tain that, whatever materials Muhammad may have derived from our Scriptuies, directly or indirectly, were carefully recast

"It should also be borne in mind that we have no clear traces of the existence of Arabic versions of the Old or New Testament previous to the time of Muhammad passage of St Jerome- Hac autom translatio nullum de veteribus sequitur interpretem , sed ex if so Hebraico, Arabicoque sermone, et interdum Syro, nunc verba, nunc sensum, nunc simui utrumque resonabit' (Prol Gal), obviously does not refer to tersions, but to adiom The earliest Ar version of the Old Testament of which we have any knowledge is that of R Sandias Gaon, AD 900 and the oldest Ar version of the New Testament is that published by Erpemus in 1616, and transcribed in the Thebais, in the year 1271, by a Coptic bishop, from a copy made by a person whose name is known, but whose date is uncertain. Michaelis thinks that the Michaelia thinks that the Arabic versions of the New Testament were made between the Baracen conquests in the seventh century and the Crusades in the eleventh century-so opinion in which he follows, or coincides with, Walton (Prol in Polygl § xiv), who remarks— Plane constat versionem Arabicam apud cas (ecclesias orientales) factam osee postquam lingua Arabica per victories et religionem Muhammedanicum per Orientem propagata fuerat, et in muliis lecis facta esset vernacula? It, in leed, in these comparatively late versions, the general phraseology, especially in the histories common to the Scriptures and to the Koran, bore any s milarity to each other, and if the orthography of the proper names had been the same in each, it might have been fair to suppose that such versions had been made, more or less, upon the basis of others, which, though now lost, existed in the ages prior to Muhammad, and influenced, if they did not directly form, his sources of information. But this dees not appear to be the case The phraseology of our existing versions is not that of the Koran, and the versions as a whole appear to have been made from the Septuagnt, the Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and Greek, Tischendorf, indeed, says that the four Gospels originem mertum habere videntur; but the internal evidence is clearly in favour of the Greek origin of the Arabic Gespels. This can be seen in part even from the order of the words, which was retained, like that of the Greek, so far as possible, even in such constructions and transpositions of words as violate the rules of Arabic Syntax.

From the Arab Jews, Muhammad would be enabled to derive an abundant though distorted knowledge of the Scripture histories The secrecy in which he received his instructions from them and from his Christian informants, enabled him boldly to declare to the ignorant pagan Meccans that God had revorled those Biblical histories to him But there can be no doubt, from the constant identity between the Talmudic perversions of Scripture histories and the statements of the Koran, that the Rabbis of Hojaz communicated their legends to Muhammad. And it should be remembered that the Talmud was completed a century previous to the era of Muhammad, and cannot fail to have exten sively influenced the religious creed of all the Icas of the Arthun peninsula. In one passage Munrmurad speaks of an audividual lew-perhaps some one of note among his professed fillowers, as a witness to his mission, and there can be no doubt that his relations with the Jeas were, at one time, those of friendsuip and intimacy, when we and him speaking of their recognizing him as they do then own children, and blaming their most colloquial expressions. It is impossible however for us at this distance of time to penetrate the mystery in which this subject is involved. Yet certain it is, that, although their testimony against Muhammad was speedily silenced, the Koreish knew enough of his private history to disbelieve and to disprove his pretensions of being the recipient of a divine revelation, and to accuse him of writing from the dictation of teachers morning and evening And it is equally cer tain that all the information received by Muhammad was embellished and recast in his own mind and with his own words. There is a unity of thought, a directness and sim plicity of purpose, a peculiar and laboured stele, a uniformity of diction, coupled with a certain det ienev of imaginative power, which indicate that the avata (signs or verses) of the Koran are the product of a single mind The longer narratives were probably, elaborated in his leisure hours, while the shorter verses, each proclaiming to be a sign or miracle, were promulgated as occasion required them. And, whatever Muhammad may himself profess in the Koran as to his ignorance even of reading and writing, and however strongly modern Muhammadans may meist upon the same point—an assertion, by the way, contradicted by many good authors—there can be no doubt that to assimilate and work up his materials, to fashion them into elaborate Suras, and to fit thom for public recital, must have been a work requiring much time, study, and meditation, and presumes a far greater degree of general culture than any orthodox Muslim will be disposed to admit" (The Preface to Rodwell's El-Koran, p xv1 et seq)

VI - The Recital and Reading of the Qur'an.

Telāwah (5,35), or "the recital of the Qur'an," has been developed into a science known as 'Ilmu'l-Taywid (علم التجويد), which includes a knowledge of the peculiarities of the spelling of many words in the Qur'an , of the qual (قراءات ), or various readings, of the ejaculations, responses, and prayers to be said at the close of appointed passages, of thevarrous divisions, punctuations, and marginal instructions, of the proper pronunciation of the Arabic words, and of the correct intonation of different passages

The reading or recital of the Qur'an should commence with legal ablution and prayer The usual prayer is, "I seek protection from God against the cursed Satan!" which is followed by the invocation. "In the name of God the Merciful, the Compassionate!"

The mosque is considered the most suitable of all places in which to read the Qur'an, and the most auspicious days of the week are Frids, Monday, and Thursday The ordi-Fride, Monday, and Thursday nary time allowed for reading the Qur'an through is forty days, although by reciting a juz' or siparah daily, it can be done in thirty days, which is said to have been the custom of the Prophet Some read it through by manzils, or stages, of which there are seven, which is done in a week. On no account should it be read through in less than three days, for which there is a three-fold division, known in Persian as the Ahatam-i-Manzil-i-Fil, the initial letters of each portion (الحي ألم) forming the word fil.

Ejaculations, or responses, are made at certain places. For example, at the end of the Suratu 'l Fatthah (1 ) and of the Suratu 'l-Baqarah (11), say 'Amin' At the end of the Suratu Banı Isra'il (xvii ), say, "God is great!" After the last verse of the Suratu i-Qivamah (lxxv), say, "Is He not powerful enough to raise the dead? Sav, Yes, for He is my Lord Most High!" At the end of the Süratu 'l-Mulk (lxvn), say, "God brings it (clear water) to us and He is Lord of all the Worlds ! "

In addition to responses to be made after each Surah, or Chapter, there are certain ejaculations to be made after certain verses, for third Surah, "There is no God but He, the Mighty, the Wise!" say, "I am a witness to this!" example, after the aixteenth verse of the

There are fourteen verses known as the Ayalu's-Sajdah, after which a prostration is made They are Sürahe vu 205 xm 16 zvi 51; vi. 109, x12. 59, xx11 19, xxv 61, xxvu 26, xxxii 15, xxxvii 24 xli 38; hu. 62, lxxxiv 20, xcvi 18

There are numerous instructions given as t pronunciation, and there have amon seven ac hools of pronunciation, which are known as those of the Qurra'u 's-Sab'ah, or "seven readers (for a list of these readers, see QARI) It is considered quite lawful to recite the Qur'an according to the pronunciation established by any one of these seven worthes.

There are many marks and symbols on the margin of an Arabic Quran. Mr Sell, in his Ilm : Tapoid, gives them in detail (Ilm : Tapoid, Keys & Co. Madras, 1852.) The symbol for full stop is o, when the reader should take breath The word Lix. is written when a slight pause is made, but no breath taken. There are also signs which They were are known as waqf, or pause originally of five kinds, but many more have been added in modern times. They are distinguished by letters and words. [WAGF]

There are twenty-mne Surahs of the Qur'an which begin with certain letters of the alphabet These letters, the learned say, have some profound meaning, known only to the Prophet himself, although it seems probable that they are simply marks recorded by the amanuenais

- (1) Six Sürahs begin with the letters Alif, Lam, Mim Al ALM, viz Sürahs al-Baqa-Lâm, Min alt ALM, viz Sürahs al-Baqarah (11), Ālu Imrān (11), al-Anksbūt (xxix), al-Rūm (xxx), Luqmān (xxx), as-Sajāah (xxxu) Golus thinks that they probably stand for Amr h-Muhammad, "At the commund of Muhammad," and to have been must be the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the community of the c written by the amanueness Jalalu 'd-din as-Suyūtī says that Ibn 'Abbas said that they stood for Ana 'llahu a'limu, "I, God, know (that this is true) Al-Baizāwi thinks A stands for "Allah," L for "Gabriel," and M for Muliammad" Mr Salegives the meanıng as Allahu Latıfun Majidun, "God is gracious and exalted", others have suggested Alluhu li-Muhammed, "God to Muhammed." But the general belief is that the letters have a hidden meaning
- (2) At the commencement of Suratu 1-A'ruf (vii), there is Alif, Lām, Mīm, Sād. ALMS, which may mean A, "Anā", L, "Allah', M, "Rahmān", S, "Samad", e I am God, the Merciful, the Eternal.
- (3) The Süratu 'r-Ra'd (xiii) begins with the letters Alsf, Lām, Mun, Rā (1) ALMR, which at Bairāwī takes to mean, A, "Anā", L, "Allāhū" M, "A'limu", R, "Arā." "I. God, both know and see '

(4) Five Süraha begin with Alif, Lam, Ra. Amura is Rabbt, "My Lord bath said to me," or Anā 'llāhu arā, "1, God, see" These Sūrahs are Yūnus (x ), Hūd (x ), Yūsuf (x 1), Ibishim (xiv), al-Hijr (xv).

(5) The Süratu Maryam (xix.) begins with the letters Kd/, Hā, Yā, 'Ain, Ṣād. KHY AS, which Ibn 'Abbas says stand for five attributes of the Almighty Karım. "Gracious", Hadi, "Guide', Hakim (taking the middle letter), "Wise", "Alim, "Learned", which Hussin says may signify Taker,

"Pure", Hads, "Guide", being attributes

(7) Six Surahs commence with the letters Hà Mim , HM, namely, Sürahs al-Mu'min (xl.), Fussilat (xl.), az Zukhruf (xl...), ad-Dukhān (xl.v.), al-Jāsiyah (xl.v.), al-Ahqāf (xl.v.). Ibn Abbās says they indicate the attribute Rahman, "Merciful"
(8) The Suratu 'sh Shura (xin ) begins with

Ha Mim 'Ain Sm Qaf HM'ASQ, which Muhammad ibn Ka'b understood to mean H for Rahman, "Meiciful", M for Rohm, "Gracious" 'A 'Alm, "Learned", S, Quddüs, "Holy", Q, Qahhār, "Dominant", being attributes of God

(9) The Süratu YS (xxxv1), as its title implies, begins with the letters Yā Sin پس, which is supposed to stand for Ya insan, "Oman!

(10) The Siliatu S (xxxviii) as its title augmiffer, begins with the letter Sad o, which some say means Sidg, "Truth

(11) The Suratu Q (1), as its name implies, begins with the letter Gaf 3, which Jalulu d-Din as-Suyuti says stands for Qadir, "Powerful," an attribute of God Others think it means the mountain of Qaf

(12) The Süratu 'l Nami (xxvii) begins with the letters Ta Sin du, which Muhimmad ibu Ka'b says stand for Zūt trul, " Most Powerful," and Quddus, "Holy being attri butes of the Almighty

(13) Two Suraha, namely ash Shu'arâ' (xxvi), and al-Quass (xxviii), begin with fa Sin Mim dund, which supplies the addition of the attribute Rahman, "Merciful," to those of the former section, indicated by TS

(14) The Suratu l-Qalam (lxviii) begins with Nun, ON, which some say stands for an ink-horn, others for a fish, and some for the attribute of Nur, or "Light"

VII .- The Interpretation of the Qur'an

·Ilmu 'l-Usül (علم الاصول), or the Exegens of the Qur'an, is a very important science, and is used by the Mushin divine to explain away many apparent or real contradictions The most authoritative works on the 'Ilmu 'l-Usul of the Qur'un, are Manaru L-Usul and its commentary, the Nuru 'l-Anwar, and as-Suyutr's Itque (ed by Sprenger) various laws of interpretation laid down in these books are very complicated, requiring the most careful study We have only space for a mere outline of the system

The words (alfax) of the Quran are of four classes Khass, 'Amm, Mushtarak, and

Mu'awwal

(1) Khāss, Words used in a special sense This speciality of sense is of three kinds Khususu 1-jins, Speciality of genus, e.g. man-kind, Khususu 'n-nau', Speciality of species, e.g. a man, khususu 'l-'ain Speciality of an individual, e.g. Muhammad
(2) 'Amm, Collective or common, which embrace many individuals or things, e q people.

(3) Mushtarak, Complex words which have several significations, eg 'ain, a word which signifies an Eye, a Fountain, the Knee, or the Sun.

(4) Mu'awwal, words which have several significations, all of which are possible, and so a special explanation is required. For example, Surah evil 2, reads thus in Sale's translation "Wherefore pray unto the Lord and slay (the victims)" The word translated "slay" is in Arabic inhar, from the root nahr, which has several meanings The followers of the great Legist, Aba Hanifah, render it "sacrifice," and add the words (the "victims") The followers of Ibn Ash-Shafi'i say it means " placing the hands on the breast in prayer '

II The Scatences ('Iharak) of the Qur'an are either Zahir or Khafi. ie either Obvious or Hidden

Obvious sentences are of four classes -Zāhir Nass, Mufassar, Muhkam

(1) Zāhir -Those sentences, the meaning of which is Obvious or clear, without any usustance from the context (garinah).

(2) Nass a word commonly used for a text of the Qui'an, but in its technical meaning here expressing what is meant by a sentence, the meaning of which is made clear by some word which occurs in it The following sentonce illustrates both Lähir and Nass "Take in marriage of such other women as please you, two, three, four "This sentence 18 Auhir, because maritage is here declared lawful, it is Naes, because the words "one, two, three, four" which occur in the sentence, show the unrawfulness of having more than four wives

(3) Mujassar, or explained A sentence which needs some word in it to explain it and make it clear Thus 'And the angels prostrated themselves, all of them with one accord save Iblis (Satan)" Here the words save Iblis" show that he did not prestrate himself This kind of sentence may be abro-

gated

A sentence (4) Muhkam, or perspicuous as to the meaning of which there can be no doubt, and which cannot be controverted, thus "God knoweth all things" This kind of sentence cannot be abrogated To act on such sentences without departing from the literal sense is the highest degree of obedience to God's command

The difference between these sentences is seen when there is a real or apparent contradiction between them li such should occur, the first must give place to the second, and so on Thus Muhkam cannot be abrogated or changed by any of the preceding, or Mufassar by Nass, &c

Hidden sentences are either Khafi, Mushkel,

Mujmal, or Mutashābsh

(1) Khaj: -Sentences in which other persons or things are hidden beneath the plain meaning of a word or expression contained therein e.g. Süratu 7-Mändah (v), 42, "As for a thief whether male or female cut ye off their hands in recompense for their doings. In this sentence the word suring, "thief," understood to have kidden beneath its literal meaning, both pickpockets and highway rob-

(2.) Mushkul.—Sentences which are ambigueus, e.g Süratu 'd-Dahr (lxxvi), 15, "And (their attendants) shall go round about them with vessels of silver and goblets The bottles shall be bottles of silver" The difficulty here is that bottles are not made of silver, but of glass The commentators say, however, that glass is dull in colour, though it has some lustre, whilst silver is white and not so bright as glass. Now it may be, that the bottles of Paradise will be like glass bottles as regards their lustre, and like silver as regards their colour anyhow, it is very difficult to ascertain the meaning

(3) Mujmal -- Sentences which may have a variety of interpretations, owing to the words in them being capable of several meanings, in that case the meaning which is given to the sentence in the Traditions relating to it should be acted on and accepted, or which may contain some very rare word, and thus its meaning may be doubtful, as "Man truly is by creation hasty" (Surah lxx. 19) In this verse the word halis, "hasty," occurs It is very rarely used, and had it not been for the following words, "when evil toucheth him. he is full of complaint, but when good befalleth him, he becometh niggardly," its meaning would not have been at all easy to understand

The following is an illustration of the first kind of Mujinal sentences . Stand for prayer (salāt) and give alms (zakāt) "Both and zakāt are Mushtarak "words Both salāt The people, therefore, did not understand this verse, so they applied to Muhammad for an explanation. He explained to them that salat might mean the ritual of public prayer, standing to say the words "God is great" or standing to repeat a few verses of the Quran, or it might mean private praver The primitive meaning of zakat is "growing" The Prophet, however, fixed the meaning here to that of "almagaving," and said 'Give of your substance one-fortieth part '

(4) Mutashābih.—Intricate sentences, or expressions, the exact meaning of which it is impossible for man to ascertain until the day of resurrection, but which was known to the Prophet e.g the letters Alif, Lām, Mim (A. L. M.), Ahf, Lām, Rā' (A. L. R.), Ahf, Lām, Mim, Rā' (A. L. M. R.), &c., at the commencement of different Surahs or chapters Also Sürstu 7-Mulk (lxvil.) 1, "In whose hand is the Kingdom," is God's Acad (Arabio, yad), and Sürstu TH (xx), "He is most merciful and atteth on His throne," is God sitteth (Arabic, istaioā), and Sürstu 7-Baqarah (ii), 115, "The face of God" (Arabic, wayhu llah)

III The use (intrafil) of Tranda in the

III The use (settrad) of words in the Qur'an is divided into four classes. They are either Haqiqah, Mejaz, Sarih, or Kinayah (1) Haqiqah —Words which are used in their literal meaning e.g. ruku, "a prostra-tion", sind, "adultery"

(2) Majās.—Words which are figurative, as salat in the sense of namaz, or the liturgical prayers

(3) Sarih - Words the meaning of which 18 clear and palpable e g "Thou art free,"

"Thou art divorced."

(4) Kināyah — Words which are meta-phorical in their meaning e.g. "Thou art separated", by which may be meant, "thou art divorced"

IV The deduction of arguments, or is-tidlal, as expressed in the Quran, is divided into four sections 'Ibārah, Ishārah, Dalalah, and Iqtizā

(1) Ibarah, or the plan sentence "Mo-thers, after they are divorced, shall give suck unto their children two full years, and the father shall be obliged to maintain them and clothe them according to that which is reasonable." (Surah 11 283) From this verse two deductions are made First, from the fact that the word "them" is in the feminine plural, it must refer to the mothers and not to the children, secondly, as the duty of supporting the mother is incumbent on the father, it shows that the relationship of the child is closer with the father than with the mother Penal laws may be based on a deduction of this kind

(2) Isharah, that is, a sign or hint which may be given from the order in which the words are placed, eg "Born of him," meaning, of course, the father

(3.) Dalālah, or the argument which may be deducted from the use of some special word in the verse, as "say not to vour parents, 'Fie!' (Arabic, uff')" (Surah xvn. 23) From the use of the word uff, it is argued that children may not beat or abuse their parents Penal laws may be based on dulalah, thus "And they strive after violence on the earth, but God loveth not the abettors of violence" (Surah v 69) the abettors of violence" (Surah v 69) The word translated "strive" is in Arabic literally yas'auna, "they run." From this the argument is deduced that as highwaymen wander about, they are included amongst those whom "God loveth not," and that, therefo., the severest punishment may be given to them, for any deduction that comes under the head of dalalah is a sufficient basis for the formation of the severest penal laws.

This is a deduction which (4) Iqteza demands certain conditions "whosoever killeth a believer by mischance, shall be bound to free a believer from slavery" (Surah iv 94) As a man has ne authority to free his neighbour's slave, the condition here required, though not expressed, is that the slave should be his own property

VIII — The Abrogation of Passages in the Qur'an

Some passages of the Qur'an are contradictory, and are often made the subject of attack, but it is part of the theological belief of the Muslim doctors that certain pas sages of the Qur'an are mansukh (tombe), or abrogated by verses revealed afterwards entitled nasikh (ماسخ). This was the doctrintaught by Muhammad in the Süratu 7-Baqarah (ii) 105 "Whatever verses we (ic God) cancel or cause thee to forget, we bring a better or its like" This convenient doctrine fell in with that law of expediency which appears to be the salient feature in Muham-

mad's prophetical career

In the Tafsir-i-'Azizi, it is written, that abrogated (mansikh) verses of the Qur'an are of three kinds (1) Where the verse has been removed from the Qur'an and another given in its place, (2) Where the injunction is abrogated and the letters of the verse remain, (8) Where both the verse and its injunction are removed from the text. This is also the view of Jalahu 'd-Dīn, who says that the number of abrogated verses has been variously estimated from five to five hundred

The Greek verb καταλύω, in St Matthew v 17, has been translated in some of the versions of the New Testament by manukh, but it conveys a wreng impression to the Muhammadan mind as to the Christian view regarding this question. According to most Greek lexicons, the Greek word means to throw down or to destroy (as of a building), which is the meaning given to the word in our authorised

English translation Christ did not come to destroy, or to pull down, the Law and the Prophets, but we all admit that certain precepts of the Old Testament were abrogated by those of the New Testament Indeed, we further admit that the old covenant was abrogated by the new covenant of grace. "He taketh away the first that he may establish the second" Heb x. 9

In the Arabic translation of the New Testament, printed at Beyiut a.D 1869, καταλύω is translated by naq2, "to demolish", m Mr Loewenthals Pushto translation, AD 1863 by bāṭilaual, "to destroy," or "render void", shd in Henry Martyn's Persian Testament, AD 1837, it is also translated by the Arabic tbṭāl, ie "making void." In both the Arabic-Urdū and Roman Urdū it is unfortunately rendered mansūlh, a word which has a technical meaning in Muhammadan theology contrary to that implied in the word used by our Lord in Matthew v 17

Jaiklu d Din in his Itaan gives the following list of twenty verses which are acknowledged by all commentators to be abrogated. The verses are given as numbered in the Itaan.

IX -The Reputed Excellence of the Quran, and str Msraculous Character

Copies of the Qur'an are held in the greatest esteem and reverence amongst Muhammadans They dare not to touch it without being first washed and purified, and they read it with the greatest care and respect, never holding it below their girdles. They swear by it, consult it on all occasions, carry it with them to war write sentences of it on their banners, suspend it from their necks as a charm, and always place it on the highest shelf or in some place of honour in their houses hammadans, as we have already remarked, believe the Quran to be uncreated and eternal, subsisting in the very essence of God. There have, however, been great dif-ferences of opinion on this subject. It was a point controverted with so much heat that it occasioned many calamities under the Abbaside Khalifahs Al-Mamun (AH 218) made a public edict declaring the Qui'nn to be created, which was confirmed by his successure al-Mutasim and al-Wasiq, who whipped and imprisoned and put to death those of the contrary opinion. But at length al Matawakkil, who succeeded al-Wasiq, put an end to these persecutions by revoking the former edicts, releasing those that were impussoned on that account, and leaving every man at liberty as to his belief on this point (Abū'l Faraj, p 262) The Qui'an is, however, generally held to be a standing muracle indeed, the one miracle which bears witness to the truth of Mahammads mission an assumption which is based upon the Prophet's own statements in the Qur'an (Sürah x 39, xt. 16, ln. 34), where he calls upon the people who charge him with having invented it to procure a single chapter like it. But the Mu'tazalites have asserted that there is nothing miraculous in its style and composition (vide Sharku'l-Munoqif) The excellences of the Qur'an, as explained by the Prophet himself, claim a very important place in the tra-ditions (see Faza'ilu 'l-Qur'an, in the Tradi tions of al-Bukhārī and Muslim), from which the following are a few extracte

* The best person amongst you is he who has learnt the Qu'ran, and teaches it "

"Read the Quran as long as you feel a pleasure in it, and when tired losve off "

"If the Qur'an were wrapped in a skin and thrown into a fire, it would not burn "

'He who is an expert in the Qur'an shall rank with the Honoured Righteons Scribes, and he who reads the Qur'an with difficulty and gets tired over it shall receive double rewards "

"The state of a Musulman who reads the Qur'an is like the crange fruit whose emell and taste are pleasant."

"The person who repeats three verses from the beginning of the chapter of the Cave (Sürah xvin ) shall be guarded from the strife of ad-Dajjāl"

"Everything has a heart, and the heart of the Quran is the chapter Ya-sin (Surah xxxvi), and he who reads it, God will write for him rewards equal to those for reading the whole Qur'an ten times "

"There is a Surah in the Qur'an of thirty verses which intercedes for a man until he is pardoned, and it is that commencing with the words, 'Blessed is he in whose hands is the kingdom." (Sürah lxvh)

"God wrote a book two thousand years before creating the heavens and the earth, and sent two verses down from it, which are the two last verses of the chapter of the Osw (Sûrah ii.) and if they are not repeated in a house for three mights, the devil will be near that house "

Verily the devil runs away from the house in which the chapter entitled the Cow us read "

"The chapter commencing with these words, 'Sav God is one God (Sürah exil.), is equal to a third of the Qur'an."

"The person that repeats the chapter of the Cave (Surah xvin.) on Friday, the light of faith brightens him between two Fridays

In the Qur'an there are many assertions of its excellence, the following are a few selected Verses -

Surah iv 94 'Can they not consider the Qurien! Were it from any other than God, they would assuredly have found in it many contradictions Surab ix 16 "If they shall say, 'The Qur'an is his own device.' Then bring ten Surahs like it of your devising " Surah xlvi. ? "Will they say, 'He hath devised it'? Say, If I have devised it, then not one single thing can ye ever obtain for me trom God."

Surah lui. 4 "Verily the Qur'an is none her thin a revolution. One terrible in other than a revelation power taught it him."

Maracci, von Hammer, and other Orientalists, have selected the xoist chapter of the Qur an, entitled the Suratu 'sh-Shams, or the Chapter of the Sun, as a favourable specimen of the best style of the Qur'an. It begins m Arabic thus -

ا وَأَلْفُهُم إِنَّ وَمُعَاهَا ٢ وَآلَقُمْرِ إِدا تَلَاهَا ٣ وَٱلنَّهَارِ الَّا جَلَّهَا ٣ وَٱللَّيْلِ الدَّا يَفْشَاها هُ وَٱلسُّمَاَّةُ وَمَا بَهَاهَا ٢ وَٱلْأَرْضُ وَمَا لَمَاهَا ٧ وَنَفْس وَمَا سَوَّاهَا ٨ فَأَلْهَمَهَا فُجُورَهَا وتَقُواهَا قد أَقَلْمَ مَنْ زَكَاهَا ١٠ وَقَدْ عَابَ مَنْ دَمَّاهَا

Which Mr Rodwell translates as follows -

- 1 By the Sun and his noonday brightness
- 2 By the Moon when she followeth him!
- 3 By the Day when it revealeth his glory!
- 4 By the Night when it enshroudeth him: 5 By the Heaven and Him who built it!
- 6 By the Earth and Him who spread it forth!
- 7 By a soul and Him who balanced it,
- 8 And breathed into it its wickedness and its piety,

9 Blessed now is he who hath kept it pure, 10 And undone is he who hath corrupted it I

Baron von Hammer rendered it in German thus .

1 Bey der Sonne, und ihrem schimmer, 2 Bey dem Mond der ihr folget immer,

8 Bey dem Tag der sie zeigt in vollem glanz , Bey der Nacht, die sie verfinstert ganz ,

5 Bey den Himmeln und dem der sie gemacht,

6 Bey der Erde und dem der sie schuf

7 Bey der Seele und dem der sie ins gleichgewicht gebracht,

8 Bey dem der ihr das bewusstseyn des guten und bosen gegeben, 9 Selig wer seine Seele reinigt,

10 Wer dieselbe verdunklet wird auf ewig gepeinigt.

The renowned Orientalist, Sir William Jones, praised the following account of the drowning of Noah's sons as truly magnificent, and inferior in sublimity only to the simple declaration of the creation of light in Genesis D'Herbelot also considers it one of the finest passages in the Qur'an (Sürah x: 44-46) -

رَهِيَ تَحْرِي بِهُمْ فِي مَوْجٍ كَالْجِبَالِ وَتَادَّى لُوعً أَبْنَهُ وَكَانَ هِي مَعْرِلِ يَا بَنَكُ أَرْكُبْ سَعَنَّا وَلَا تَكُنُّ مَعَ ٱلْكَافِرِينَ قَالَ سَآوِى إلَى جَبِّلِ بَعْمِينِي مِينَ ٱلْمَاهَ قَالَ لَا عَاصِمِ ٱلْيَوْمُ مِنْ أَمْرِ ٱللَّهِ الْأَصَّى رَحْمَ وَحَالَ بَيْنَهُمَا ٱلْمُوجَ لَكَانَ مَن أَلْمُقْرَفِينَ وَفَيلَ يَا أَرْضُ ٱلْلَعِي مَا ۖ كَ وَيَا سَمَا ۗ أَقَلَعِي وَهَيضَ ٱلْمَا ۗ وَتُلْمَى ٱلْأَمْرُ وَآسْتَوَتُ عَلَى ٱلْجُودِي وَقِيلَ بَعْدًا لَلْقُومِ الطَّالِمِينَ

It may be rendered as follows .

"And the ark moved on with them smid waves like mountains

"And Nosh called to his son-for he was

" Embark with us, O my child! and stay not with the unbelievers '

"He said, 'I will betake myself to a mountain that shall save me from the water'

"He said, 'None shall be saved this day from God's decree, save him on whom He shall have mercy

"And a wave passed between them and he was drowned

"And it was said, 'O carth I swallow up thy water ! and O heaven! withhold thy rain" And the water abated, and God's decree was fulfilled, and the ark rested on al Judi.

"And it was said, 'Avaunt, ye tribe of the wicked ! "

X - Commentaries on the Quran

in the earliest ages of Islam the expositions of the Quran were handed down in the traditional sayings of the companions and their successors, but we have it on the authority of the Kashju 's-Zunun that one Quisibah ibn Ahmad, who died A.E. 316, compiled a systematic commentary on the whole of the Qur'an. The work is not now extant.

Muslim commentaries are very numerous.

Dr. M Arnold (Islam and Christiansty, p. 81) says there are no less than 20,000 in the Labrary at Tripolis

The best known commentaries amongst the Sunnis are those of -

Al-Baghawi, A H. 515 Az-Zamakhshari, A.H. 604 At-Tafsiru 'l-Kabir, A H. 606 Ibnu 'l-'Arabı, A H. 628 Al-Baizāwī, A.H. 685 Al-Mudársk, A H. 701 Husain, a H 900 Al-Jalalan, A H 864, A H. 911 Al Mazhari, A H. 1225 'Azīzī, a n 1289

Amongst the Shi'shs the following are works of reputation -

Shaikh Saduq. A # 381

At-Tafsiru 'l-Kabir, by Sniyid Muhammad ar-Razī, 80 volumes, A.H 606

As-$afi, a n 668 As-Sirru 'l-Wajīz, A.H 715 Sidratu 'l-Muntahā, by Mir Bakir, A.B 1041 Al-Burhan by Saiyid Hasham, A. 1160.

XI - Editions and Translations of the

The Qur'an was first printed in Arabic at Rome by Pagninus Brixiensis, Rome, 1580, but it was either burned or remained un-published Since then the following editions of the Arabic text have appeared in Europe -

Uur'ān

Al-Coranus, seu lex Islamitica, &c., the Arabic text of the Qur'an, published by A Hinkelmann, Hamburg, 1649, 4to

Alcorani textus universus, &a., the Arabic text with a Latin translation and numerous extracts from the principal commentaries, and preceded by a Prodromus, containing a "lefutation" of the Qur'an, by Maraed, Padua, 1698, folio القران, an anotated text of the Qur'an, published by order and at the cost of the Empress Catherine II of Russia, at St Petersburgh in 1787, 1 vol. in folio. This edition was reprinted at St Petersburgh in 1790, 1798, 1796, and 1798, and without any change at Kasan in 1808, 1809, and 1899 Another edition, in two vols, 4te, without notes, was published at Kasan, 1817, reprinted 1821 and 1848, and a third edition, in 8 vols 8vo, at the same place, 1819.

Corant textus arabicus, de., the first critical edition of the text, by G Fliggel, Leipzig, Second edition, 1842, third edition, tion, 1869

Coranus arabice, &c , revised republication of Flügel's text, by G. M. Redeleb, Laipnig. 1887. 8vo Berdhauss commentarius en Coranum, &c, the text of the Qur'an with al-Baixawi's Commentary, by H. O Fleisher, two vols. 4to, Leipzig, 1846.

The Muhammadans, so far from thinking the Qur'an profaued by a translation, as some authors have written (Marracci de Alcoran. p 88), have taken care to have it translated into various languages, although these translations are always interlineary with the original text. Translations exist in Persian, Urdū, Pushto, Turkish, Javan, Malayan, and other languages, which have been made by Muhammadans themselves

The first translation atttempted by Eurocans was a Latin version translated by an Enghshman, Robert of Retina, and a German, Hermann of Dalmatia This translation, which was done at the request of Peter, Abbot of the Monastery of Clugny, AD 1148, remained hidden nearly 400 years till it was published at Basic, 1548, by Theodore Bibli ander, and was afterwards rendered into Italian, German, and Dutch The next translation in German was by Schweigger, at Numberg, in 1616 This was followed by the above-mentioned work of Maracci con sisting of the Qur'an, in Arabic, with a Latin version with notes and refutations, A D 1698

The oldest French translation was done by M Du Ryer (Paris, 1647) A Russian version appeared at St Petersburg in 1776 M. Savary translated the Qur'an into French There have also been more recent ın 1788 French translations by Kasımirski (Paris, 1st ed 1840, 2nd ed 1841, 3rd ed 1857)

The first English Qur'an was Alexander Ross's translation of Du Ryer's French version (1649-1688) Sale's well-known work first appeared in 1734, and has since passed through numerous editions A translation by the Rev J M. Rodwell, with the Surahs avranged in chronological order, was printed in 1861 (2nd ed 1876) Professor Palmer, of Cambridge, translated the Qur'an in 1880 A Roman-Urdu edition of (Oxford Press) the Quran was published at Allahabad in 1844, and a second and revised edition at Ludianah in 1876 (both these being a transliteration of 'Abdu 'l-Qadır's well-known Urdů translation)

The best known translations in German are those by Boysen, published in 1778, with an Introduction and notes, and again revised and corrected from the Arabic by G Wahl in 1828, and another by Dr L. Ullmann, which has passed through two editions (1840, 1858)

XI.—The Opinions of European Writers on the Qur'an

Mr Sale, in his Preliminary Discourse, remarks :--

"The style of the Koran is generally beautiful and finent, especially where it imitates the prophetic manner, and scripture phrases It is concise, and often obscure, adorned with bold figures after the Eastern taste, enlivened with fiorid and sementious expressions, and in many places, especially where the majesty and attributes of God are described, sublime and magnificent, of which the reader cannot but observe several instances, though he must not imagine the translation comes up to the original, notwithstanding my endeavours to do it justice

"Though it be written in prese, yet the sentences generally conclude in a long con-tinued rhyme, for the sake of which the sense is often interrupted, and upnecessary repetitions too frequently made, which appear still more ridiculous in a translation, where the ornsment, such as it is, for whose sake they were made, cannot be perceived. However, the Arabians are so mightily delighted with this jingling that they employ it in their most elaborate compositions, which they also embellish with frequent passages of and allusions to the Koran, so that it is next to impossible to understand them without being well versed in this book

"It is probable the harmony of expression which the Arabians find in the Koran might contribute not a little to make them relish the doctrine therein taught, and give an efficacy to arguments, which, had they been nakedly proposed without this rhetorical dress, might not have so easily prevailed. Very extraordinary effects are related of the power of words well chosen and artfully placed, which are no less powerful either to ravish or amaze than music itself, wherefore as much as has been ascribed by the best orators to this part of rnetone as to any other He must have a very bad ear, who is not uncommonly moved with the very cadence of a well-turned sentence, and Mohammed seems not to have been ignorant of the enthusiastic operation of rhetoric on the minds of men, for which reason he has not only employed his utmost skill in these his pretended revelations, to preserve that digmity and sublimity of style, which might seem not unworthy of the majesty of that Being, whom he gave out to be the author of them, and to imitate the prophetic manner of the Old Testament, but he has not neglected even the other arts of oratory, wherem he succeeded so well, and so strangely captivated the minds of his audience, that several of his opponents thought it the effect of witchcraft and enchantment, as he sometimes complains (Sürah xv 21, &c)"

The late Professor Palmer, in his Introduction to the Qur'an, remarks

"The Arabs made use of a rhymed and rhythmical prose, the origin of which it is not difficult to imagine. The Arabic language consists for the most part of triliteral roots, i.e. the single words expressing individual ideas consist generally of three consonants each, and the derivative forms expressing modifications of the original idea are not made by affixes and terminations alone, but also by the insertion of letters in the root. Thus zaraba means 'he struck,' and quiala, 'he killed,' while mazrab and maqual signify one struck' and 'one killed.' A sentence, therefore consists of a series of words which would each require to be expressed in clauses of several words in other languages, and it is easy to see how a next following sentence. explanatory of or completing the first would be much more clear and forcible if it con asted of words of a similar shape and implying similar modifications of other ideas. It follows then that the two sentences would be necessarily symmetrical, and the presence of rhythm would not only please the car but contribute to the better understanding of the sense, while the thyme would mark the pause in the sense and emphasize the proposition

"The Qur'an is written in this rhetorical style, in which the chuses are abothnical though not symmetrically so and for the most part end in the same about the unghout

the chapter

"The Arabic language lends itself very readily to this species of composition, and the Arabs of the desert in the present day employit to a great extent in their more formal orations, while the literary men of the towns adopt it as the recognised correct style, deliberately unitating the Qur an

"That the test of Arab writers has never succeeded in producing arvihing equal in ment to the Qur'an itself is not supprising

" In the first place they have agreed before hand that it is unapproachable and they have adopted its style as the perfect stan-dard, any deviation from it therefore must of necessity be a defect. Again with them this style is not spont meous as with Mohammed and his contemporaries but is is artificial as though Englishmen should still continue to follow Chancer as their model in spite of the changes winch their language his under gone. With the prophet the style was natural, and the words were those used in every-day ordinary life, while with the later Arabic anthors the style is imitative and the ancient words are introduced as a literary embellishment. The natural consequence is that then attempts look laboured and unreal by the side or his impromptn and forcible eloquence

"That Mohammed, though, should have been able to challenge even his contemporares to produce anything like the Qui an 'And if ye are in doubt of what we have revealed unto our servant, then bring a chapter like it. But if ye do it not, and ye surely shall do it not, &c.,' is at first sight surprising, but, as Noldeke has pointed out this challenge really refers much more to the subject than to the more style,—to the originality of the conception of the unity of God and of a revelation supposed to be conched in God's own words. Any attempt at such a work must of necessity have had all the weakness and want of prestige which attaches to an imitation. This idea is by no means foreign to the genius of the old Arabs.

"Amongst a people who believed firmly in witcheraft and soothsaying and who though passionately fund of poetry, believed that every poet had his familiar spirit who inspired his utterances, it was no wonder that the prophet should be taken for 'a soothsayer, for 'one possessed with an evil spirit,' or for 'an infatuated poet'"

Mr Stanley Lane Poole, in his Introduction to Lianes Selections from the Kur-fin, remarks —

"It is confused in its progression and strangely mixed in its contents, but the development of Mohammad's faith can be traced in it, and we can see dimly into the workings of his mind, as it struggles with the deep things of God wreatles with the doubts which echoed the cavils of the unbelievers, some upwards on the wings of costatic faith, till at last it gams the repose of fruition Studied thus the Kur-an is no longer dull reading to one who cares to look upon the working of a passionate troubled human soul, and who can enter into its trials and share in the joy of its triumphs

In the soorahs revealed at Mekka, Mohammad has but one theme-God, and one object-to draw his people away from their mois and bring them to the feet of that God He tells them of Him in glowing language, that comes from the heart's white heat points to the glories of nature, and tells them these are God's works. With all the brilliant unagery of the Arab, he tries to show them what God is, to convince them of His power and His wisdom and His justice The coraha of this period are short, for they are pitched in too high a key to be long sustained language has the ring of poetry though no part of the Kur-an complice with the demands of Arab metre The sentences are short and full of half restrained energy, yet with a musical cadence. The thought is often only half expressed, one feels the speaker has oseayed a thing beyond words, and has suddeals discovered the impotence of language, and broken off with the sentence unfinished There is the fascination of true poetry about these earliest soorabs, as we read there we understand the enthusiasm of the Prophets followers, though we cannot fully realise the beauty and the power, masmuch as we cannot bear them hurled forth with Mohammads fiery eloquence From first to last the Kur an is essentially a book to be heard, not read, but this is especially the case with the earliest chapters "In the secrals of the second period of Mekks, we begin to trace the decline of the Prophets elequence. There are still the same earnest appeals to the people, the same gorgoous pictures of the Last Day and the world to come, but the language begins to approach the quiet of prose, the sentences become longer the same words and phrases are frequently repeated, and the wearisome stories of the Jewish prophets and patriarchs, which fill so large a space in the later portion of the Kur-in, now make their appearance. The fierce passion of the earliest scorabs, that could not out save in short burning verses, gives place to a calmer more argumentative style. Mohammad appeals less to the works of God as proofs of his teaching, and more to the history of former teachers, and the punishments of the people who would not bear them And the characteristic caths of the first period, when Mohammad awears by all the varied sights of nature as they mirrored themselves in his magnation, have gone, and in their place we find only the weaker oath 'by the Kur-an.' And this declension is carried still further in the last group of the scoraks revealed at Mekka. The style becomes more involved and the sentences longer, and though the old enthusiasm bursts forth ever and anon, it is rather an echo of former things than a new and present intoxication of faith. The fables and repetitions become more and more dreary and but for the rich eloquence of the old Arabic tongue, which gives some charm even to mextricable sentences and duli stories. the Kur-an at this period would be unreadable As it is, we feel we have fallen the whole depth from poetry to prose, and the matter of the prose is not so superlative as to give us amends for the loss of the poetic thought of the earlier time and the musical fall of the sentences

" In the socrahs of the Medina period taese faults reach their climax We read a singu larly varied collection of criminal laws, social regulations, orders for battle, harangues to the Jews, first conciliatory, then denunciatory, and exhortations to spread the faith and such-like hotorogeneous matters Happily the Jewish stories disappear in the litest soorahs, but their place is filled by scarcely more The chapters of this palatable materials period are interesting chiefly as containing the laws which have guided every Muslim state, regulated every Muslim society, and directed in their smallest acts every Mohammadan man and woman in all parts of the world from the Prophets time till now The Medina part of the Kur-an is the most important part for Islam, considered as a scheme of ritual and a system of manners, the earliest Mekka revelations are those which contain what is highest in a great religion and what was purest in a great man."

Mr Rodwell, in his Introduction to his Quran says -

"The contrast between the earlier, middle, and later Suras is very striking and inte resting, and will be at once apparent from the arrangement here adopted. In the Suras as far as the 54th, we cannot but notice the entire predominance of the postical element, a deep appreciation (as in Sura xei) of the beauty of natural objects, brief fragmentary and impassioned utterances denunciations of woc and pumshment, expressed for the most With a part in lines of extreme brevity change bowever, in the position of Muhammad when he openly assumes the office of public warner, the Spras begin to assume a more prossic and didactic tone, though the postical emament of thyme is preserved throughout We gradually lose the Poet in the mismonary siming to convert, the warm asserter of dogmatic truths, the descriptions of natural objects, of the judgment, of heaven and hell, make way for gradually increasing historical statements, first from Jewish, and subsequently from Christian histories, while, in the 29 Suras revealed at Medina, we ne longer listen to vague words often as it would seem without positive aim, but to the earnest disputant with the enemies of his faith the Apostle pleading the cause of what he believes to be the Truth of God. He who at Mecca is the admonisher and persuader, at Medura is the legislator and warmor, who dictates obedience, and uses other weapons than the pen of the Poet and the Scribe When business pressed, as at Medina, Postry makes way for prese, and although touches of the Poetical element occasionally break forth and he has to defend himself up to a very lete period against the charge of being morely a Post, yet this is rarely the case in the Medina Suras, and we are startled by finding obedience to God and the Apostle, God's gifts and the Apostle's God's pleasure and the Apostle's, spoken of in the same breath, and epithets and attributes elsewhere applied to Aliah openly applied to himself, as

"The Suras viewed as a whole, strike me as being the work of one who began his career as a thoughtful enquirer after truth, and an earmost ascerter of it in such rhetorical and poetical forms as ne deemed most likely to win and attract his countrymen, and who gradually proceeded from the dogmatic teacher to the politic founder of a system for which laws and regulations had to be provided as occasions arose And of all the Suras it must be remarked that they were intended non for renders but for hearers—that they were all promulgated by public recital—and that much was left as the imperfect sentences show, to the manner and suggestive action of the reciter lt would be impossible. and indeed it is unnecessary, to attempt a detailed life of Muhammad within the narrow limits of a Preface Tue main events thereof with which the Suras of the Koran stand in connection, are. The visions of Gabriel, seen, or said to have been seen at the outset of his career in his 40th year, during one of his seasons of annual monthly retirement, for devotion and meditation to Mount Hira, near Merca,-the period of mental depression and re-assurance previous to the assumption of the office of public teacher—the Fatrah or pause during which he probably waited for a repetition of the angelic vision—his labours in comparative privacy for three years, issuing in about 40 converts, or whom his wife Ohadijah was the first, and Abu Bekr the most important, (for it is to him and to Abu Jahl the Sura xcu refers)—struggles with Meccan unbelief and idolatry followed by a period during which probably he had the second vision, Sura lui and was listened to and respected as a person 'possessed' (Sura laix 42 ln 29)-the first emigration to Abysamia in AD 616, in consequence of the Meccan persecutions brought on by his now open attacks upon idolatiy (Tagnout) -

"While, however, there is no great diffioulty in ascertaining the Suras which stand in connection with the more salient features of Muhammad's life, it is a much more arduous, and often impracticable, task, to point but the precise events to which individual verses refer and out of which they sprung It is quite possible that Muhammad himself, in a later period of his career, designedly mixed up later with earlier revelations in the same Suras not for the sake of producing that mysterious style which seems so pleasing to the mind of those who value truth least when it is most clear and obvious but for the purpose of softening down some of the earlier statements which represent the last hour and awful judgment as imminent, and thus leading his followers to continue still in the attitude of expectation, and to see m his later successes the truth of his earlier predictions If after-thoughts of this kind are to be traced, and they will often strike the attentive reader, it then follows the perplexed state of the text in individual is to be considered as due to Muhar himself, and we are furnished with a of constant hints for attaining to ch logical accuracy And it may be rame in passing, that a belief that the end things was at hand, may have tende promote the earlier successes of Islan Mecca, as it unquestionably was an argu with the Apostles, to flee from 'the wre come' It must be borne in mind the allusions to contemporary minor events, to the local efforts made by the new rel to gain the ascendant are very few, and couched in terms so vague and general, we are forced to interpret the Koran a by the Koran itself And for this, the quent repetitions of the same histories the same sentiments, afford much faci and the peculiar manner in which the de of each history are increased by fresh t at each recurrence, enables us to trace growth in the author's mind, and to asce the manner in which a part of the Koran composed The absence of the histo element from the Koran as regards the tails of Muhammad's duily life, may be juof by the fact, that only two of his center raries are mentioned in the entire vol: and that Muhammad's name occurs but times, although he is all the way thre addressed by the Angel Gabriel as the cipient of the divine revelations, with word Sav Perhaps such passages as ? n 15 and v 246, and the constant mente guidance, direction, wandering, may have l suggested by reminiscences of his mercal journeys in his earlier years "

Dr Steingass, the learned compiler of English Arabic and Arabic English Dict aries (W H Allen & Co), has oblight recorded his opinion as follows —

Invited to subjoin a few further remi on the composition and style of the Qui in addition to the valuable and compe opinions contained in the above extract can scarcely introduce them better than quoting the striking words of Gothe, which Rodwell places by way of motto on the reve of the title page of his Translation. words seem to me so much the more weig and worthy of attention, as they are utte by one who, whatever his merits or deme m other respects may be deemed to be, in putably belongs to the greatest masters language of all times, and stands foremost a leader of modern thought and the intel tual culture of modern times Speaking the Qur'an in his West-Oestlicher Divan, says "However often we turn to it, at fl disgusting us each time airesh, it soon tracts, astounds, and in the end enforces Ita atyle, in accordance w its contents and aim, is stern, grand, terri ever and anon truly sublime ... this book will go on exercising through ages a most potent influence."

A work, then, which calls forth so power and seemingly incompatible emotions, even in the distant reader—distant as to time, and still more so as to mental development—a work which not only conquers the repugnance with which he may begin its perusal, but changes this adverse feeling into astonishment and admiration, such a work must be a wonderful production of the human mind indeed, and a problem of the highest interest to every thoughtful observer of the destinies of mankind. Much has been said in the preceding pages, to acknowledge, to appreciate, and to explain the literary excellencies of the Quran, and a more or less distinct admission that Buffon's much-quoted saying "Le style c'est l'homme," is here more justified than ever, underlies all these various verdists. We may well say the Qur'an is one of the grandest books ever written, because it faithfully reflects the character and life of one of the greatest men that ever breathed "Sincerity," writes Carlyle, "sincerrty, in all seuses, seems to me the morit of the Koran." This same sincerity, this ardour and earnestness in the search for truth, this never dagging perseverance in trying to im press it, when partly found, again and again upon his unwilling hearers, appears to me as the real and underiable " seal of prophecy"

Truth, and above all religious truth, can only be one. Christiamty may duly rejoice in the thought that, at the very moment when the representative of the greatest Emp re of the ancient world mackingly or despairingly put forth the question, "What is truth?" this one eternal truth was about to be written down with the blood of the Divine Redeemer in the salvation deed of our race, Obrist's glorious and holy Gospel. But the approaches to truth are many, and he who devoted all his powers and energies, with untiring pa-tience and self-denial, to the task of leading a whole nation by one of these approaches, from a coarse and effete idolatry, to the worship of the living God, has certainly a strong claim to our warmest sympathies as a faithful servant and noble champion of truth.

It is, however, not my intention to dwell here any lenger upon this side of the question. Praise has been bestowed in this work on the Qur'an and its author without stint or grudge, and the unanimity of so many distinguished voices in this respect will no doubt impress the general reader in favour of the sacred book of the Muhammadans, which until now he may have known only by name. At the same time, it will be noticed that no less unanimity prevails in pointing out the interiority of the later portions of the Qur'an in comparison with the earlier Sūrahs, a falling off, as it were, from the original poetical grandeur and loftiness of its composition into prose and common-place. Göther we have seen, uses such a strong word as disgust, again and again experienced by him at the very outset of its repeated reading

Not being an Arabic scholar himself, he knew the Qur'an only through the translations existing at the time, which follow through out the order of the received text. he was made to pass, roughly speaker from the later to the earlier Madinah Süral and from these again to the Surahs given Makkah at the various stages which ma Muhammad's ministry, while he was 3 staying in his irresponsive parent town. other words, he would have proceeded fre the utterances of the worldly ruler and la giver to those of the inspired Divine, w had just succeeded in laying the foundation stones of a new religion, under flerce strugg and sufferings, but in obedience to a c which, in his innermost heart, he felt h gone out to him, and which he had accept with awe, humility, and resignation therefore, in the beginning of his studi Gothe may have met with a number details in the vast structure raised by M hammad which appeared distasteful to i refined scion of the nineteenth century, interest must have been awakened, his i miration kindled and kept increasing, more he became acquainted, through i work itself, with the nature and personal of its creator, and with the purity and exal character of the main-spring of his motive

Those critics, on the other hand, we wise the Qur'an with regard to the chroicogical order of its constituents, follow it descending scale in their estimate. Speak at first highly—nay frequently with entity snasm—of the earlier parts, they complemore and more of the growing tedionsness a wearisomeness of the Surahs of later origin

Noldeke, for instance, the learned a ingenious author of Greschichte des Gord speaking of the deficiencies in style, I guage, and treatment of the subject matt which, in his opinion, characterise the second third period of the Makkan revelation and in general the Madinah Süraha, pointe terminates his indictment by the sentent if it were not for the exquisite flexibility and vigour (die ungemeine Frinkeit und Kraof the Arabic language itself, which, he ever, is to be attributed more to the in which the author lived than to his indictuality, it would scarcely be bearable to rethe later portions of the Qur'an a second time

But if we consider the variety and hete geneousness of the topics on which the Qur touches uniformity of style and diction ( scarcely be expected, on the contrary, would appear to be strangely out of pla Let us not forget that in the book, as h hammad's newest biographer, Ludolf Kr (Das Leben des Muhammed, Leipzig, 188 expresses it, "there is given a complete or of creed and morals, as well as of the l based thereupon. There are also the found tions laid for every institution of an extens commonwealth, for instruction, for the ministration of justice, for military organi tion, for the finances, for a most care legislation for the poor all built up on belief in the one God, who holds man's de-nies in His hand." Where so many import objects are concerned, the standard of exc ence by wanh we have to gauge the com sition of the Qur'an as a whole must needs vary with the matter treated upon in each particular case Sublime and chaste, where the supreme truth of Gods unity is to be proclaimed, appealing in high pitched strair s to the imagination of a poetically-grited people, where the eternal consequences of man's submission to God's boly will, or of rebellion against it, are pictured, touching in its simple, almost crude, ournestness, when it seeks again and again encomagement or consolation for God's messenger, and a solemn warning for those to whom he has been sent, in the histories of the prophets of old the language of the Qur'an adapt strelf to the exigencies of every-day life, when this every day life, in its private and public bearings, is to be brought in harmony with the fundamental principles of the new dispensation

Here, therefore its morits as a literary production should perhaps not be measured by some preconceived maxims of subjective and seathetic taste, but by the effects which it produced in Muhammad's contempararies and fellow-countrymen. If it spoke so , welfully and convincingly to the hearts of his hearers as to weld hitherto contrifugal and antagonistic elements into one compact and well organised body animated by ideas far beyond those which had until now ruled the Arabian mind, then its eloquence was perfect, simply because it created a civilized nation out of savage tribes, and shot a fresh worf

into the old warp of history

Noldeke's above-quoted remark, it seems to me, raises, however , very important question It mast, of course, be admitted that the Arabic language, which is new so greatly and deservedly admired, cannot be attributed to Muhammad individually, but originated in and was at his time the common property of the Arabic-speaking section of the human race, or, more accurately, or its Semitic branch, who were than hang within the Peninsula and in some of the neighbouring But we may well ask ourselves, countries what would in all probability have become of this language without Muhammad and his This is not at all an idle and Qur'ān? desultory speculation It is true the Arabic language had already produced numerous tine specimens of genuine and high flown poetry, but such poetry was chiefly, if not exclu sively, preserved in the memory of the people, for the art of writing was certainly very little known, and still less practised

Moreover, poetry is not tantamount to herature, it may lead to it, and will always form a most essential part of it, but it will live on, and perhaps die, in solitary isolation, inless it becomes, as it were, as Brahmans may, "twice born," by participating it a lite rary development of vaster dimensions and a nore general character. Divided among themselves into interesons tribes who were engaged in a perpetual warriare against each other, the Arabs and with them their various dialects, would more and more have drifted asunder, poetry would have followed in the wake, and the population of Arabia would have broken up into a multitude of clans, with their particular bards, whose love- and war-songs enterprising travellers of our days might now collect, like the popular senge of the Kosaks of the steppe, or the Kalmuks and similar nationalities, vegetating for centuries in a more or less primitive state of existence

It seems, then, that it is only a work of the nature of the Quran which could develop ancient Atabic into a literary language, notwithstanding the fact that it had already been admirably handled by local poets. As this book places the national life of the Aribs upon an entirely new basis, giving it at the same time a much-needed centre and a wonderful power of expansion, it became a matter of the utmost importance, nay, of uigent necessive, that the contents of the volume should be preserved with scrupulous iccurracy and undisputable conformity. This shall was only possible by fixing upon one dialect, which by its recognized excellence commended likely to general acceptance, and also by establishing a written text

But not only by raising a dialect, through its generalization to the power of a language, and by rendering the adoption of writing indispensable, has the Quran initiated the development of an Arabic literature, its composition itself has contributed two factors absolutely needful to this development it has added to the existing poetry the origins of rhetoric and piose

Although the decidedly poetical character of the earlier Surahs is obvious they differ in two important points from the hitherto acknowledged form of poetry, which is that of the Qasidah. This form consists of burts, or distichs, measured by some variation of one of the fitteen (or sixteen) principal metres, and each containing two half-lines, the same rhyme running through both hemistichs of the first burt, and through every second one of the following. For instance

1 Qıfa nabki mın zıkra habibin wa-mansıli Bi-siqti 7-liwa bama 'd-dakhuli wa-haumali

2 Fa-tūziha fa l magrāti lam ya-fu ras muhā

Lı mā nasajāt-hū min junūbin wa sham'alī which would scan

Qıfa nab- | ki mın gıkıa | habibin | wamanzıli &c

and belongs to the first variation of the metre

Emancipating himself from the fetters of metro, and gradually also of the uniform thyme. Muhammad created what is now called sojt, that is to say, a rhythmical prose, in which the component parts of a period are balanced and cadenced by a varying rhyme, and of which e.g. the Suratu'l-Qiyamah (laxv) offers some fair examples, as (6-10)

as (5-10) —
Bal yurıdu 'l-ınsanı li-yafjura amamab, Yas'alu aıyana yanını 'l qiyamah,

Fa-igh bariqa T-basar,
Wa-khasafa T-qamar
Wa-jumi'a 'sh-shamsu wa T-qamar
Yaqulu T insanu yauma'izin aina T mafarr But man chooseth to go astray as to his future,
He asketh, "When this Day of Resurrection?"
When the eye-sight shall be dazzled,
And the moon shall he darkened,
And the sun and the moon shall be together,
On that day man shall cry "Whole is there a place to flee to ""

And agun (22 80)

Wa-wajūhin yauma'izin nazirah

Ha rabbi-ba nāzirah

Wa wujūhin vauma'izin basirah

Tazamu an vif aia bi lin faqirah

Kalla izā balaghati i taraqiya

Wa qīla man i ai Wa-zama amahu l tiraq

Wa-taffati s sāqu bi 's saq

Ha rabbi ka vauma'izini l-masāq

(On that day shall faces beam with light, Out looking towards their lord. And faces on that tay shall be dismal, As if they thought that some calamity would therein befill them. Assuredly when the soul shall come up to the breast-hone,
And there shall be a cry. Who is the magician to restore him?

And the man feeleth that the time it his departure is come,

And when one log shall be enlaced with the other, fo thy Lord on that day shall he be driven on)

This kind of rhetorical style, the peculiarity of which Professor Palmer, in the passage quoted, p 523, aptly explains from the etymological structure of Arabic, has become the favourite model of oratorical and ornate language with the later Arabs. It is fix quently employed in ordinary narratives, such as the tales of the Arabian Nights whenever the occasion requires a more elevated form of speech, it is the usual garb of that class of compositions, which is known by the innue of Maqamat and even known by "Arab Shah, are written in it throughout

But Muhammad made a still greater and more decisive step towards creating a literature for his people. In those burshs, in which he regulated the private and public of the Mushim horizonated a process which has remained the stundard of classical purity ever since.

With regard to this point, however it has been stated, seemingly in disparagement of the later Arapic authors, that their accepting Mithammad's language as a perfect standard, from which no deviation is admiss ble has led them to adopt an artificial siyle, as unnatural, "as though Englishmen should still continue to follow Chancer as their model, in spite of the changes which their language has undergene. But is such a parallel justified in facts? In English, as amongst modern nations in general, the written language has always kept in close contact with the spoken language, the changes which the former has undergo e are simply the registration and legalisation of the changes which in course of time had taken place in the latter. Not so in Arabic From the moment when, at the epoch of its fullest and richest growth it was, through the composition of the Qur'au, invested with the dignity of a literary language, it was, by its very nature, for many enturies to come, in cauded from any essential change, whether this be considered as an advantage or not

The season for this has in the first instance m the triliteral character of the Semitic 100ts, referred to by Professor Palmer, which allows such a root to form one, two, or three vilubles, according to the pronunciation of e ch letter, with or without a vowel Let us take as an example once more the root عرب) which conveys the idea of beating," and serves in Arabic grammars. like fire t-reck TUTTW to form paradigms, by way of a wholesome admonition, I suppose, to the vouthful student. The first of these th se constrants can only remain quiescent, ze sunch-less of it is preceded by a vowel, as in the Imperative i zrib (الهرب), 'beat thou," where the root appears as a monoylluble, or in the sorist ya-zribu (يفرب), ' he beats or will heat, 'where it takes together with the unal u a disaylable form If we leave the second consonant quiescent and pronounce the first with a, we have zarh with the nominative termination surbin (رفرب), the verbal noun "beating" or infinitive "to beat" Vocalising both the first letters, we may obtain "and the active participle " beating,' or zuruh, plural of the last mentioned zarh with the nom na 170 termination - drabun and curubun (مَروب) If we read all three consonants with vowels it may be zaraha (غرب), "be dd best," or zarahy (مُولُوا), 'they did beat' Taking again, the two forms zariba he did best, and yizribu he bears or will beat," a simple change of vowels suffi es to transform the act to into the passive zuriba (فرنيه), " أن

bester and surrabu (12), "he is boaten or will be besten" Lastly, it must be nonced, that the distinction between the two fundamental tenses of the Arabic verb rests on the principle that the affixes representing the personal pronouns, are in the Presenting placed at the end, in the norist it the beginning of the root zerob na we did beat hat na recent, "we best or will but"

From all this it will be easily understood guage must deeply affect the whole system of Arabic accidence, and that this language will. therefore, naturally be averse to such changes But, moreover, this system stands in closest connection with and dependence on the syntactical structure of the language, which is equally "conservative," if I may use this expression, in its fundamental prin ciples. The Arabic syntax knows only two kinds of sentences (jumlah), one called nomi nal (temiyah), because it begins with a noun, the other verbal (filiyah), because it begins with a verb Reduced to their shortest expression, an example of the first would be Zaidun şāribin (بَيْدُ مَارِبُ), "Zaid (18) beating, of the second zaraba zordun (موب زيد), "(there) did beat Zaid" 'Il e constituent parts of the nominal sentence which we would call subject and predicate are termed mubiada', "incipient' and khabar "report," meaning that which is enounced or stated of the subject The rhaban need not be an attributive, as in the soutence given above, but it may be another clause, either nominal or verbal and if it is the former, its own mustada' admits even of a third clause as a second khabar for its complement. The subject of the verbal sections is called agent, or faid, and as mentioned before follows the verb or fil, in the nominative

The verb with its agent (fil and jail) or the subject with its predicate (mubiadd and khabar), form the essential elements of the Arabic sentence. But there are a great many accidental elements, called fazlah, what is superahundant or in excess," which may enter into the composition of a clause and expand it to considerable length. Such are additional parts of speech expressing the various objective relations (maj 'ūl) in whi h a noun may stand to an active verb or the condition (hal) of the agent at the moment when the action occurred or our cumstances of time and place (zarf) accompanying the action, or specificative distinctions (tamper) in explanation of what may be vague in a noun, or the dependence of one noun upon another (174fth) or upon a preposition (thaf?), or the different kinds of apposition (tawabi') in which a noun may be joined to another, either in the subject or the predicate, and so on.

All these numerous component parts of a fully-developed sentence are influenced certain ruling principles ('awamil, or "regents"), some merely logical but most of them expressed in words and particles, which determine the rrab, that is, the grammatical inflection of nouns and verbs and bring into play those various vowel-changes, of which we have shove given examples with regard to the interior of roots and which we must now add, apply equally to the terminations employed in declension and conjugation

The subject and predicate for thetanoe of the nominal sentence stand originally,

as it is natural, both in the nominative. There are, however, certain regents called nawasith, "effacing ones," which, like the particle sina, "behold." change the nominative of the subject into the accusative, while others, like the verb kana, "he was, leave the subject unaltered, but place the producate in the objective case said-un parth-un becomes thus either inna zaid-an zärib un, or kāna zaid-un zārib-an.

Again, we have seen that the acrist proper of the third person singular terminates in s (yazrıb-u). But under the influence of one class of regents this vowel changes into a (yazrıb-a), under that of others it is dropped altogether, and in both cases the meaning and grammatical status of the verb is thereby considerably modified If we consider the large number of these governing parts of speech—a well known book treats of the 'hundred regents,' but other grammariane count a hundred and ufteen and more-it will be seen what deligate and careful harding the Arabic syntax requires, and now little acope there is left for the experments of wilful mnovators

At the time of Muhammad this then was, apart from some slight dialectical differences the spoken language of his people. He took it, so to say, from the mouth of his interlocutors, but wielding it with the power of a master-mud, he made in the Qur'an such a complete and perfect use of all its resources as to create a work that in the astimation of ing hearers, appeared worthy to be thought the word of God Himself

When a long period of conquests scattered the Arabs to the farthest East and to the farthest West, their spoken language might deviste from its pristine parity, slurring over unaccented syllables and dropping cimina tions But the fine idion of their fore-rathers, as deposited in the Qur'an, remained the language of their prayer and their pions meditation and thus lived on with them, as a bond of unity, an object of national love and admiration, and a source of literary development for all times

RAHN (رهر)) Pledging or pawning A legal term which signifies the detention of a thing on account of a claim which may be answered by means of that thing, as a time case of debt. This practice of pawning and pledging is lawful in Islam, for it is related that the Prophet, in a bargain with a Jow for grain gave his coat of mail in pledge for the payment. It is also said in the Quran, Surah it 283. Let pledges be taken. The word is used in the Quran in its plural form, rihan (For further information on the subject of Pawning, see Hamilton's Hidayah, vol in p. 188)

bring torth therewith every kind of fruit"

Prayers for rain are called Salātu 'l-Istagā', and consist of two rak'ah prayers. Anas says that on one occasion they were caught in the rain, and the Prophet took off his garment until he got wet and they said, "O Prophet, why have you done this?" He replied, 'This is fresh rain from our Lord." (Michlat, book in their)

RA'INA (Leij) A word the use of which is forbidden in the Qur'an, Surah in 35 '() ye who believe! say not to the Apostle 'Ra'ino (ic 'Look at us'), but say, 'Unsurna' (ic 'Regard us)' These two words have both the same signification, but Muhammad had a great aversion to the use of the word ratios, becaute it had also a bad me many in Hebrew (see al-Barawa, sa

RAJM (رجسم) "Lapidation" [STOKING TO DEATH ]

From Ruka", " to RAK'AH (کعنی) bow, to prostrate one's self" nortion of the Muhammadan daily prayers I RAYERS, RAMAZĀN (رمضان) The ninth month of the Muhammadan year, which is observed as a strict fast from dawn to sunsat of each day in the month The word Hannezan is derived from ramz, "to burn." The month is said to have been so called either because it used (before the change of the calendar) to occur in the hot season, or because the month's fast is supposed to burn away the sins of men ( ( layasu 'l Luyhah, sa loco )

The observance of this month is one of the five pillars of practice in the Muslim religion, and its excellence is much extelled by Muhammad, who said that during Ramazan 'the gates of Paradise are open and the gates of hell are shut, and the devils iro chained by the leg, and only the e who observe it will be permitted to enter at the gate of heaven called Raivan." Those who keep the fast "will be pardoned all their past venial sins" (Mishkāt, book vii ch i pt 1)

The express injunctions regarding the observance of this month are given in the Qur'an, Surah ii 179-184 —

"O behevers! a Fast is prescribed to you as it was prescribed to those before you that ye may fear God for certain days But he among you who shall be sick, or on a journey shall tast that same number of other days and as for those who are able to keep it und get break it, the expistion of this shall be the maintenance of a poor man. And he who of his own accord performeth a good work, shall derive good from it and good shall it be for you to fast—if ye knew it to the month Ramszān in which the Qur'ān was sent down to be man's guidance, and an explanation of that guidance, and of that illumination, as soon as any one of you observeth the moon, let him set about the fast but he who is sick, or upon a journey, shall fast a like number of other days God wisheth you care, but wisheth not your discomfort and that you fulfil the number of days, and that you glorify God for his gui-dance and that you be thankful And when my servants ask thee concerning me, then will I be nigh unto them .I will answer the cry of him that crieth, when he crieth unto me but let them hearken unto me, and believe in me, that they may proceed aright You are allowed on the night of the fast to approach your wives they are your garment and ye are their garment God knoweth that ye defraud yourselves therein, so He turneth unto you and forgiveth you! Now, therefore, go in unto them with full desire for that which God hath ordained for you, and eat and drink until ve can discern a white thread from a black thread by the daybreak then fast strictly till night, and go not in anto them, but rather pass the time in the Mosques These are the bounds set up by God, there fore come not near them. Thus God maketh His signs clou to men that they my foor

From the preceding versus it will be seen that fast does not commence work some Muslim is able to state that he has seen the new moon. If the sky be over-clouded and the moon cannot be seen, the fast begins upon the completion of thirty days from beginning of the previous month

It must be kept by every Mushm, except the sick, the infirm, and pregnant women, or women who are nursing their children Young children, who have not reached the age of puberty, are exempt, and also travellers on a journey of more than three days In the case of a sick person or traveller, the month's fast must be kept as soon as they are able to This act is called Qaza, or perform it exputation.

The fast is extremely rigorous and mortifying, and when the Ramazan happens to fall in the summer and the days are long, the prohibition even to drink a drop of water to slake the thirst is a very great hardship Muhammad speaks of this religious exercise as "easy" (Qur'an Surah n. 181), as most probably it was when compared with the ascetic spirit of the times Sir William Muir (Late of Mahomet, vol m 49) thinks Mu hammad did not foresee that, when he changed the Jewish intercalary year for the lunal year, the fast would become a grievous burden instead of an easy one, but Muham madan lexicographers say the tast was established when the month occurred in the hot season (see Ghyasu'l Lughah)

During the month of Ramazan twenty addstronal raktahs, or forms of prayer, are repeated after the night prayer These are called Tarawih

Devout Vinshms seclude themselves for some time in the Mosque during this month and abstain from all worldly conversation engaging themselves in the reading of the Qur'an This seclusion is called I tiker Muhammad is said to have usually observed this custom in the last ten days of Ramazan The Larlatu'l- Qadr, or the "night of power," is said by Muhammad to be either on the twenty-first, twenty-third, or twenty fifth, or twenty-seventh, or twenty-ninth of the month The exact date of this solemn of Ramazān night has not been discovered by any but the Prophet himself, and some of the Companions. although the learned doctors believe it to be on the twenty-seventh of this night hammad says in the Qur'an (Suratu 'l-Ondr)

" Verily we have caused it (the Qur'an) to descend on the night of power

And who shall teach thee what the night of power is?

The night of power excelleth a thousand months,

Therein descend the angels and the spirit by permission

Of their Lord in every matter,

And all as peace till the breaking of the

By these verses the commentator Husain understands that on this night the Qur'an came down entire in one volume to the lowest heaven, from whence it was revealed by Gabriel in portions, as the occasion required The excellences of this night are said to be innumerable, and it is believed that during it the whole animal and vegetable kingdom bow in humble adoration to the Almighty, and the waters of the sea become sweet in a moment of time! This night is frequently confounded with the Shab-1-Barat, but even the Qur'in itself is not quite clear on the subject, for in Surah xliv 1 it reads "By this clear book. See on a blessed night have we sent it down. for we would warn mankind, on the night wherein all things are disposed in wisdom. From which it appears that "the blessed night," or the Laslatu 'l-mubarakah, is both the night of record and the night upon which the Qur'an came down from heaven, although the one is the twenty-seventh day of Ramazan and the other the fifteenth of Sha'ban

M Geiger identifies the Ramazan with the fast of the tenth (Levitious xxiii 27), but it 18 probable that the fast of the Tenth is identical with the 'Ashura', not only because the Hebrew Asur, "ten," is retained in the title of that Muhammadan fast, but also because there is a Jewish tradition that creation began upon the Jewish fast of the Tenth, which coincides with the Muhammadan day, 'Ashura' being regarded as the day of creation More-over, the Jewish Asûr and the Muslim 'Ashura' are both fasts and days of affliction. It is more probable that Muhammad got his idea of a thirty days' fast from the Christian Lent The observance of Lent in the Eastern Church was exceedingly strict, both with regard to the nights as well as the days of that season of abstinence, but Muhammad entirely relaxed the rules with regard to the night, and from sunset till the dawn of day the Muslim is permitted to indulge in any lawful plea-sures, and to feast with his friends, conse quently large evening dinner-parties are usual in the nights of the Ramazan amongst the better classes This would be what Muhammad meant when he said, "God would make the fast an ease and not a difficulty," for, hot withstanding its rigour in the daytime, it must be an easier observance than the strict fast observed during Lent by the Eastern Christians of Muhammad's day

The following sayings of Muhammad regarding the fast of Ramazan are tound in the Traditions (see Munkat, Arabio Ed., Krtābu s Saum)

"The difference between our fast and that of the people of the book (s.e Jews and Christians) is eating only before the first dawn of day (and not afterwards) "

"Reep not the fast till you. see the new moon, and if the moon be hidden from you by clouds, count the days." And in one tradition it is thus - " A month is twenty-nine nights, then keep not the fast till you see the new moon, which, if she be hid from you by clouds, then complete thirty days."

"When the darkness of the night advances from the west and the day departs from the east, and the sun sets, then the keeper of the fast may begin to eat

"There are eight doors in Paradise, and one is called Raiyan, by which only the keepers of the fast shall enter."

"When the month Ramaşan arrives the doors of Heaven are opened" (in another tradition it is said, the doors of Paradise are opened), " and the doors of hell are shut, and the devils are channed" (in one tradition it is said, the doors of God's mercy are opened)

"The person who fasts in the month of Ramazan on account of belief in God and m obedience to His command, shall be pardoned of all his past sine, and the person who says the night prayers of the Ramasan shall be pardoned all his past sins, and the person who says the prayers on the Lailatu 1-Qadr with faith and the bope of reward shall be pardoned of all his past sine."
"If a keeper of fast does not abandon lying, God cares not about his leaving off eating and drinking"

"There are many keepers of fast who gain nothing by fasting but thirst, and there are many risers up at night and performers of prayers who gain nothing by their rising but wakefulness.

RESIGNATION literal meaning of lalam is a state or condition in which a believer becomes "resigned" to the will of God, a "Muslim" being one who is "resigned." But in the Quran, the grace of resignation is more frequently expressed by the word sabr, "patience," eq Surah it 150 Give good tidings to the patient, who when there falls on them a calumity, say, 'Verily we are God's and verily to Him do we return "

The word Tasian which the compiler of the Kitabu 't-T'a rifat says means to place one's neck under the commands of God, seems to express the English word "resignation"

It occurs in the Qur'an, Surah iv 68

"They submit with submission'

The author of the Akhlaq-1-Jalalı says Taslim is to "acquience in and receive with satisfaction (although, perhaps, repugnant to the inclination) the commands of God, as exemplified in the verse above quoted

As-Se'ah," The Hour" (Sürah viii 186)

There are very graphic descriptions of the Last Day in the poetical Suraha of the Quran. The five following belong to an early period in Muhammad's mission - Särah luxy .

' It needeth not that I swear by the day of the Resurrection,

Or that I swear by the self-accusing soul

Thinketh man that we shall not re-umte his bones?

Aye i his very finger tips are we able evenly to replace

But man chooseth to deny what is before

He asketh, 'When this day of Resurrection?

But when the eye shall be dazzled,

And when the moon shall be darkened. And the sun and the moon shall be together.

On that day man shall ery, 'Where is there a place to flee to?

But in vain—there is no refuge-

With thy Lord on that day shall be the sele esylum

On that day shall man be told of all that he hath done first and last

Yea, a man shall be the eye-witness against himself

And even if he put forth his plea

(Move not thy tougue in haste to follow and master this revelation

For we will see to the collecting and the recital of it,

But when we have recited it, then follow thou the recital

And, verily, afterwards it shall be ours to make it clear to thee )

Ave, but ye love the transitory,

And ye neglect the life to come On that day shall faces beam with light,

Outlooking towards their Lord,

And faces on that des shall be dismal, As if they thought that some great calamity would befall them

Aye, when the soul shall come up into the throat,

And there shall be a cry . Who hath a charm that can restore him?

And the man feeleth that the time of his departure is como,

And when one leg shall be laid over the other,

To thy Lord on that day shall he be driven

For he believed not, and he did not pray, But he called the truth a he and turned his back,

Then, walking with haughty mien, rejoined his people

That Hour is nearer to thee and nearer It is ever nearer to thee and nearer still Thinketh man that he shall be left suprome?

and become empty,

And duteously obeyed its Lord,

Then verily, O man, who desirest to reach thy Lord, shall thou meet bim.

And he into whose right hand his Book shall be given,

Shall be reckoned with in an easy reckon

And shall turn, rejoicing, to his kindred But he whose Book shall be given him behind his back

Shall invoke destruction

But in the fire shall he burn.

For that he lived joyously among his kındred

Without a thought that he should return to God

Yes but his Lord beheld him

It needs not therefore that I swear by the sunset reduces,

And by the night and its gatherings, And by the moon when at her full,

That from state to state shall ye be surely (arried onward "

The following description belongs to a much later period than the former Surahs already quoted, and occurs in Surah xxii. 1-7, which was given at Al-Madinah not long before Muhammad's death

"O men (of Makkah) fear your Lord. Verily the Earthquake of the Hour will be a tremendons thing !

"On the day when we shall behold it, every sucking woman shall foreske her sucking babe, and every woman that hath a burden in her womb shall cast her burden, and thou shalt see men drunken, yet are they not dranken but it is the mighty chastisement of God !

"There is a man who, without knewledge, wrangleth about Grd, and followeth every rebellione Satan, "Concerning whom it is decreed, that he shall enrely beguine and guide into the torment of the Flame, whoever shall take him for his lord.

"O men! if ye doubt as to the resurrection, yet, of a truth, have We created you of dust, then of the most garms of life, then of alots of blood, then of pieces of flesh shapen and unshapen, that We might give you proofs of our power! And We cause one sex or the other et our pleasure, to abide in the womb until the appointed time; then We bring you forth miants, then permit you to reach your age of strength, and one of you dieth, and another of you liveth on to an age so abject that all his former knowledge is clean forgotten! And thou hast seen the earth dried up and barren. but when We send down the rain upon it, it stirreth and swelleth, and groweth every kind of luxuriant herb.

"This, for that God is the Truth, and that it is He who quickeneth the dead, and that He hath power over everything

" And that 'the Hour' will endred comethere is no doubt of it—and that God will wake up to life those who are in the tombs '

Very lengthy accounts of the Day of Resurrection, and of the signs preceding it, are given in all books of tradition, and works on dogmatic theology (See Sahiha 'l-Bukhari, Arabis Ed Kitābu 'l-Fitan, p 1945, Sahiha 'l-Musius, Arabis Ed. vol. ii. p 888, Mushkatu 'l-Meşabih, Arabic Ed Kitabu'l-Fitan, Sharhu 7-Muwägif, p 579)

The following, collected by Mr Sale from various writers, is given, with some alterations, additions, and references

It is the received opmion amongst Muslims of all sects that at the Resurrection the body will be raised and united to its soul, and that one part of the body, namely, the lower part of the spine, the os sacrum, in Arabic called 'Ajbs g-Zanab, "the root of the tail, be preserved as a basis of the future edifice (Meshkāt, book xxiii ch ix)

This bone, it is said, will remain uncorrupted till the last day, as a germ from This whence the whole is to be renewed will be effected by a forty days' rain which God will send, and which will cover the earth to the height of twelve embits, and cause the bodies to sprout forth like plants For this doctrine Muhammad is beholden to the Jews, who say the same things of the bone Las, excepting that what he attributes to a great rain will be effected, according to them, by a daw, impregnating the dust of the earth. (Bereskst rabbak)

The time of the Resurrection the Muhammadana allow to be a perfect secret to all but God alone, the Angel Gabriel himself acknowledged his ignorance on this point when Muhammad asked him about it. (Meshkat, book i ch. i.) However, they say the approach of that day may be known from certain signs which are to precede it. These signs are distinguished into "the leaver" and " the greater '

The lesser signs (Iskārātu 'e-Sā'ak) are es follows :-

(1) The decay of faith among men.

(2) The advancing of the meanest persons to eminent dignity

(8.) A maid-servant shall become the mother of her mistress (or master); by which is meant either that towards the end of the world men shall be much given to sensuality, or that the Muhammadans shall then take many captives

(4) Tumults and seditions
(5) A war with too Greeks or Romanns (6) Great distress in the world so that a man, when he passeth by another's grave, shall say, "Would to God I were in his place !"

(7) The provinces of al-fraq and Syria shall refuse to pay toeir tribute.

(8) The buildings of al-Madmah or Yasrib shall reach to Makkah. (Mashkat, book xxiii. ch ul)

The greater-signs ('Alamātu 's-Şā'ah) are as follows

(I) The sun's rising in the west which some have imagined it originally did

(2) The appearance of the Dabbata LArz, "beast," which shall rise out of the earth, in the temple of Makkah, or on Mount as-Safa This beast will be sixty culate high, and will be a compound of various species, having the head of a bull, the eyes of a hog, the ears of an elephant, the horne of a stag, the neck of an estrich, the breast of a lion, the colour of a tiger, the back of a cat, the tail of a ram, the legs of a camel, and the voice of an ass. She will appear three times in several piaces, and will bring with her the rod of Mores and the seal of Bolomon, and, being so swift that none can overtake her or escape her, will with the first strike all the believers on the face, and mark them with the word Mu'min, "behaver," and with the latter will mark the unbehavers on the face hkewise with the word kafir, "infidel," that every person may be known for what he really is. The same beast is to demonstrate the vanity of all religions except Islam, and to speak Arabic [DABBATU 'L ARZ.]

(3) War with the Romans or Greeks, and the taking of Constantinople by seventy thousand of the posterity of Issac, who shall not win that city by force of arms, but the walls shall fall down while they cry out, "There is no deity but God! God is most great!" As they are dividing the spoil, news will come to them of the appearance of Anti-christ, whereupon they shall leave all ami return back.

(4.) The coming of Antichrist, whom the Mahammadana call al-Masika 'd-Dayal," the false or lying Christ." He is to be one-eyed, and marked on the forehead with the letters K F R, signifying kafir, " infidel." He will appear first between al-Iraq and Syria, or, according to others, in the province of Khorasan. He is to ride on a white ass, be followed by severity thousand Jews of Is pahen and continue on earth forty days, of wnich one will be equal in length to a year, another to a month, another to a week, and the rest will be common days. He will lay waste all places, but will not enter Makkah or al-Madinah, which are to be guarded by angels, and at length he will be slain by Jesus, who is to encounter him at the gate

of Lud [MASIHU D-DAJJAL.]

(5) The descent of Jesus on earth. He is to descend near the white tower to the cast of Damascus when the people have returned from the taking of Constantinople. He is to embrace the Muhammadan religion, marry a wife, get children, kill Antichrist, and at length die, after forty years'—on, according to others, twenty-four years'—continuance on earth, and be buried at Al-Madinah. Under him there will be great security and plenty in the world, all hatred and malice being laid aside, when lions and camels, bears and sheep shall live in peace, and a child shall play with serpents unhurt. (See Sahihu 'l-Bukhari')

(6) War with the Jews of whom the Muhammadans are to make a produgious slaughter, the very trees and stones discovering such of them as hide themselves, except only the tree called Gharqad, which in the ties of the Jews

(7) The appearance of Gog and Magog, or, as they are called, Ya'ya' and Ma'ya' These barbarans, having passed the lake of Tiberias, which the vanguard of their vast army will drink dry, will come to Jerusalem, and there greatly distress Jesus and His companions, till, at His request, God will destroy them, and fill the earth with their carcasses, which after some time God will send birds to carry away, at the prayers of Jesus and His followers. Then bows, arrows and quivers the Muslims will burn seven years together, and at last God will send a rain to cleanse the earth, and to make it fertile [Gog AND MAGOG]

(8) A smoke which shall fill the whole earth

- (9) An eclipse of the moon Muhammad is reported to have said that there would be three eclipses before the last hom, one to be seen in the east, another in the west, and the third in Arabia
- (10) The returning of the Arabs to the worship of al-Lat and al 'Uzza, and the rest of their ancient icols, after the decease of every one in whose heart there was faith equal to a grain of mustard seed, none but the very worst of men being left alive. For God, they say, will send a cold edoriforods wind, blowing from Syria, which shall sweep away the couls of the faithful, and the Guran itself, so that men will remain in the grossest ignorance for a hundred years

(11) The discovery of a wast heap of gold and silver by the retreating of the Euphrates, which will be the destruction of many

(12) The demolition of the Karbah in the Makkan temple by the Ethiopians

(13) The speaking of beasts and mammate things

(14) The breaking out of fire in the province of al-Hijar or necording to others, in al Yaman

(15) The appearance of a man of the descendants of Kahtan, who shall drive men before him with his staff

(16) The coming of al-Mahdi, "the director," concerning whom Muhammad prophesied that the world should not have an end till one of his own family should govern the Arabians, whose name should be the same with his own name, and whose father's name should also be the same with his father's name and who shall fill the earth with righteousness. This person the Shi'ahs believe to be now alive, and concealed in some secret place, till the time of his manifestation for they suppose him to be nother than the last of the twelve Imāms, named Muhammad Abū 'l-Qāsim, as their prophet was [shi'Ah, MAHDI]

(17) A wind which shall sweep away the souls of all who have but a grain of faith in their hearts, as has been mentioned under the tenth sign. (Mishkat, book xxiii ch iv)

tenth sign. (Mishkat, book xxin ch iv)
These are the greater signs which, accordmy to Muhammadan traditions, are to precede the Resurrection, but still leave the hour of it uncertain, for the immediate sign of its being come will be the first blast of the trumpet, which they believe will be sounded three The first, ' the blast of consternstion' at the hearing of which all cleatures in heaven and earth shall he struck with terror, except those whom God shall please to exempt from it. The effects attributed to this first sound of the trumpet are very wonderful, for they sav the earth will be shaken, and not only all buildings, but the very mountains, levelled, that the heavens shall melt, the sun be darkened the stars fail on the death of the angels, who, as some imagine, hold them suspended between heaven and earth, and the sea shall be troubled and dried up, or according to others, turned into flames the sun, moon, and stars being threwn into it, the Qur'an, to express the greatness of the terror of that day, adds that women who give suck shall abandon the care of their infauls, and even the she camels which have gone ten months with young (a most valuable part of the substance of that nation) shall be ulterly neglected (Qur'an, Sürah lxxxı) A further effect of this blast will be that concourse of beasts mentioned in the Qur'an, though some doubt whether it be to precede the Resurrection or not They who suppose it will precede, think that all kinds of animals, forgetting their respective natural flerceness and timidity, will run together into one place, being terrified by the sound of the trumpet and the sudden shock of nature.

This first blast will be followed by a second, the "blast of examination," when all creatures, both in heaven and earth, shall die or be annihilated, except these which God shall please to exempt from the common fate, and this shall happen in the twinkling of an eye, nay, in an instant, nothing surviving except God alone, with Paradise and Hell, and the inhabitants of those two places, and the throne of Glory. The last who shall die will be the an gel of death (Malaku'l-Maul) (1 Cor. xv. 26)

Forty years after this will be heard the "blast of resurrection," when the trumpet shall be sounded the third time by Israill, who, together with Gabriel and Michael, will se previously restored to life, and, standing on the rock of the temple of Jerusalem (a,-Sakhrak), shall at God's command call to-gether all the dry and rotten bones and other dispersed parts of the bodies, and the very hairs, to judgment. This angel having, by the Divine order, set the trumpet to his month, and called together all the souls from all parts, will throw them into his trumpet, from whence, on his giving the isst sound, at the command of God, they shall fly forth like bees, and fill the whole space between heaven and earth, and then repair to their respective bodies, which the opening earth will suffer to arise; and the first who shall so arise, according to a tradition of Muhammad, will be himself. For this the earth will be prepared by the rain above-mentioned, which is to fall continually for forty years, and will resemble the seed of a man, and be supplied from the water under the throne of God which is called hving water, by the efficacy and virtue of which the dead bodies shall spring forth from their graves, as they did in their mother's womb, or as corn sproute forth by common rain, till they become perfect after which breath will be breathed into them, and they will sleep in their sepulchras till they are raised to life at the last trump

As to the length of the Day of Judgment, the Qur'an in one place (Sürah xxxii 4) tells us that it will last one thousand years, and in another (Surah lxx. 4) fifty thousand reconcile this apparent contradiction, the commentators use several shifts, some saying they know not what measure of time God intends in those passages, others, that these forms of speaking are figurative, and not to be strictly taken, and were designed only to express the terribleness of that day, it being usual for the Arabs to describe what they dislike as of long continuance, and what they like as the contrary, and others suppose them spoken only in reference to the difficulty of the business of the day, which, if God should commut to any of his creatures, they would not be able to go through it in so many thousand years.

That the resurrection will be general, and extend to all creatures, both angels, genu men, and animals, is the received opinion, and according to the teaching of the Qur'an

(See Sürah lxxxi)

In the resurroction those who are destined to be partakers of eternal happiness will arise in honour and security, and those who are doomed to misery, in disgrace and under dismal apprehensions. As to mankind, they will be raised perfect in all their parts and members, and in the same state as they came out of their mothers wombs, that is, hare footed, naked, and uncircumcised, which directionstapees, when Muhammad was telling his wife 'Ayishah, she, fearing the rules of modesty might be thereby violated, objected that it would be very indecent for men and women to look upon one another in that condition, but he answered her, that the business of the day would be too weighty and serious to allow them the making use of that liberty

Others, however, allege the authority of their Prophet for a contrary opinion as to their nakedness, and say he asserted that the dead should arise dressed in the same clothes m which they died, although some interpret these words not so much of the entward dress of the body as the inward olohing of the wind, and understand thereby that every person will rise again in the same state as to his faith or infidelity, knowledge or ignorance his good or bad works.

Muhammad taught (Mishkat, book xxiii ch. x) that mankind shall be assembled at the last day, and shall be distinguished into three classes The first, those who go on foot the second, those who ride, and the third, those who creep, grovelling with their faces on the ground. The first class is to consist of those believers whose good works have been fen , the second of those who are in greater honour with God, and more acceptable to Him, whence 'Ali affirmed that the pious, when they come forth from the sepulchres, shall find ready prepared for them white-winged camels, with saddles of gold, wherein are to be observed some footsteps of the doctrine of the ancient Arabians, and the third class will be composed of the infidels whom God shall cause to make then appearance with their faces on the earth, blind, dumb, and deaf

But the ungediy will not be thus only distinguished, for according to the commentator al-Bazzawi (vol. n p 480), there will be ten sorts of wicked men on whom God shall on that day fix certain discretory marks The first will appear in the form of apes, these are the backbiters. The second in that of swine, these they who have been greedy of filthy lucre, and enriched themselves by public oppression The third will be brought with their heads reversed and their feet distorted these are the usurers The fourth will wander about blind, these are unjust judges. The fifth will be deaf dumb, and blind, understanding nothing, these are they who glory in their works The sirth will gnaw their tongues, which will hang down upon their breasts, corrupted blood flowing from their mouths like spittle, so that everybody shall detest them, these are the learned men and doctors, whose actions contradict their sayings. The seventh will have their hands and feet cut off, these are they who have injured their neighbours The eighth will be fixed to the trunks of palm-trees or stakes of wood these are the false accusers and informers. The sinth will stunk worse than a corrupted corpse, these are they who have indulged their passions and voluptuous appetites. The tenth will be clothed with garments daubed with pitch, and these are the proud, the vain-glorious, and the arrogant

In the Traditions, Muhammad is related to have said.—

"The first person who shall receive sentence on the Day of Resurrection will be a martyr, who will be brought into the presence of the Almighty then God will make known the benefits which were conferred on him in the world, and the person will be sensible of them and confess them, and God will say, 'What didst then do in grat'tude for them?' He will reply, 'I fought in Thy cause till I was slain. God will say, 'Thou liest, for thou foughtest in order that people might extor thy courage. Then God will order them to drag him upon his face to bell. The second, a man who shall have obtained knowledge and instructed others, and lead the Qur'an. He will be brought into the presence of God, and will be given to understand the benefits he had received, which he will be sensible of and acknowledge, and God will say, 'What didst thou do in gratifude thereof?' He will reply, 'I learned knowledge and taught others, and I read the Qur'an to please Thee' Then God will say, Thou liest, for thou didst study that people might call thee learned, and thou didst read the Qur'an for the name of the thing' Then God will order him to be dragged upon his face and precipitated into hell. The third, a man to whom God shall have given abundant wealth, and he shall be called into the presence of God, and will be reminded of the benefits which he received, and he will acknowledge and confess them, and God will say, What return didst thou in return for them?' He will say, 'I expended my wealth to please thee, in all those ways which Thou hast approved' God will say, 'Thou hest, for thou didst it that people might extol thy liberality', after which he will be drawn upon his face and thrown into the fire"

As to the place where they are to be assembled to Judgment, the Qur'an and Traditions agree that it will be on the earth, but in what part of the earth is not agreed bome say their Prophet mentioned Synia for the place, others, a white and even tract of land without inhabitants or any signs of buildings Al Chazali imagines it will be a second earth, which he supposes to be of silver and others an earth which has nothing in common with ours, but the name, having it is possible, heard something of the new heavens and new earth, mentioned in Scripture (Rev xxi 1), whence the Qur'an has this expression, "on the day wherem the earth shall be changed into another earth" (Sūrah xiv 49)

The end of the Resurrection the Muhammadans declare to be, that they who are so raised may give an account of their actions, and receive the reward thereof. And that not only mankind, but the genu and irrational animals also shall be judged on this great day, when the unharmed cattle shall take vengeance on the horned, till entire satisfaction shall be given to the numeral tire satisfaction shall be given to the injured.

As to mankind, when they are all assembled together, they will not be immediately brought to judgment, but the angels will keep them in their ranks and order while they attend for that purpose, and this attendance, some say, is to last forty years, others seventy, others three hundred; may, some say no less than fifty thousand years, each of them vouching their Prophet's authority During this space they will stand looking up to heaven, but without receiving any information or orders thence. and are to suffer grievous torments, both the just and the unjust, though with manufest difference. For the limbs of the former, par-ticularly those parts which they used to wash in making the ceremonial shiution be-fore prayer, shall shine gloriously And their sufferings shall be light in comparison, and shall last no longer than the time necessary to say the appointed prayers, but the latter will have their faces obscured with blackness, and disfigured with all the marks of sorrow and deformity What will then occasion not the least of their pain, is a wonderful and mcredible sweat, which will even stop their mouths, and in which they will be immersed in various degrees, according to their dements, some to the ankles only and some to the knees, some to the middle, some so high as their mouth, and others as their And this sweat will be provoked not only by that vast concourse of all sorts of creatures mutually pressing and treading on one another's feet, but by the near and unusual approach of the sun, which will be then no farther from them than the distance of a mile, or (as some translate the word, the signification of which is ambiguous) than the length of a bodkin. So that their skulls will boil like a pot, and they will be all bathed in sweat. From this inconvenience, however, the good will be protected by the shade of God's throne, but the wicked will be so miserably termented with it, also with hun ger and thirst, and a stifling air, that they will cry out, "Lord, deliver us from this an guish, though thou send us into hell-fire!" What they fable of the extraordmany heat of the sun on this occasion, the Muhammadans certainly borrowed from the Jews, who say that, for the punushment of the wicked in the Last Day, that planet shall be drawn forth from its sheath, in which it is now put up, lest it should destroy all things by its excessive heat

When those who have risen shall have waited the lumited time, the Muhammadans beheve God will at length appear to judge them, Muhammad undertaking the office of inter cessor, after it shall have been declined by Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, and Jesus, who shall beg deliverance only for their own souls (Meshkat, book xxiii. ch. xii) On this solemn occasion God will come in the clouds, surrounded by angels, and will produce the books wherein the actions of every person are recorded by their guardian angels, and will command the prophets to bear witness against those to whom they have been respectively sent. Then everyone will be examined concerning all his words and actions, uttered and done by him in this life, not as if God needed any information in these respects, but to oblige the person to make public confession and scknowledgment of God's justice. The particulars of which they shall give an account, as Muhammad himself enumerated them, are of their time, how they spent it, of their woulth, by what means they acquired it, and how they employed it, of their bodies, wherein they exercised them, of their knowledge, what use they made of it. It is said, however, that Muhammad has affirmed that no less than seventy thousand of his fellowers should be permutted to enter Paradise without any previous examination, which seems to be contradictory to what is said above. To the questions, it is said, each person shall answer, and make his defence in the best manner he can, endeavouring to excase himself by casting the blame of his evil deeds on others; so that a dispute shall arise even between the soul and the body, to which of them their guilt ought to be imputed the soul saying, "O Lord, my body I received from thee, for thou createdst me without a hand to lay hold with, till I came and entered into this body, therefore punish it eternally, but deliver me." The body on the other side will make this apology, "O Lord, thou createdest me like a stock of wood, having neither hand that I could lay hold with, nor foot that I could walk with, till this soul, like a ray of light, entered into me, and my tongue Legan to speak, my eye to see, and my foot to walk, therefore punish it sternally, but deliver me "

But God will propound to them the following parable of the blind man and the iame man, which, as well as the precedingdispute, was borrowed by the Muhammadans from the Jews (Gemara, Sanked, ch. x1)

A certain king having a pleasant garden, in which were ripe fruits, set two persons to keep it. One of them was blind, and the other lame, the former not being able to see the fruit nor the latter to gather it lame man, however, seeing the fruit, persuaded the blind man to take him upon his shoulders, and by that means he easily gathered the fruit, which they divided be tween them. The lord of the garden coming rome time after, and inquiring after his fruit, each began to excuse himself the blind man said he had no eyes to see with, and the lame man that he had no feet to approach the trees But the king, ordering the lame man to be set on the blind, passed sentence on and punished them both. And in the same manner will God deal with the body and the soul. As these apologies will not avail on that day, so will it also be in vain for anyone to deny his evil actions, since men and angels and his own members, may, the very earth steelf, will be ready to bear witness against him.

Though the Muhammadans assign so long a space for the attendance of the resuscitated before their trial, yet they tell us the trial itself will be over in much less time, and, according to an expression of Muhammad, familiar enough to the Araba, will last no longer than while one may milk an ewe, or than the space between two milkings of a she-camel. Some, explaining those words so frequently used in the Quran, "God will be swit in taking an account," say that he will judge all creatures in the space of half a day, and others that it will be done in less time than the twinkling of an ove

At this examination they also believe that each person will have the book wherein all the actions of his life are written delivered to him which books the righteous will receive in their right hand and read with great pleasure and satisfaction, but the ungodly will be obliged to take them against their wills in their left, which will be bound belind their backs, their right hand being tied up to their necks

To show the exact Justice which will be observed on this great day of trial, the next thing they describe is the misan or "balance," wherein all things shall be weighed. They say it will be held by Gabriel, and that it is of so vast a size that its two scales, one of which hangs over Paradise, and the other ever hell, are capacious enough to contain both heavon and earth Though some are willing to understand what is said in the Quran concerning this balance allegorically, and only as a figurative representation of God's equity, yet the more ancient and orthodox opinion is that it is to be taken literally. and since words and actions, being more acoidenta, are not capable of being themselves weighed, they say that the books wherem they are written will be thrown into the scales, and according as those wherein the good or the evil actions are recorded shall preponderate, sentence will be given, those whose balances laden with their good works shall be beavy will be saved, but those whose balances are light will be condemned Nor will anyone have cause to complain that God suffers any good action to pass unre-warded, because the wicked for the good they do have their reward in this life, and therefore can expect no favour in the next

The old Jewish writers make mention as well of the books to be produced at the last lay, wherein men's actions are registered, as of the balance wherein they shall be weighed, and the Scripture itself seems to have given the first notion of both But what the Persian Mag: beheve of the balance comes nearest to the Muhammadan opinion hold that on the day of judgment two angels, named Mibr and Surush, will stand on the bridge as-Sirat, to examine every person as he passes, that the former, who represents the divine mercy, will hold a balance in his hand, to weigh the actions of men, that according to the report he shall make thereof to God, sentence will be pronounced, and those whose good works are found more ponderous, if they turn the scale but by the weight of a hair, will be permitted to pass forward to Paradise, but those whose good works shall be found light will be by the other angel, who represents God's Justice, precipitated from the bridge into hell.

This examination being past and everyone's works weighed in a just belance, that mutual retaliation will follow, according to which every creature will take vengeance one of another, or have satisfaction made them for the injuries which they have suffered And since there will be no other way of returning like for like, the manner of giving this satisfaction will be by taking away a proportionable part of the good works of him who offered the injury, and adding it to those of him who suffered it Which being done, if the angels (by whose ministry this it to be performed) say, "Lord we have given to every one his due and there remaineth of this persons good works so much as equalleth the weight of an ant," God will of his morey cause it to be doubled unto him, that he may be admitted into Paradise But if on the contrary his good works be exhausted, and there remain evil works only and there be any who have not vet received satisfaction from him, God will order that ar equal weight of their sine be added unto his, that he may be pureshed for them in their stead, and he will be sent to hell laden with both This will be the method of God's dealing with mankind

As to brutes after they shall have likewise taken vengeance of one another, as we have montioned showe, He will command them to be changed into dust, wicked men being reserved to more grievous punishment, so that they alself cry out on hearing this sentence pronounced on the brutes Would to God that we were duet also?

As to the genn many Muhammadans are of opinion that such of them as are true believers will undergo the same fate as the triational animals, and have no other reward than the favour of being converted into dust and for this they quote the authority of their Prophet. But this, however, is judged not so very reasonable, since the genn, being capable of putting themselves in the state of believer a as well as men, must consequently deserve as it seems, to be rewarded for their faith, as well as to be punished for their intidelity Wherefore some entertain a more favourable opinion, and assign the believing geim a place near the confines of Paradise, where they will enjoy sufficient feheity though they be not admitted into that delightful mansion But the unbelieving genu, it is universally agreed. will be punished eternally and be thrown into hell with the landels of mortal race. It may not be improped to observe that under the denomination of unbelieving genn the Muhammadans comprehend also the devil and his companions

The trials being over and the assembly dissolved, the Muhammadans hold that those who are to be admitted into Paradiso will take the right hand way, and those who are destined to hell-fire will take the left but both of them must first pass the bridge, called in Arabic as-Strat, which they say is leid over the midst of bell, and described to be finer than a barr and sharpor than the edge of a sword, so that it seems very difficult to concerve how anyone shall be able to stand upon it, for which reason most of the sect of the Mu'tamlitos reject it as a fable though the orthodox think it a sufficient proof of the truth of this article that it was seriously affirmed by him who never asserted a falsehood, meaning their Prophet, who, to add to the difficulty of the passage, has likewise declared that this bridge is beest on each aide with briars and hooked thorns, which wall, however, be no impediment to the good. for they shall pass with wonderful case and swiftness, like lightning, or the wind Muhammad and his Muslims leading the way whereas the wicked, what with the shipperiness and extreme narrowness of the path the entangling of the shorns, and the extinction of the light which directed the former to Paradise, will soon miss their footing, and fall down headlong into hell, which is gaping boneath them

" Usury " A term RIBA (41) m Mushm law defined as " an excess according to a legal standard of measurement or weight, in one or two homegeneous articles opposed to each other in a contract of exchange, and in which such excess is stipulated as an obligatory condition on one of the parties without any return "

The word riba appears to have the same meaning as the Hebrew Till neshec. which included gain, whether from the loan of money or goods, or property of any kind In the Mosais law, conditions of gain for the loan of money or goods were rigorously prohibited See Exed. xxii 25, Lev xxv 16 [DEUFY]

RIBĀT (L4,) A station or fort on the frontier of an enemy a country, erected for the accommodation of Muslim warriors (Hamilton's Hidayah, vol n p 357)

Arabic daulah (11,0), RICHES Qur'an lix 7, mal (المو), kasrotu'l-mal (الموز المال), "Great wealth." Muhammad is related to have said, "Whoever desires the world and its mobes in & lawful manner in order to withhold himself from begging, or te provide a livelihood for his family, or to be kind to his neighbours, will appear before God in the Last Day with his face as bright as a full moon. But whoever seeks the riches of the world for the sake of ostentation, will appear before God in bis anger. (Mushkāt, book xxii. ch xxii.)

In the Qur'an it is said —
Sürah xviii. 44 "Wealth (māl) and children are an adornment of this world, but enduring good works are better with thy Lord as a recompense, and better as a hope."

Surah vui. 28 "Know that your wealth and your children are but a temptation.

In the mird Surah, 12, 18, the possessions of this world are contrasted with those of the world to come in the following language "Seemly unto men is a life of lusts, of women, and children, and hoarded talents of gold and silver, and of horses well-bred, and cattle and tilth -that is the provision for the life of this world, but God, with Kim is the best resort Say, 'But shall we tell you of a better thing than this?' For those who fear are gardens with their Lord, beneath which rivers flow, they shall dwell therein for aye, and pure wives and grace from God . the Lord looks on His servants, who say, Lord, we believe, pardon Thou our sus and keep us from the torment of the fire '-upon the patient, the truthful, the devout, and those who ask for pardon at the dawn."

RIKAZ (زكار) Treasures buried in the earth, particularly those treasures which have been burned at some remote period

In the Hidayah, the word rikaz includes kanz, "treasure," or other property buried in the earth, and ma'din, "mines" Such treasures are subject to a zakāt of a fifth. (Hamilton's Hidayah, vol 1 p 39)

RINGS Arabic khahm (خاتم), pl. khawatem Silver eignet-rings are lawful, but a gold ring is not allowed (See Sakihu 'l-Bulkari, p 871)

Ibn 'Umar says, " The Prophet took a gold ring and put it on his right hand, but be afterwards threw it away, and took a alver ring, on which was engraved Muhammadus Rasülu 'lläh, s.e 'Muhammad the Messenger of God, and he said, 'Let none of you engrave on your ring like mine' And when he wore the ring he used to have the signet under his finger and close to the palm of his hand" 'Ali says the ring was on the little finger of the left hand, and that Muhammad forbade a ring being worn upon the fore or unddle finger

Anas says the Prophet's ring was of silver

Modern Mashms usually wear a silver ring on the little finger of the right hand, with a signet of cornelian or other stone, upon which is engraved the wearer's name, with the addition of the word 'abdu (عبد), "His servant," meaning the servant or wor-shipper of God. This aignet-ring is used for signing documents, letters, &c. A little ink is daubed upon it with one of the fingers, and it is pressed upon the paper—the person who uses the ring having first touched the paper with his tongue and moistened the place upon which the impression is to be made. There is no restriction in Muslim law regarding rings for women. They are law regarding rings for women generally of gold, and are worn on the fingers, in the ears, and in the nose

BIQQ (ئى). The servitude of a SLAVERY ] slave

RISĀLAH (رسالة) A postleship. The case of an apostle or prophet [PRO-PHETS ]

RISING UP Arabic quyam (قيام) It is a subject of discussion amongst students of the Traditions, as to whether or not it is incumbent on a Muslim to rise up when a visitor or stranger approaches

Abu Umamah says "The Prophet came out of his house leaning on a stick, and we stood up to meet him, and he said, Do not stand up like the Gentiles who give honour to others '

Anas says, "There was no one more be loved by the Companions than the Prophet, but when they saw him they used not to rise, for they knew he disliked it "

Abu Hurairsh says "The Prophet used to sit with us in the mosque and talk, and when he rose up, we also rose, and remained standing till we saw him enter his house"

The general practice amongst Muhammadans is according to the last tradition, but it is held to be very overbearing for a person to require others to rise for him Mu awiyah says that "the Prophet said, · He who is pleased at other people rising for him, does but prepare a place for himself in the fire of hell." (Mishkat, book KKII ch iv) [SALUTATION]

Arabic mansak, mansik (مسك), pl manäsik The rites and ceremonies attending religious worship in general. Qur'an, Surah xxii 35 "To every nation we appointed rites (mansal) to men tion the name of God over the brute beasts which he has provided for them

The term mansik is more frequently used for a place of sacrifice, while mansak applies to religious observances, but the plural manasik is common to both, and rendered by Professor Palmer and Mr Rodwell in their translations of the Qur'an, "rtes"

The principal rites of the Muslim religion are the Hajj, or Pilgrimage to Makkah, with the ceremonies at the Makkan Temple [HAJJ], the daily ritual of the liturgical prayers [PRAYER], the marriage and funeral ceremonies and, with the Shi'aha, the cere-monies of the Muharram The sacrifice on the great festival, although primarily part of the Makkan Pilgrimage ceremonies, is oelebrated in all parts of Islam on the Idu l-Azha, or Feast of Sacrifice. [IDU 'I-AZHA.] The ceremony of Zikr can hardly be said to be one of the rates of erthodox Islam, although it is common in all parts of the Muslim world, it belongs rather to the mystic side of the Muhammadan religion. [SUFI, ZIKE.]

Arabic nahr (١٤), pl RIVER. The word anhār, Heb 📆 nahar bahr, "sea," being also used for a large mer [SEA]

According to Muhammadan law rivers are of three descriptions:

1 Those which are not the property of any, and of which the waters have not been divided, like the Tigris and the Euphrates The care o' these rivers, being the duty of the State, and the charge of keeping them in order must be defrayed from the public treasury, but these expenses must be disbursed from the funds of tribute and capitation-tax, and not from those of tithe and alms

2 Rivers which are appropriated and divided, and yet at the same time public rivers on which boats sail The clearing on such rivers must be done at the expense of the proprietors, although its waters are used for the public benefit

3 Water-courses which are held in pro-porty and divided, and or which no noats call. The keeping of such streams rests entirely with the proprietors

In countries where much of the cultivation of land depends upon irrigation, the right to water, or as it is called in Arabic shirb is a subject of much hingation and chapters are devoted to the consideration of the subject n the Hidayah Fatawê-i Alamgiri, Duru'l Mukhtar, and other works on Muslim law

ROAD OF GOD Arabic sabilu 'llah (مالله) An expression used in the Qur'an and Traditions for any good act, but especially for engaging in a religious WAT [BABILL ILAH]

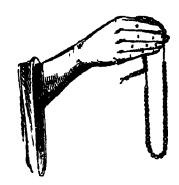

ROMAN GREEKS

ROSARY Arabic subhah (Lan) The rosary amongst Muhammadans consists of 100 heads, and is used by them for counting the ninety-nine attributes of God, together with the essential name Allāk [GOD], or the repetition of the Tashik ("O Holy God!"), the Tahmid ("Praised he God!"), and the Takhir ("God is Great!"), or for the recutal of any act of devotion. It is called in Persian and in Hindustani the Tasbik (تسبيع)

The introduction of the rosary into Christendom is ascribed by Pope Pius V, it. a Bull, AD 1596, to Dominic, the founder of the Black Friars (A b 1221), and it is related that Paul of Pherma, an Egyptian ascetic of the fourth century, being ordered to recite 800 prayers, collected as many pebbles which he kept in his bosom, and threw out one by one at every prayer, which shows that the rosary was probably not in use at that period

'Abdu l-Haqq, the commentator on the Mishkatu l'-Masabih, says that in the early days of Islam the Muhammadana counted God's praises on small pebbles, or on the ingers, from which the Wahhabis maintain that their Prophet did not use a resarv It seems probable that the Muslims borrowed the resary from the Buddheets, and that the Crusaders copied their Muslim opponents and introduced it into Christendoia

ROZAH (رورة) The Persian word for the Arabic saum or fasting [FASTING, RAMAZAN]

RUB' (2) A fourth A legal term used in Muhammadan law, eq "a fourth" or the wife's portion when her husband dies without issue

RUH (cy), pl arwah, Heb ruakh, spirit, soul, life" Ibnu 'i-Aşır, suther of the Nihayah says it is the nervous fluid or animal spirit. A vaporous substance, which is the principle of vitality and of sousation, and of voluntary motion

In the Kıtābu 't-Tairifāt, it is defined as a subtle body, the source of which is the hollow of the corporeal heart, and which diffuses itself into all the other parts of the body by means of the pulsing veins and arteries See also Gen 1x. 4 "Flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof" Many of the ancients believed the soul to reside in the blood. (See Virgil's Æn., ix. p 349) The breath which a man breather and which pervades the whole body Called in Persian jan ( ) The philosophers say it is the blood, by the exhausting of which life ceases The word is generally rendered in Hındüstani as of the feminine gender, but Arabic authors render it as often masculine as fernimne (See Lane's Arabic Dictionary, in loco)

In the Quran the word is sometimes used for Jesus, who is known as Ruhu 'Mah ("the Spirit of God"), for the angel Gabriel, and also for life, grace, soul, and the Spirit of Prophecy (A complete list of texts is given in the article armir)
According to the Kitābu 't-Tavīfāt, p 76, spirit is of three kinds

- (1) Ar-Ruhu'l-Inson: (الروح الانساني), "the human spirit," by which is understood the mind of man, which distinguishes him from the animal, and which is given to him, by the decree of God, from heaven, of the true es-It is this sence of which we know nothing spirit which is sometimes united to the body and sometimes separated from it, as in sleep or death.
- (2) Ar-Ruhn 'l-Harwani (الروح الحيواني) "the animal spirit," by which is understood the bie, the seat of which is in the heart, and which moves in the veins with the pulsations of the body
- (3) Ar Ruhu 'l-A'gam, (Mada) "the exalted spirit" that human spirit which is connected with the existence of God but the essence of which is unknown to all but the Almighty The spiritual faculty in man It is called also al-'Aqlu'i-Awwal, 'the first intelligence", al-Haqiqatu l-Muhammadiyah, "the essence of Muhammad", an-Nofeu l' Wähidah "the single essence" al Hamqatu 'l-Sammwiyah, "The original spirit of man first created by God"

The following terms are also found in Muslım works -

Ar-Ruhu 'n Nabatı (الروح المباتى), " the vegetable spirit."

Ar-Ruhu (الروح الطبعي), "the ammal spirit "

Ar-Rühu 'l Ilähi (الروح اللهي), " tho divine spirst."

Ar-Rahu 's-Suffi (الروح السفلي)," the lower spirit," which is said to belong merely to animal life.

Ar-Ruhu 'l 'Ulux (الروع العارى), " the lofty or heavenly spurit."

Ar-Rieu'l-Jari (الروع الجاري), " the travel-ling spirit," or that which leaves the body in sleep and gives rise to dreams Ar-Richu 'l-Mucham (محكم) الروع المحكم), "the resident spirit," which is said never to leave the body, even after death

Rube '-Ilqa' (all') (b), "the spirit of casting into" Used for Gabriel and the spirit of prophecy [spant]

AR-RÜHU 'L-AMIN (وموس) ويال)
"The faithful spirit," Occurs in the Qur'an, Sürah xxvi. 193 "Verily from the Lord of the Worlds hath this book come down, the faithful spirit hath come down with it upon thy heart, that thou mayest become a warner in the clear Arabic tongue." It is supposed to refer to the Angel Gabriel [SPIRIT ]

RUHU 'LLAH (all to) "The Spirit of God" According to Muhammad, it is the special Kalemah, or title of Jesus See the Our'an

Sūratu 'n-Nizā' (iv ), 169 "The Messiah, Jesus, the son of Mary, is only an Apostle of God, and His Word, which He conveyed into Mary and a spirit proceeding from Hunself " (Röhun mın-hu)

Suratu 'l-Ambyā' (xx1), 91 "Into whom (Mary) we breathed if our spirit"

Saratu 't Pahrim (lavi ), 12 "Into whose womb we breathed of our spirit"

It is also used in the Qur'an for Adam, Suratu 's-Saidab (xxxii), 8 Suratu 'l-Hijr (xv), 29 and Suiatu Sad (xxxviii), 72, where it is said that God breathed his spirit ınto Adam but Adam 18 never called Rübu <sup>2</sup>Uāk m any Muḥammadan book

RUHU 'L-QUDUS (روح القدس) "The Holy Spirit" (It "Spirit of Holiness")
The expression only occurs three times in the Surah 11 81 "We gave Jesus the Son of Many manifest signs and aided him with the Holy Spirit"

Surah u 254 'Of them is one to whom God apoke (as Moses), and we have raised some of them degrees, and we have given Jesus the son or Mary manifest signs, and strength enen him by the Holy Spirit"

Surah v 109 "When God said 'O Jesus, son of Mary ' remember my favours towards thee and towards thy mother, when I sided thee with the Holy Spirit, till thou didst speak to men in the cradle, and when grown up.

Al-Baizawi says the meaning of the expres seen Rühu 'l-Qudus is the Angel Gabriel, although some understand it to refer to the spirit of Jesus, and others to the Gospel of Jesus, whilst some think it is the Isma'l A'zam, or "the exalted name of God," whereby Jesus raised the dead. (See Taforu'l Borgawi, p 65) [SPIRIT HOLY SPIRIT]

RUINOUS BUILDINGS owner of a runous wall in any building is responsible for any accident occasioned by its fall, after having received due warning and requisition to pull it down, and a person building a crooked wall is responsible for the damage occasioned by its falling But the owner of a rumous house is not responsible for accidents occasioned by the fall of any article from it, unless such article belong to him. Burkhardt says "In the south-east corner of the Ka'bah, or as the Arabs call it, Rokn el Yamany, there is another stone about five feet from the ground, it is one foot and a half in length, and two inches in breadth, placed upright, and of the common Meccah stone. This the people walking round the Ka'bah touch only with the right hand, they do not kiss it" (Captain Burton says he had frequently seen it kissed by men and women.)

Burton remarks "The Rukn el Yamani is a corner facing the south The part alluded to (by Burkhardt) is the wall of the Kabah, between the Shami and Yemani anglos, distant about three feet from the latter, and near the atte of the old western door, long since closed The stone is darker and redder than the rest of the wall It is called El Mustajab (or Mustajab min el Zunub, or Mustajab el Dua, "where prayer is granted") Pilgrims here extend their arms, pross their bodies against the building, and heg pardon for their sins" (El Medinah and Mecca vol ii. p 160)

RULE OF FAITH The Muhammadan rule of faith is based upon what are called the four foundations of erthodoxy, namely, the Qur'ān, or, as it is called, Kalāmullah, 'the Word of God, the Hadīs (pl. Ahādīs), or the traditions of the sayings and practice of Muhammad, Ijmā', or the consent of the Mujtahidūn, or learned doctors, and Qiyās, or the analogical reasoning of the learned

In studying the Muhammadan religious system, it must be well understood that Islam is not simply the religion of the Qur'an, but that all Muhammadans, whether Sunni,

Shī'sh, or Wahhābi, receive the Traditions as an authority in matters of faith and practice. The Sunn: Muhammadans arrogate to themselves the title of traditionists, but the Shī'shs also receive the Hadīs as binding upon them, although they do do not acknowledge the same collection of traditions as those received by their opponents [QUR'AN, TRADITIONS, IJMA', QIYAS, RELIGION, ISLAM.]

RULERS The ideal administration of the Muslim world, as laid down in the Traditions, is that the whole of Islam shall be under the dominion of one Imam or leader, who is the Khalifah (Lahla), or vicegerent, of the Prophet on earth. The rulers of provinces under this Imam are called Amer (per 1) (pl. Umara). The Eastern titles of Sultan and Shah are not established in the Muhammadan religion. The world Mulik, Heb Melekh, occurs in the Qür'an for a "king," and is used for King Saul (Sürah ii 248). The word is still retained in Asia for the chiefs of villages.

In the Qui an (Surah iv 62), believers are enjoined to "obey the Apostle and those in authority," but the chief injunctions are found in the Traditions

In the Mishkatu'l-Marabih, book xvi ch i, the following sayings of Muhammad regarding rulers are recorded -

Whoever obeys me obeys God, and whoever disobeys me disobeys God. Whoever obeys the Amii obeys me An Imam is nothing but a shield to fight behind, by which calimities are avoided, and if he orders you to abstain from that which is unlawful, he will have great regard, but if he enjoins that which God has forbidden, he will bear the punishment of his own acts."

"If God appoints as your Amir e man who is a slave, with his ears and nose cut off, and who puts people to death according to God's book then you must listen and obey him in all things

"If a negro slave is appointed to rule over you, you must listen to him and obey him, even though his head be like a dried grape"

"It is indispensable for every Muslim to heten to and approve the orders of the Imam, whether he likes or dislikes, so long as he is not ordered to sin and act contrary to law When he is ordered to sin, he must neither attend to it nor obey it"

"There is no obedience due to simful commands, nor to any order but what is liwful"

"He who shall see a thing in his ruler which he dislikes, let him be patient, for verily there is not one who shall separate a body of Mushims the breadth of a span, and he dies, but he dies like the people of igno rance."

"The best Imams are those you love, and those who love you, and those who pray for compassion on you, and you on them, and the worst of Imams are those you hate, and those who hate you; and those whom you curse, and who curse you." Auf said "O Prophet of God! when they are our enemies and we theirs, may we not fight against them?" He said. "No, so long as they keep on foot the prayers amongst you." This he repeated "Beware, he who shall be constituted your ruler, see if he does anything in disobedience to God, and if he does, hold it in displeasure, but do not withdraw yourselves from his obedience

"There will be Amirs among you, some of whose actions you will find conformable to law, and some contrary thereto, then when anyone who shall say to their faces, These acts are contrary to law,' verily he shall be pure, and he whe has known their actions to be bad, and has not told them so to their faces, has certainly not remained free from responsibility, and he who has seen a bad act and obeyed it, is their companion in it " The Companions said, " May we not fight them?" The Prophet said, " No, so long as they perform prayers "

"He who is disobadient to the Imain will come before God on the Day of Resurrection without a proof of his faith, and he who dies without having obeyed the Imam, dies as the people of ignorance

"Prophets were the governors of the children of Israel, and when one died, another supplied his place, and verily there is no prophet after me, and the time is near when there will be after me a great many Khalifahs" The Companions said, "Then what do you order us?" The Prophet said, "Obey the Khalifah, and give him his due, for verily God will ask about the duty of the subject "

"When two Khalifahs have been set up, put the last of them to death, and preserve the other, because the second is a rebel "

"Whoever wishes to make divisions amongst my people, kill with a sword."

"He who acknowledges an Imam must obey him as far as in his power, and if another pretender comes, kill him

"Verily the time is near that you will be ambitious of ruling, and it is at hand that this love of rule will be a cause of sorrow at the Resurrection, although the possession of it appears pleasant, and its departure unpleasant."

"That is the best of men who dislikes

"Beware! you are all guardians of the subject, and you will all be asked about your obedience The Imam is the guardian of the subject, and he will be asked respecting this A man is as a shepherd to his own family, and will be asked how they behaved, and about his conduct to them, and a wife is a guardian to her husband's house and children and will be interrrogated about them, and a slave is a shepherd to his master's property, and will be asked about it, whether he took good care of it or not."

"There is no Amir who oppresses the subject and dies, but God forbids Paradise to him "

"Verily the very worst of Amirs are those who oppress the subject

"O God! he who shall be ruler over my people and shall threw them into misery, O God! cast him into misery, and he who shall be chief of my people and be kind to them, then be kind to him."

" Verily, just princes will be upon spleudid pulpits on the right hand of God, and both God's hands are right"

"God never sent any Prophet, nor ever made any Khalifah, but had two counsellors with him, one of them directing lawful deeds (that is, a good angel), and the other am (that is, the devil) He is guarded from am whom God has guarded " [KHALIFAH.]

The compiler of the Taju 'i-'Arus, says that according to five different readers of the Qur'an, it is givon suwa in that verse, but in

SABBATH The term used in the Qur'an for the Jowish Sabhath is Sabt (....), a corruption of the Hebrew אברו Shabbath. It occurs five times in the Quran

Surah n. 61 "Ye know, too, those of you who transgressed on the Sabbath, and to whom We (God) said, 'Become scouted apes'"

Smah iv 50 " Or curse you as We (God) cursed the Sabbath breakers Surah 1 153 "We (God) said to them (Israel), Break not the Sabbath ""

Surah vu 168 "And ask them (the Jews) about the city that stood by the sea when its inhabitants broke the Sabbath, when their fish came to them appearing openly on their Sabbath-day, but not to them on the day when they kept no Sabbath."

Sürah xvi 125 "The sabbath was only ordained for those who differed about it

In explanation of those verses, the com-mentator, al-Barrawi relates the following traditions Moses gave orders for the observance of the Day of Rest on Friday, but the Jews would not obey, and declared that they would observe Saturday, as it was on that day that God rested from creation so it same to pass that "the Sabbath was ordained for those who differed about it" But in the time of King David, certain people began to break the Sabbath by fishing in the Rod Sea near the town of Ailah (Elath), and as a punishment they were turned into aper.

Arabic Sabi' (مانيء), SABEANS pl. Sabi'an. Probably from the Hebrew NTY tsābā, "a host" Gen il. 1, : e "Those who worship the hosts of heaven." According to some Arabic writers, the Sabrun were a certain sect of unbelievers who worshipped the stars secretly, and openly professed to be Christians According to others, they are of the religion of Sabi', the son of Seth, the son of Adam whilst others say their religion resembled that of the Christians, except that their gibiak was towards the south, from whence the wind blows In the Qamus it is said they were of the religion of Noah. The word sābi also means one who has departed from one religion to another religion, and the Arabs used to call the Prophet as Sabi, because he departed from the religion of the Quraish to al-Islam (See Lane's Dict in loco ) Al-Baizāwī says some assert they were worshippers of angels, others that they were the worshippers of the stars

They are mentioned three times in the Qur'an, and from the following verses it would appear that Muhammad regarded them as believers in the true God.

Sürah ii 50 "They who believe and they who are Jews, and the Christians and the Sabsans—whoever believeth in God and the Last Day, and doeth that which is right, shall have their reward with their Lord"

Surah v 78 "They who believe, and the Jews and the Sabeuns, and the Christians—whoever of them believeth in God, and in the Last Day, and deeth what is right, on them shall no fear come, neither shall they be put to grief"

Sursh xxii 17 "They who believe, and the Jews, and the Sabeans, and the Christians, and the Magians, and those who join other gods with God, verily God shall decide between them on the Day of Resurrection"

SACRAMENTS, CHRISTIAN [BUCHARIST, BAPTISM]

SACRIFICE There are six words used in the Muhammadan religion to express the idea of sacrifice.

(1) gabh, Hebrew [7] zebach Like the Hebrew word (Gen xxx. 54) the Arabic is used generally for slaughtering animals, whether on the Great Festival of Sacrifice ['IDU 'L-AZHA], or at ordinary times, for food.

In the Chames, the word gabh is defined "to split or pierce, to cut the throat of any creature" In the Qur'an, the word is used for the slaughtering of the heiser by Meses (Sürah in 63), for the slaying of the sons of Israel by Pharach (Surah in 46), for sacrificing to idols (Sürah v 4), and for the intention of Abraham to sacrifice his son (Sürah xxxvii 101).

(2) Out qurban, Hebrew korban (Lev 11 14), Let "Approaching near" It occurs twice in the Qur'an, for the sacrifice to be devoured by fire from heaven, which the Jews demanded of Muhammid (Sürah iii 179), and for the offering of the sons of Adam (Sürah v 30). It is a word frequently employed in Islam to express the ordinary sacrifice, and the great festival is called in Persia the 'Id-1-Qurban, or "Feast of Sacrifice"

(3) "nair" Let "To injure the jugular vein" Used for stabbing the breast of a camel, as in sacrifice, hence the sacrifice itself. It occurs once in the Qur'an, Sürahovin 1, 2. 'Verily we have given thee al-kaugar, so pray to thy Lord and sacrifice, which al Balawi says means to sacrifice a camel the most costly victim of the Arabians. The 'Idu L-Azhā is called the Yaumu n-Nahr [1Dii' L AZHA]

(4) and uzhiyah A word which does not occur in the Quran, but in the Traditions it is the subject of a Chapter in Mecheutu l-Musabih (book in the xlix). According to the Quintie, it is derived from zuhu, zuhä, a word which expresses that time of the day when the sun has risen to a considerable height, about 10 Am (Salātu z-Zuhā, being a voluntary prayer at that hour) Uzhiyah is therefore the sacrifice offered about 10 o'clock on the day of the Great Festival.

(5) Hady, or, according to another reading, Hadi. Occurs four times in the Qur'an, Sürahs ii 193, v 2 96, 98, for offering of an animal for sacrifice sont to the temple at Makkah, when the pilgrim is not able to reach in time. The Qamus defines in as that "which is presented." Al-Baisawi (Tafsir, p 100) gives Hady as the plural form of Hadyah and Hadi as that of Hadiyah. The latter occurs in the Qur'an, Sürah xxvii $5, for an offering or gift, and seems to have the same meaning as the Hebrow muchah, which is used in the Old Testament for a gift or tribute (Gen iv 3), and also for the unbloody sacrince or "meat offering" (Lev ii. 1)

(6) white mansak Occurs in the Qur'an, Sürah xxii 35 'We have appointed to every nation a rite (mansak)" Sürah ii 122 "Show us our rites '(mansaik) also verse 196 Al-Baixawi (Tafsir, p. 91), to the first passage, says the word means a place of devotion, or a sacrifice which draws a man near to God, and mentions another reading, mansik, a place of worship, of which mansaik is likewise the plural. The word, as quoted above, as well as the plural form, is translated by the late Professor Palmer "rites" [BIYES.]

II. There are only two occasions upon which Muhammadans sacrifice, namely, on the Great Festival held on the 10th day of Zu l-

Hijah PEDU L-AZHA] and on the birth of a child [AQIOAH]

(1) The great sacrifice recognised by the Muslim faith is that on the Great Festival, called the 'Idu 'l-Azha, or " Feast of Sacrifice" This sacrifice is not only offered by the pilgrims at Makkah, but in all parts of Islam, upon the day of sacrifice. In the first place, this sacrifice is said to have been esta-blished in commemoration of Abraham having consented to sacrifice his son (most Muslims cay it was Ishmaei), as recorded in the Quran, when it is said God "ransomed his (Abraham's) son with a costly victim " (Sürah maxvii 107) but Shaikh 'Abdu'l Haqq in his commentary on the Mishkat also says that al-Uzhiyak "the sacrifice, is that which at the special time (ie on the festival) is slaughtered with the object of obtaining nearness to God

(2) The teaching of the Qur'an on the subject of sacrifice is conveyed in the following verses (Sürah xxii 37) -

"The bulky (camels) we made for yor one of the symbols of God (Shatater 'llaht), therein have ve good. So mention the name of God over them as they stand in a row (for sacilfice), and when they fall down (dead), eat of them and feed the easily contented and him who begs Thus have we subjected them to you haply ye may give thanks Their flesh will never reach to God, nor yet their blood, but the piety from you will reach Him "

Al Baizāwi on this verse says, "It, the flesh of the sacrifice, does not reach unto God, nor its blood, but the picty (inqua) that is the sincerity and intention of your heart"

(Tofsnu 'l-Batzāu:, vol u p 52)

(3) In the Traditions (Mishkat, book iv ch

Llix ) we have the following .

Anas says "The prophet sacrificed two rams, one was black, and the other was white, and he put his foot on their sides as he killed them, and cried out, 'Bi'-smt 'llahı Allahı akbar! In the name of God! God is most great!'"

'Ayıshah says "The Prophet ordered a ram with horns to be brought to him and one that should walk in blackness, sleep in blackness, and look in blackness" (by which he meant with black legs black breast and belly, and black eves), "and he said '() 'Ayushah, give me a knife and sharpen it!' And I did so Then the Prophet took hold of the ram and threw him on his side and slew it. And when he was killing it he said 'In the name of God ' O God accept this from Muhammad, and from his children and from his tribe!' Afterwards he gave to the people their morning meal from the elaughtered

Jabir says "The Prophet sacrificed two rams on the day of the Festival of Sarrifice which were black or white, and had horns, and were castrated, and when he turned their heads towards the Qiblah, he said, 'Verily I have turned my face to Him who brought the heavens and the earth into existence from nothing, according to the religion of Abraham, and I am not of the polytheista Verily my prayers, my worshippung my life, and my death, are for God, the Lord of the universe, who hath no partner, and I have been ordered to believe in one God and to abandon associating any other god with Him, and I am one of the Muslims O God! this sacrifice is of Thee, and for Thee, accept it then from Muhammad and his people!' And he added, 'In the name of God! the Great God!' and then killed them

'Ali said "The Prophet has ordered me to see that there be no blemsh in the animal to be sacrificed, and not to sacrifice one with the ears cut, either at the top or the bottom. or split lengthways, or with holes made in them The Prophet prohibited sacrificing a rain with broken horns, or sht cars

Avishah relates that the Prophet said Isn hath not done anything, on the day of sacrifice more pleasing to God than spilling blood, for verily the animal sacrificed will come on the Day of Resurrection, with its horns, its hair, its hoofs, and will make the scales of his actions heavy, and verily its blood reacheth the acceptance of God before it falleth upon the ground, therefore be

Zaid ibn Argam relates "The Companions said, 'O messenger of God! what are these sacrifices, and whence is their origin?' He said, 'These sacrifices are conformable to the laws of your father Abraham' They and 'O Prophet! what are our rewards therefrom?' He said, 'There is a reward annexed to every hair' The Companions then said, 'O Prophet' what are the rewards from the sacrifices of camels and sheep, that have wool. He said, 'There is a good reward also for every hair of their wool."

(4) The following is the teaching of the Hidayah regarding the nature and conditions of the sacrifice .

It is the duty of every free Muslim arrived at the age of maturity to offer a sacrifice, on the 'Idu 'l-Azhā, or " Festival of the Sacrifice," p ovided he be then possessed of a Nisab (se sufficient property), and be not a traveller This is the opinion of Abu Hanifah, Muhammad, Zufar, and Hasan, and likewise of Abū Yuauf, according to one tradition. According to another tradition, and also according to ash-Shan'i, sacrifice is not an indispensable duty, but only laudable At-Tahawi reports that, in the opinion of Abū Hanīfah, it is indispensable whilst the disciples hold it to be in a strong degree laudable The offering of a sacrifice is incumbent on a man on account of himself, and on account of his infant child. This is the opinion of Ahn Banifah in one tradition In another he has said that it is not incumbent on a man to offer a sacrifice fer his child In fact seconding to Abū Hanifah and Abu Yusuf, a father or guardian is to offer a sacrifice at the expense of the child (when he is possessed of property), eating what parts of it are estable, and selling the remaining parts that are valuable in their substance, such as the skin, &c Muhammad, Zufar, and ash-Shan'ī have said that a father is to sacrifice on account of his child at his own expense, and not at that of the child The sacrifice established for one person is a goat, and that for seven, a cow or a came! If a cow be sacrificed for any number of people fewer than seven, it is lawful, but it is otherwise if sacrificed on account of eight. If for a party of seven people the contribution of any one of them should be less than a seventh share, the sacrifice is not valid on the part of any one of them. If a camel that is jointly and in an equal degree the property of two men should be sacrificed by them on their own account, it is lawful, and in this case they must divide the fesh by weight, as fiesh is an article of weight If, on the contrary, they distribute it from conjectural estimation, it is not lawful, unless they add to each share of the fiesh part of the head, neck, and joints If a person purchase a cow, with an intent to sacrifice it on his own account, and he afterwards admit six others to join with him in the sacrifice, it is lawful. It is, however, most advisable that he associate with the others at the time of purchase, in order that the sacrifice may be valid in the opinion of all our doctors, as otherwise there is a difference of opinion. It is related from Abū. Hamifah that it is abominable to admit others to share in a sacrifice after purchasing the ammal, for, as the purchase was made with a view to devotion, the sale of it is therefore an abomination

The time of offering the sacrifice is on the morning of the day of the festival, but it is not lawful for the inhabitants of a city to begin the sacrifice until their Imam shall have finished the stated prayers for the day Villagers, however, may begin after break of day The place, in fact, must regulate the time Thus, where the place of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the contr time Thus, where the place of celebration is in the country, and the performers of it reside in the city, it is lawful to begin in the morning, but if otherwise it must be deferred until the stated prayers be ended. If the victim be slain after the prayers of the Mosque, and prior to those offered at the place of sacrifice [IDGAH), it is lawful, as is likewise the reverse of this Sacrifice is lawful during three days—that is, on the day of the festival, and on the two ensuing days. Ash-Shāfi'i is of opinion that it is lawful on the three ensuing days. The sacrifice of the day of the festival is far superior to any of the others. It is also lawful to sacrifice on the nights of those days, although it be considered as undesirable Moreover, the offering of secrifices on these days as more laudable than the custom of omitting them, and afterwards bestowing an adequate sum of money upon the poor. If a person neglect the performance of a sacrifice during the stated days, and have previously determined upon the offering of any particular goat, for instance, or, being poor, have purchased a goat for that purpose—in either of these cases it is menmbent on him to bestow it alive in charity But if he be rich, it is in that case incumbent on him to bestow m charity a sum adequate to the price, whether he have purchased a goat with an intent to sacrifice it or not It is not lawful to secrifice animals that are blemushed, such as those that are blind, or lame, or so lean as to have no marrow in their bones, or having a great part of their ears or tail out off however, as have a great part of their ears or tail remaining may lawfully be sacrificed. Concerning the determination of a great part of any member, there are, indeed, various opinions reported from Abu Hanifsh some animals he has determined it to be the third, in others more than the third, and in others again, only the fourth In the opinion of the two disciples, if more than the half should remain, the sacrifice is valid, and this opi non has been adopted by the learned Abū 'l-Lass If an animal have lost the third of its tail, or the third of its ears or eye-aight, it may be lawfully sacrificed, but if, in either of these cases, it should have lost more than a third, the offering of it is not lawful. The rule which our doctors have laid down to discover in what degree the eye sight is impaired is as follows The animal must first be deprived of its food for a day or two that it may be rendered hungry, and having then covered the eye that is impaired, food must be gradually brought towards it from a distance, until it indicate by some emotion that it has discovered it. Having marked the particular spot at which it observed the food, and uncovered the weak eye, the perfect eye must then be bound, and the same process carried on, until it indicate that it has observed it with the defective eye If, then, the particular distance from those parts to where the animal stood be measured, it may be known, from the proportion they bear to each other, in what degree the sight is im paired

It is not lawful to offer a sacrifice of any animal except a camel, a cow, or a goat, for it is not recorded that the Prophet, or any of his companions, ever sacrificed others. Buffaloes, however, are lawful as being of the species of a cow. Every animal of a mixed breed, moreover, is considered as of the same species with the mother.

If a Christian or any person whose object is the flesh, and not the sacrifice, be a sharer with six others, the sacrifice is not lawful on the part of any It is lawful for a person who offers a sacrifice either to eat the flesh or to bestow it on whomsoever he pleases, whether rich or poor, and he may also lay it up in store. It is most advisable that the third part of the flesh of a sacrifice be bestowed in charity. It is not lawful to give a part of the sacrifice in payment to the butcher It is abominable to take the wool of the victim and sell it before the eacrifice be performed, but not after the sacrifice In the same manner, it is shominable to milk the victuo and seil the milk. It is most advisable that the person who offers the sacrifice should himself perform it, provided he be well acquainted with the method, but if he should not be expert at it, it is then edvisable that he take the assistance of another, and be present at the operation is abominable to commit the slaving of the victim to a Kıtabī (a Jew or Christian) however, a person order a Kitābī to slay his victim, it is lawful. It is otherwise where a person orders a M. an, or worshipper of fire, to slay his victum, for this is inadmissible (Hamilton's Hadiyah, vol 1v 76)

(5) From the foregoing references to the Quran, the Traditions, 'Abdu 7-Haqq, al-Balgari, it will appear that whilst the Mu hammadan sacrifice is (1) Commemorative, having been instituted in commemoration of Abraham's willingness to offer his son; (2) Self Dedicatory, as expressed in the Tra ditional sayings of Muhammad and (3) Eucharistic, according to the verse in the Qur'an already quoted, "Haply ye may give thanks", that the expratory character of the sacrifice is not clearly established, for there is no offering for, or acknowledgment of, sin, connected with the institution. Muham madanism, true to its anti-Christian character. ignores the doctrine that "without shedding of blood there is no remission" (Lev xvii 11, Heb ax 22)

(6) At the birth of a child it is incumbent upon the Muslim father to sacrifice a goat (one for a girl and two for a boy) at the ceremony called 'Aquah, which is celebrated on either the seventh, fourteenth, twenty-first, twenty-nighth, or thirty fifth day after birth, when the hair is first shaved and its weight in silver given to the poor 'Abdu 'l-Haqq says 'Aqıqah comes from 'aqq, "to and refers to cutting the throat of the animal. Others refer it to cutting the hair The idea of the sacrifice on this occasion is dedicatory and eucharistic. Buraidah says "We used, in the time of ignorance, when children were born to us, to slay sheep and rub the child's head with the blood, but when Islam came we sattrificed a sheep on the seventh day, and shaved the child's head and rubbed saffron on it"

SAINTS In Muhammadan countries, reputed saints are very numerous. Very many religious leaders obtain a great reputation for sanctity even before their deaths, but after death it is usual for the followers of any well-known religious teacher to elect a shrine over his grave, to light it up on Thursdays, and thus establish a saintly reputation for their departed guida. Very diareputable persons are thus often reckoned to have died in the "edotr of sanetity." At Hasan Abdal in the Punjab (celebrated.

the story of Lale Rookh), there is a shrine erected over a departed cook, who for many years lived on his peculations as keeper of the staging bungalow When he died, about ten years ago, his family erected over his remains a shrine of some pretentions, which even in the present generation is an object of devout reverence, but which in the next, will be the scene of reputed miracles. This is but an example of many thousands of shrines and saintly reput tions easily gained

throughout Islām

It is generally asserted that according to the teachings of Islam, the Prophets (ambiga) were without sin, but there is a tradition, re lated by Anas, which distinctly asserts the contrary, and states that Muhammad not only admitted his own sintulness, but also the fall of Adam, the murder committed by Moses, and the three hes told by Abraham (See Mishkat, book xxiii ch xii) But it is very remarkable that, according to this Hadis, Muhammad does not charge Jesus Christ with having committed sin immaculate conception and the sinlessness of Christ are admitted doctrines of Islam [JESUS CHRIST]

The terms pu and uult are common titles for those who, by reputed miracles and an ascetic life, have established a reputation for sanctity, for whom in Person the title buzurg is generally used. The titles quib and ghaus are very high orders of sanctity, whilst zāhid and ābid are employed for persons who devote their lives to religious contemplation and worship

The Sufis use the word sattk, " pilgrim " or "traveller," for one who has renounced the world for the "path" of mysticism, whilst fager is a title of more general application to one who is poor in the sight of God Shaikh and mir, used for old men also express a degree of reputation in the religious world, sharkh (in India) being a title generally con ferred on a convert from Hinduism to Islam Sayıd, or "lord" is a title always given to the descendants of Muhammad, mir being sometimes used for the same Miyan, "master" or "friend," is generally used for the descendants of celebrated saints, or as a mare title of respect

SA'IR (عير) "A flaming fire"
The special place of torment appointed for the Sabeans (See al-Baghawi's Commentary on the Quran) It occurs sixteen times in the Qur'an (Surah 1v 11, and fifteen other places), where it does not seem to be applied to any special class

SAIYIBAH (فيمة) A legal term for a woman who departs from her husband, whether through divoice or the death of her husband, after the first connection

(سيد) SAIYID A term used for the descendants of Muhammad from his daughter Fatimah by 'Ali The word only occurs twice in the Qur'an-in Surah in 84, where it is used for John Baptist, and in Surah xii 25, where it stands for the husband of Zalikhah. According to the Majus 'l-Bihār, p 151 it means "lord, king, exalted, saint, merciful, meek, husband," &c.

There are two branches of Salyids-those descended from al-Hasan and those descended from al-Husain (both the sons of 'Ali )

These descendants of Muhammad prayed for at every period of the daily prayers [PRAYERS], and they are held in all Muhammadan countries in the highest respect, however poor or degraded their position may

The term Salyid is also given as a name to persons who are not descended from Muhammad, eg Saiyid Shah, Saiyid Amin, &c, although it is a mere assumption. In addition to the term Sayad, the term Badshah, Shah, Mir, and Sharif, are applied to those descended from Bibi Fatımah

The author of the Akhlaq-1-Jalali estimated in his day the descendants of Muhammad to be not less than 200,000

"The prostrations of forgetfulness" Two prostrations made on account of forgetfulness or mattention in prayer Muhammad said, "When any of you stand up for prayer, and the devil comes to you and casts doubt and perplexity into your mind, so that you do not know how many rak'ahs you have recited, then prostrate yourself twice

SAJDATU 'SH-SHUKR "A prostration of thanksgiving" When a Muslim has received some benefit or blessing, he is enjoined to make a prostration in the direction of Makkah, and say, "Holiness to God! and Praise be to God There is no deity but God! God is most Great!" (Radds 'l-Mustar, vol i p 816)

AKHRAH (5,21). "The The sacred rock at Jerusalem on he Temple was erected, and on which ands the Qubbatu 's-Sakhrah, the of the Rock" known to English as the Mosque of 'Umar This rock to have come from Paradise, and to foundation-stone of the world, to on the place of prayer of all prophets, ixt to the Karbah, the most sacred the universe Imam Jalalu d-din as-

Suyūṭī, in his history of the Temple of Jerusalem (Reynolds' edition, p 44), gives the following traditional account of the glorious Sakhrah

"We are informed by Ibn al-Mansür that "We are informed by Ibn al-Mansür that the Rock of the Baitu I-Muqaddas, in the days of Solomon, was of the height of twelve thousand cubits—each cubit at that time being the full oubit, viz. one modern cubit, one span and one hand-breadth. Upon it also was a chapel, formed of aloes (or sandal) wood, in height twelve miles (sic), also above this was a network of gold, between two eyelet-beads of pearl and ruby, netted by the women of Balka in the night, which net was to serve for three days, also the people of Emmans were under the shadow of the chapel when the sun rose and the people of

THE DOME OF THE ROCK. (Conder)

-Rahmah when it set, and even others valleys were under its shadow, also t was a jacinth (or ruby), which shone night like the light of the sun, but he light began to dawn its brilliancy scured, nor did all these cease until indnessar laid all waste, and seized or he found there, and carried it into ain, by a tradition we learn that the h of Baitu 7-Muqaddas was raised ito the sky, to the height of twelve miles, and the space between it and heaven was no more than twelve miles. All this remained in the same state until Greece (or Rome) obtained the mastery over it, subsequent to its devastation by Nebuchadnezzar But when the Greeks obtained possession of it, they said, "Let us build thereupon a building far excelling that which was there before". Therefore they built upon it a building as broad at the base as it was high in the sky, and gilded it with geld, and silvered it with silver. Then, entering therein, they began to practise their associating Paganism, upon which it turned uprudedown over them, so that not one of them came out

"Therefore, when the Greenan (kild) saw this, he summoned the Patriarch and his ministers (descons), and the chiefs of Greece, and said, 'What think ve?' who replied, We are of opinion that con idol-gods are not well pleased, and therefore will not receive us favourably Hereupon he com manded a second temple to be built, which they did, spending a great sum thereon, and having finished the second building, seventy thousand entered it as they had entered the But it happened to them is it had happened to the first, when they began their Pagamam it turned over upon them Now Therefore, their king was not with them when he saw this, he assembled them a third time, and said unto them, 'What think ye?' who said, 'We think that our Lord is not well pleased with us, because we have not offered unto him abundantly, therefore he has destroyed what we have done, thosefore we should greatly wish to build a third' They then built a third, until they thought they had carried it to the greatest possible height, which having done, he assembled the Christians, and said unto them, 'Do ye observe any defect?' who said, 'None, except that we must surround it with crosses of gold and silver' Then all the people entered it, to read and cite (sacred things) Having bathed and perfumed themselves, and having entered it, they began to practice their associating Paganism, as the others had done before them, whereupon down fell the third building upon them. Hereupon the king again summoned them together, and asked their counsel about what he should do But their dread was very great and whilst they were deliberating there came up to them a very old man, in a white 1000 and a black turban, his back was bent double and he was leaning upon a staff bo he said, O Christian people, listen to me' listen to me! for 1 am the oldest of any of you in years, and have now come forth from also ig the retired votaries of religion, in order to inform you that, with respect to this place all its possessors are accursed, and all holiness hath departed from it, and hath been transferred to this (other) place I will therefore point out this as the place wherein to build the Church of the Resurrection 1 will show you the spot, but you will never see me after this day, for ever Do, there fore, with a good will that which I shall tell you. Thus he cheated them, and augmented their accursed state, and commanded them to cut up the rock, and to build with its stones upon the place which he commended them

"So whilst he was talking with them he became concealed, and they saw him no more Therenpon they increased in their infidelity, and said, 'This is the Great Word Then they demolished the Mosques, and carried away the columns and the stones, and all the rest, and built therewith the Church of the Resurrection, and the church which is in the valley of Hinnon Moreover, tills cursed old man commanded them, When we have finished their building upon this place, then take that place whose owners are accursed, and whence all holiness hath departed, to be a common sewer to receive your dung' By this they gratified their Lord Also they did this, as follows At certain seasons, all the filth and excrement was sent in vessels from Constantinople, and was at a certain time all thrown upon the Rock, until God awoke our Prophet Muhammad (the peace and blossing of God be with him!), and brought him by night thereunto, which he did on account of its peculiar consecration, and on account of the greatness of its super excellence We learn, also, that God, on the Day of Judgment, will change the Sakhrah into white coral, enlarging it to extend over heaven and earth. Then shall men go from that Rock to heaven or hell according to that great word, 'There shall be a time when this earth shall change into another earth, and the heaven shall turn white, the soil shall be of silver, no pol-lution shall over dwell thereon' Now from 'A ish (may the satisfying favour of God rest upon him'), I said, 'O apostle of God, on that day when this earth shall become anoth, rearth, and this sky shall change, where shall men be on that day?' He replied, Upon the bridge as-birat' Again, a certain divine says, that in the Law, God says to the Rock of the Holy Abode, "Thou art my seat, thou art near to me, from thy foundstion have I raised up the heavens, and from beneath thee have I stretched forth the earth, and all the distant inaccessible mountuns are beneath thee Who dies within thee is as if he died within the world of heaven, and who dies around thee is as if he died within thee Days and nights shall not cease to succeed, until I send down upon thee a Light of Heaven, which shall obliterate all the (traces) of the infidels of the sons of Adam, and all their footsteps Also I will send upon thee the hierarchy of angels and prophets, and I will wash thee until I leave thee like milk, and I will fix upon thee a wall twelve miles above the thick-gathering clouds of earth, and also a hedge of light By my hand will I maure to thee thy support and thy virtue, upon thee will I cause to descend my spirits and my angels, to worship within thec, nor shall any one of the sons of Adam enter within thee until the Day of Judgment and whoseever shall look upon this chapel from afar shall say, 'Blessed' be the face of him who devoutly worships and adores in thee!' Upon thee will I place walls of light and a hedge of thick clouds—five walls of ruby and pearl" Also from the Book of Psalms, 'Great and glorious art thou, thou throshing-floor! Unto thee shall be the general assemblage from thee shall all men rise from death' Moreover, from the same author, God says to the Rock of the Holy Abode, 'Who loveth thee, him will

I love, who loveth thee, loveth me, who hateth thee, him will I hate. From year to year my eyes are upon thee, nor will I forget thee until I forget my eyes. Whose prayeth within thee two rak'shs, him will I cause to cast off all his sins, and to be as guiltless as I brought him from his mother's womb, unless he return to his sine, beginning them afresh' This is also a tradition of old standing 'I solemnly engage and promise to everyone who dwelle therein, that all the days of his his the bread of corn and olive-oil never shall fail him, nor shall the days and the nights fail to bring that time when, out of the supremacy of my bounty, I will cause to descend upon thee the assemblage of man for judgment—the whole company of risen mor-There is a tradition that 'Mugatil Ibn Sulaiman came to this Temple to pray, and sat by the gate looking towards the Rock, and we had assembled there in great numbers, he was reading and we were listening came forward 'Ali Ibn al-Badawi, stamping terribly with his slippers upon the pavement This greatly afflicted him, and he said to those around him, " Make an opening for me" Then the people opened on each side, and he made a threatening motion with his hand to warn him and prevent this stamping, saying, "Tread more gently! That place at which Muqatil is "-pointing with his hand-" and on which thou art stamping, is the very place redolent of Heaven's breezes, and there is not a spot all around it-not a apot within its precincts a hand's-breadth square-wherein some commissioned prophet, some near angel, hath not prayed " Now from the mother of 'Abdu liah, daughter of Khälid, from her mother, 'the moment is surely fixed, when the Ka bah shall be led as a bride to the Sakhrah, and shall hang upon her all her pilgrimage merits, and become her turban' Also it is said that the Sakhrah is the middle of the Mosque, it is cut off from every touching substance on all sides. No one supports it but He who supports and holds up the sky, so that nothing fails thence but by His good permission, also upon the upper part of the west side stood the Prophet (the blessing and peace of God be with him') on the night when he rode al-Buraq This side began to shake about, from veneration of him, and upon the other side are the marks of the angels' fingers, who held it up when it shook, beneath it is a deep hole cut out on each side, over which is the gate opened to men for prayer and devotion 'I resolved,' says a certain author, 'one day to enter it in great fear lest it should fall upon me, on account of the sins I had contracted, then, however, I looked, and saw its darkness, and some holy pilgrims entering it at the darkest part, who came forth therefrom quite free from sin. Then I began to reflect upon entering Then I said, "Perhaps they entered very slowly and lessurely, and I was too much in a hurry, a little delay may facilitate the matter." So I made up my mind to enter, and entering, I saw the Wonder of Wonders, the Rock supported m its position or course on every side, for I saw it separated from the earth, so that no point of the earth touched it Some of the sides were separated by a wider interval than others, also, the mark of the glorious Foot is at present in a stone divided from the Rock, right over against it, on the other side, west of the Qibish, it is upon a pillar Also the Rock is now almost abutting upon the side of the crypt, only divided from it by that space which allows room for the gate of the crypt, on the side of the Qiblah This gate, also, is disjointed from the base of the Qiblah, it is between the two Below the gate of the crypt is a stone staircase, whereby one may descend into the crypt In the midst of this crypt is a dark-brown leather carpet, upon which pilgrims stand when they visit the foundation of the Rock, it is upon the eastern side. There are also columns of marble abutting on the lower side upon the path of the rows of trees upon the side of the Qiblah, and on the other side forming buttresses to the extremity of the Rock, these are to hinder it from shaking on the side of the Qiblah There are buildings besides these. There is a building in the Chapel of the Rock Beneath the chapel, the spot marked by the angels fingers is in the Rock, on the western side, divided from the print of the glorious Foot above mentioned, very near to it, over against the western gate, at the end." (Hist Jerusalem, from the Arabic MS. of Jalalu 'ddīn as-Suyūtī, Reynolds' ed. 1685)

Dr Robinson (Biblical Researches, vol. i. p. 297) says the followers of Muhammad under 'Umar took possession of the Holy City a D 636, and the Khalifah determined to erect a mosque upon the site of the Jewis given by Muslim historians, will be found in the article on JERUSALEM. The historians of the crusades all speak of this great bakhrah as the Templum Domini, and describe its form and the rock within it (Will. Tyr., 8.2, b. 12, 7. Jac de Vitrac, c. 62.)

Lieut E. R. Conder, R.E., remarks that the Dome of the Rock belongs to that obscure period of daracenic art, when the Arabs had not yet created an architectural style of their own, and when they were in the habit of employing Byzantine architects to build their mosques The Dome of the Rock, Lieut. Conder says is not a mosque, as it is sometimes wrongly called, but a "station" in the outer court of the Masjidu "l-Aqsā.

We are indebted to this writer for the following account of the gradual growth of the present building (Tent Work in Palestine, vol 11 p 320) —

"In a D 831 the Caliph El Mamun restored the Dome of the Rock, and, if I am correct, enclosed it with an outer wall, and gave it its present appearance. The beams in the roof of the arcade bear, as above-stated, the date 91S A.D., a well-carved wooden cormos, hidden by the present ceiling, must than have been visible beneath them

"In 1016 AD the building was partly destroyed by earthquake To this date belong restorations of the original mesairs in the dome, as evidenced by inscriptions. The present wood-work of the cupola was erected by Husein, son of the Sultan Hakem, as shown by an inscription dated 1022 A D

"The place next fell into the hands of the Orusaders, who christened it Templum Domini, and established in 1112 a D a chapter of Canons

"The Holy Rock was then cut into its present shape and covered with marble slabs, an altar being erected on it The works were carried on from 1115 AD to 1186 AD beautiful iron grille between the pillars of the dome and various fragments of carved work are of this date, including small alters with sculptured capitals, having heads upon them _abominations to the Moslem, yet still preserved within the precincts The interior of the outer wall was decorated in the twelfth century with frescoes, traces of which still remain. The exterior of the sam: wall is surmounted by a parapet, with dwarf pillars and arches, which is first mentioned by John of Wurtzburg, but must be as old as the round arches of the windows below. The Crusaders would seem to have filled up the parapet arches, and to have ornamented ine whole with glass mosaic, as at Bethle-1em

'In 1187 a D Saladin won the city, tore up the sitar, and once more exposed the bare rock, covered up the frescess with marble slabs, and restored and regulded the dome, as evidenced by an inscription in it dating 1189 a.d.

"In 1318 AD the lead outside and the gilding within were restored by Nakr ed Din, as evidenced by an inscription

"In 1520 AD the Sultan Soliman cased the bases and upper blocks of the columns with maible. The wooden cornice attached to the beam between the pillars, seems to be of this period, and the slightly-pointed marble casing of the arches under the dome is probably of the same date. The windows bear inscriptions of 1528 AD. The whole exterior was at this time covered with Kishan tiles, attached by copper hooks, as evidenced by inscriptions dated 1561 AD. The doors were restored in 1564 AD, as also shown by in scriptions.

"The date of the beautiful wooden ceiling of the cloisters is not known but it partly covers the Cufic inscription, and this dates 72 A.H. (688 A.D.), and it hides the wooden cornice, dating probably 913 A.D. The ceiling is therefore probably of the time of Soli man

"In 1830 AD the Sultan Mahmud, and in 1478-75 AD the late Abdu I Aziz, repaired the Donie, and the latter period was one specially valuable for those who wished to study the history of the place.

"Such is a plain statement of the gradual growth of the building. The dates of the various inscriptions on the walls fully agree with the circumstantial accounts of the Arab writers who describe the Dome of the Rock ' [JERUSALEM]

(سکینة) SAKINAH which occurs in the Qur'an five time For that which was in the Ark of the Co Surah ii 249 "The sign of his kingdom is that there shall come to 3 Ark (Tābūt) with the sakinah in it froi Lord, and the relics that the family of and the family of Aaron left, and the bear it" With reference to this vei Bazzāwî, the great Muslim comme says "The ark here mentioned is t containing the Books of Moses Taurat, namely, the Torah, or Law), whi made of box wood and galded over wit and was three cubits long and two wid in it was ' the sakinah from your Lord meaning of which is, that with the Ar was tranquility and peace, namel Taurat (Books of Moses), because Moses went forth to war he always to Ark with him which gave repose hearts of the children of Israel Bu say that within that Ark there was a made either of emerald or sapphire, w head and tail of a cat, and with two and that this creature made a noise the Ark was carried forth to war But sav that the Ark contained images prophets, from Adam to Moses assert that the meaning of sakinah is ledge and sincerity' Others, that th contained the tables of the Law, the Moses and Asrons turban." The word occurs in three other place similar sense —

Sürah ix 26 "God sent down His Supon His Apostle and upon the bel and sent down arm es which ye could n and punished those who did not believe

Surah ix 40 "God sent down His S upon him, and aided him with hosts."

Surah xivin. 2 "It is He who sent the sakmah into the hearts of believer they might have faith added to faith"

(ملاة السفر) SALATU 'S SAFAR A shortened recital of Prayers of travel prayer allowed to travellers. It is founded on a tradition by Ya'la ibn Umaivah who says, "I said to Uniar, 'God hath said; "When ye go to war in the land it shall be no sin for you to shorten your prayers if ye fear that the infidels may attack you", but now verily we are safe in this journey, and yet we shorten our prayers. Umar replied, 'I also wendered at the thing that astonished you but the Prophet said, God halh done you a kindness in curtailing your prayers, therefore accept it, Ibn Umar says, 'I travalled with the Prophet, and he did not say more than two rak aha of prayer, and Abu Bakrand 'Umar and 'Usman did the same' Ibn 'Abban says, 'The Prophet used to say on a journey the noon and alternoon prayer together, and the sunset and evening prayer together," (Mishkat, book iv ch zlii)

The established prayers for a traveller are, therefore two rak'ahs instead of the four farz rak'ahs at the noon and afternoon and evening prayers, and the usual two farz at the morning and the usual three farz at the sunset prayers all veluntary prayers being omitted (Raddu l-Muhtar, vol 1. p 821)

ŞALĀTU "T T'ARĀWÎḤ (هاسون اللهامين) " Prayer of res" So called because of the pause or rest made for ejari

lations between every lour rak ahs (!Abas P Hagg)

Twenty rakish prayers recited after the night prayer during the month of Ramazan. They are often followed with recitations known as rikes [ZIKR], and form an exciting service of devotion. The Imam recites the Tardwik prayers with a loud voice.

Abu Hursirah says "The Prophet used to encourage people to say hight prayers in Remazan without ordering them positively, and would nave He who stands up in prayer at night for the purpose of obtaining reward, will have all his sins pardoned; then the Prophet died leaving the prayers of Ramasan in this way." It is said "Umar instituted the present custom of recting the twenty rak'shs, (Mishkat, book iv ch xxxviii) [RAMAZAN]

SALATU T-TASBIH (Prayer of praise A form of prayer founded on the following tradition related by Ibn Abbas who says

" Verily the Prophel said to my father, "O Abbas! O my uncle! shall I not give to you shall I not present unto you, shall I not inform you of a thing which covers acts of sin? When you perform it God will forgive your sins your former sins, and your latter sins, and those sins which you did unknewingly, and those which you did knowingly, your great sins, and your amail sins, your disclosed sins and your consealed sins? It is this namely, that you recite four rakiahs of prayer, and in each rak ah recite the Failham & Kilab (1 & the Introductory chapter of the Quran; and some other Shrah of the Quran; and when you have recuted the Quran; and when you have recuent these portions of the Quran in the position of Quain then say, "Holiness to God!" (Subhana 'libhi), and Presse be to God!" (Wa'l Hamdu it Uahi), and "There is no delty but God!" (Wa la Ilaha illa huwa, and "God is most great!" (Wa'llahu Akbarj, fifteen times. Then perform a ruku und recite times. ten times; then raise up your head and say it ten times then make the sajdah and say it ten times then raise your head and say it ten t men then make another saidah and say it ten times, then raise your head again and say if ten times altogether seventy-five times in overy rak'ah, and do this in each of the rakish. If you rie able to say this form of prayer every day, then do so, but if not, do it once every Friday and if not each week then say it once s mouth, and if not once a month then say it once a year, and if not once year, then do it once in your commune." Mishkai, book iv ch xh)

SALUTATIONS Arabie as-ealum (السلم), " peace ' Taelin (السلم), Heb Addom, the act of giving the prayer שׁלוֹב of peace, pl taskmät The duty of giving and returning a salutation is founded our express injunctions in the Quran

Shrah zziv. 61 "When ye cuter houses

then greet each other with a salutation from God the Blessed and the Good" Surah iv 88 "When ye are saluted with a salutation, salute we with a better han it, or return the same salutation."

'Ali says that Muhammud established it as an incumbent duty that one Muslim should salute another [FITRAH.] The ordinary salutation of the Muslim is "as Salāmu 'alaskum," is "The perie dron you" And, the "Isaal isply mire Wolfalat kum as salamor And on you also be the pessi — The supposes origin of the salutation es given ma tradition by Abu, Hurarieb ar relates that the Proubet and relates that the Prophet said God crestet Adam in his owen kenese, and his stad re was sixty oubits and God said to Adam, Godand salute that party suggest who are itting down, and listen to their sos wer for venly it shall be the salucieou and reply for you and your children! Adam then went and said to the angels as Salami alai-kum,' 1 c, 'The peace be on you," and the shgels replied, 'as-Summu uldika w rahmatu llahi, 'ie 'The peace be on thee and the morey of God."

This form is now usually given in reply devont persons (Sahihu T Bukhar by devont persons

regarding he use of the salutation -

"The person raing must salute one on foot and he who is walking must salute those who are sitting, and the small must salute the larger and the person of higher degree the lower It is therefore a religious luty for the person of high degree, when meeting one of a lower degree, the giving of the Salam being regarded as a benediction. For," says Mahammad, "the nearest people to God are shore who salute first. When a party is passing it is sufferent if one of them give the Salutation and in like manner, it is sufficient one of the party return it of those sitting

The Prophet Uramah ibn 7sid says once pusson a runed assumbly of Muslim polytheists, idelators, and Jews, and, he gave the salutation, but he meant it only for the

Mushma'

Jarir colates that on one occasion the Prophot met a party of women, and gave them the salutation. But this is contrary to the usual practice of Muhammadana, and 'Abdu i-Haqq in his commentary on this tradition, says: This practice was peculiar to the Prophet for the laws of Islam forbid a man blo at oda seeinn namow a gathring

In the Bast it is usual to raise the right hand (the raising of the left hand being disrespectful, as it is the hand used for legal ablations) when giving the Salam, but this oustom, common though it be is not in accordance with the traditions. For Amr'ibn Sharab relates from his fore-fathers, that the Prophet said, "He must of us who hisness himself to another. Do not copy the Jews or the Christians in your salutation. For a Jew's salutation is by raising his fingers, and the Christians salute with the palm of the mand. (Mishkat book xxii ch.)

In Central Asia, the salutation is generally given without any inchest or the bedy, in escordance with the above tradition

It is not clear how far Muhammad encouraged the belief in this supernatural sign of his prophelic mission, but from his reply to Abu Rames, it would not appear that he really attributed any special power to its existence [Milhamman]

SECTS OF ISLAM Arabic litgah (نرده), pl firag Muhammad is re lated to have prophesied that his followers would be divided into numerous religious

Abdu 'linh ibn Umar relates thei the Propeople even as it did to the Children of Israel. The Children of Israel were divided into seventy-two sects, and my people will be divided into seventy-three. Every one of these sects will go to Hell except one sect. The Companions said, "O Prophet, which is that?" He said, "The religion which is professed by me and my Companions." (Mushket, book i. ch. vi. pt. 2.)

The number has however, tar exceeded the Prophet's predictions, for the seels Islam even exceed in number and variety

those of the Christian rangion

The Sunnis arrogate to themselves the lille of the Nanyah, or those who are "being saved" (as, indeed do the other sects), but within the limits of the Sunni section of Mirhummadans there are four which are estoemed "orthodox," their differences consisting chiefty in minor differences of ritual, and in varied interpretations of Muslim law. These varied interpretations of Muslim law four orthodox sects or schools of interpretation amongst the Sunnis, are the Hanafiyah the Shaftivah the Malakiya', and the Ham baliyah

1 The Hanatiyaha are sound in Tarkey, Central Asia, and North India The founder of this sert was the Imam Aba Hanifah, who was born at wi-Küfah, the capital of al-Traq, AD. 702, or AH 80 at which time four of the Prophets companions were still alive. He is the great oracle of jurisprudence, and (with his two pupils the Imams Abu Yusuf and Munammad) was the founder of the Hanafiyah Code of Law

2 The Shafftiyahs are found in South India and Egypt The founder of this school of interpretation was imam Muhammad ibn ldrīs as Shāsi'i', who was hom at Asqalon, in Palestine a D 767 (A H 150)

3 The Malakiyahs prevail in Morocco Barbary and other parts of Africa, and were founded by Imam Malik who was born at al-Madinah At 714 (AH 95) He onjoyed the personal acquaintance of Abu Hanifah and he was considered the most learned man of his fime

4. The Hambaliyahs were founded to Imani Abu Abdi Ilah Ahmad ibn Muham med the Hambel who was born at Baghdad AD 780 (AH 164), He attended the lentures delivered by ash Shaff's, by whem he was instructed in the Traditions Hr. followers are found in Mastern Arabia and in some parts of Africa, but it is the leas, popular of the tour schools of interpretation. They have no Mufri at Makkah whilst the other three sects are represented there. The Wal-

hahls rose from this sect [WAHRAM ]
From the disciples of these your great Imams have proceeded an immensy number of commentaries and other works, all differing on a yarrely of points in their constructions although coinciding in their general prin ciplea

The Chinasu'l-Lughat gives the following participals of the seventy three sects spoken of in the Traditions, arranging them in six divisions of twelve sects each, and concluding

The author of the Sharku'l-Muwaqsf says there are eight leading divisions of the sects of Islam —

1 The Mutazilah.

The Shiahs

8 The Khawarij

4 The Murjîvah 5 The Najjārīyah

6 The Jabariyah

7 The Mushabbihiyah

The Najiyah

For an account of these leading sects, the reader is referred to the articles under their respective titles

Shaikh 'Abdu 'l-Qādir says there are not less than 150 sects in Islām

SERMON The oration delivered at the Friday midday prayer is called the Lhutbah (Lhut), exhortations at any other time are termed wa'z (ke<sub>2</sub>). The former is an established custom in Islâm, and the discourse is always delivered at the Massidu'l-Jām'i, or principal mosque, on Fridays, but sermons on other occasions although they are in accordance with the practice of Muhammad, are not common. Very few Maulawis preach except on Fridays. [KHUTBAH]

SERPENT, Arabic haryah (4,2), occurs in the Qur'an once for the serpent made from Moses' rod (Surah ii 21). The word used in another place (Surah vii. 104) is su'bān (Ulas). The Hebrew 1217. The Hebrew 1217. It does not occur in the Qur'an

In the Qur'an, Sūrah in 84, it is said Satan made Adam and Eve to backslide and "drove them out from what they were in," but no mention is made of the serpent

The commentators say that when the devil attempted to get into Eden to tempt Adam, he was stopped by the angelic guard at the gates of Paradise whereupon he begged of the animals to carry him in to speak to Adam and his wife, but they all refused except the serpent, who took him between his teeth and so introduced him to our first parents (Tafsiru 'l-'Azīzi, p. 124)

SETH Arabic Shis (4.4), Heb

NY Sheth The third son of Adam A prophet to whom it is said God revealed fifty small portions of scripture [PROPHETS]

In the fourth century there existed in Egypt
a sect of gnostics, calling themselves Sethians, who regarded Seth as a divine emanation (Neauder's Ch Hist, vol u p 115), which will account for Muhammad classing him as an inspired prophet with a revelation.

SEVEN DIALECTS Arabic Sab'atu Ahruf (مبعة أحزب) The Prophet is related to have said that the Qur'an was revealed in seven dialects (Mish ket, book u ch 11) The word ahruf, translated "dialects," may admit of two interpretations Some understand it to mean that the Qur'an contains seven kinds of revelation. Commandment (amr), prohibition (nahy), history (nasah), parable (maāl), exhortation (wa'ā), promises (wa'dah), and threatening (wa'id) But the more common interpretation of alruf is "dialacts," by which is understood that by changing the inflec-tions and accentuations of words, the text of the Qur'an may be read in the then existing "seven dialects" of Arabia, namely, Quraish, Tany, Hawkin, Yaman, Saqif, Huzail, Tamim [QUR'AN ]

SEVEN SALĀMS Seven verses of the Qur'an, in which the word salam (سلام),

" peace," occurs -Surah xxx 1 58 " Peace shall be the word spoken unto the righteous by a merciful God " Sürah xxxvii. 77 " Peace be on Noah and on all creatures"

Sürah xxxvii 109 "Peace be on Abraham "

Sürah xxxvii 120 "Peace be on Moses and Aaron "

Sürah xxxvn. 180 "Peque be on Elias" Surah xxxvii, 181 "Peace be on His apostles"

Surah xevu 5 "It is peace until the breaking of the morn "

These verses are recited by the religious Muslim during sickness, or in seasons of danger or distress In some parts of Islam it is customary to write these seven verses of the Qur'an on paper and then to wash off the ink and drink it as a charm against evil

SHABAN (المعمل) Lit "The month of separation." The eighth month of the Muhammadan year So-called because the Arabs used to separate themselves in search of water during this month

SHAB-I-BARĀT (هب برات) Persian title for the fifteenth day of the month Shaban, which is called in Arabic Laulatu 'n-nuef min Sha'ban, or "the night of the middle of Sha'ban "

On this night, Muhammad said, God registers annually all the actions of mankind which they are to perform during the year, and that all the children of men, who are to be born and to die in the year, are recorded Muhammad, it is said, enjoined his followers to keep awake the whole mght, to repeat one hundred rak'ah prayers, and to fast the next day; but there are generally great rejoicings instead of a fast, and large sums of money are spent in fireworks. It is the "Guy Fawkes Day" of India, being the night for display of fireworks

The Shab-s-Barat is said to be referred to in the xxxvth Surah of the Qur'an, verse 2, as "the night on which all things are dis-posed in wisdom," although the commenta-tors are not agreed as to whether the verse alludes to this night or the Shab-s-Qadr, on the 27th of the month of Ramazan

The Shab-s-Barat is frequently confounded with the Latlatu 'l-Qadr or, as it is called in India, the Shab-i-Qadr

SHAB-I-QADR (ملب تلدر). LAI-LATU L-QADE ]

(هادي). Persian SHADI (اهادي). Persian Lit weddings amongst Persian and Urdu-speaking peoples In Arabic the term is 'ure' (()). MARRIAGE.

SHADĪDU 'L-QUWĀ (مديد العوى). Commentators are unanimous in assigning this title to the angel Gabriel.

SHAFĀ'AH (ảolas). INTERCES-SION ]

ASH-SHĀFI'I (الشانعي) Imām Muhammad ibn Idris ash-Shāfi, the founder Imam of one of the four orthodox sects of Sunnis, was born at Askalon in Palestine AH. 150 He was of the same tribe as the Prophet, and is distinguished by the appellation of al-Imamu 1-Muttalibi, or Quraish Muttalibi, because of his descent from the Prophet's grandfather, 'Abdu 'l-Muttalib He derived his patronymic ash-Shāfi'i from his grand-father, Shāfi'i Ibn as-Sā'ib. His family were at first among the most inveterate of Muhammad's enemies His father, carrying the standard of the tribe of Hashim at the battle of Badr, was taken prisoner by the Muslims, but released on ransom, and afterwards became a convert to Islam. Ash-Shaff'i ia reported by Muslim writers to be the most accurate of all the traditionists, and, if their accounts be well founded, nature had indeed endowed him with extraordinary talents for excelling in that species of literature. It is said that at seven years of age he had got the whole Qur'an by rote, at ten he had committed to memory the Muwatta' of Mālık, and at fifteen he obtained the rank of Mufti He passed the earlier part of his life at Gaza, in Palestine (which has ocplace), there he completed his education and afterwards removed to Makkah came to Baghdad A.H. 195, where he lectures on the traditions, and composed his first work, entitled al-Usul From Baghdad he went on a prigrimage to Makkah, and from thence afterwards passed into Egypt, where he met with Imam Malik It does not appear that he ever returned from that country, but spent the remainder of his life there, dividing his time between the exercises of religion, the instruction of the ignorant, and the composition of his later works He died at Cairo A.H 204 Although he was forty-seven years of age before he began to publish, and died at fifty-four, his works are more veluminous than those of any other Muslim doctor He was a great enemy to the scholastic divines, and most of his productions (especially upon theology), were written with a view to controvert their absurdates. He is said to have been the first who reduced the science of Jurisprüdence into a regular system, and to have made a systematic collection of traditions Imam Hambal remarks that until the time of ash-Shafi'i men did not know how to distinguish between the traditions that were in force and those that were cancelled first work was, as before-mentioned, the Usul, or "fundamentals," containing all the principles of the Muslim civil and canon law His next literary productions were the Sunan and Masnad, both works on the traditional law, which are held in high estimation among the Sunnis His works upon practical divinity are various, and those upon theology consist of fourteen volumes. His tomb is still to be seen at Cairo, where the famous Salahu'd-din afterwards (AH 587) founded a college for the preservation of his works and the propagation of his doctrines mosque at Hirah was built by Sultan Chiyasu d-Din for the same purpose Imam ash Shaff'i is said to have been a person of acute discernment and agreeable conversation. His reverence for God was such that he never was heard to mention his name except in prayer His manners were mild and ingratusting, and he reprobated all unnecessary moroseness or severity in a teacher, it being a saying of his that whoever advised his brother tenderly and in private did him a service, but that public reproof could only operate as a repreach. His principal pupils were Imam Ahmad ibn Hambal and az-Zuhairi, the former of whom afterwards founded a sect [HANDAL]

with in Egypt and Arabia.

SHAGHĀR ( AM) A double treaty of marriage common amongst the pagan Arabs, viz. the man marrying the sister or daughter of another, and in return giving his sister or daughter in order to avoid paying the usual dower It is strictly forbidden by the Muhammadan religion (see Mishkat, book zii. ch. 11), although it is even now practised by the people of Central Asta

SHAH (514) Persian. "A King" A title usually given to members of the Ascetic order, and to Saiyids, as Faqir Shāh, Akbar Shāh It has, however, become a common addition to surnames, both in India and other countries, and no longer denotes a position of dignity

SHAHADAH (5.16a) "Evidence" [WITNESSES.] Martyrdom. [MARTYRS.]

SHAHID (Aga). [MARTYRS, WIT-MBSS.]

ASH-SHAHID "The (الشهيد). Witness " One of the ninety-nine names or attributes of God It frequently occurs in the Qur'an for the Almighty (a.g Sürzh ili. 98) as one who seeth all things.

SHÄHINSHÄH Persian title given to the King of Persia-"King of Kings" It is a title strictly for bidden in Traditions, in which it is related that Muhammad said "King of Kings is the vilest name you can call a man, for there is no other King of Kings but God " (Mishkāt, book xxii. ch viil)

SHAIKH (همه ), pl shuyūkh, ash-yākh, or mashāyikh. A venerable old man. A man above fifty years of age. A man of A superior of an order of Darwesues Shaykhu 'l-Islam, a title given to the chief Maulawi or Qazi of the cities of Constantinople, Cairo, Damascus, &c.

[DEVIL] (خيطان) DEVIL]

SHAJJAH ( , pl. shijāj [WOUNDS]

SHAKING HANDS Arabic musāfahah (ممافحة) Is enjoined in the Traditions, and is founded upon the express example of Muhammad himself

Al-Bara' ibn Azib says the Prophet said, "There are no two Muslims who meet and shake hands but their sins will be forgiven them before they separate " (Mishkāt, book x x n ch. ni.)

(الشكور) ASH-SHAKUR Acknowledger of Thankagiving " One of the ninety-nine special attributes of the Almighty Quran, Surah xxxv 27 "Verily He (God) is forgiving, and an acknowledger of thankagiving " When used for anyone but God it means one who is grateful, a.g. Qur'an, Sürah xxxiv. 12 'Few of my servants are grateful."

(الشام) M'AHS-HSA Let "That which is on the left-hand (looking to the rising sun)," is the northern country to riaing sun), Makkah Syria

ASH-SHAMS " The (الشمس) Sun" The title of the xcist Surah of the Qur'an, which begins with the word.

SHAQQU 'S-SADR (هن المدر)
Let "The splitting open of the heart " Anas relates that "the Angel Gabriel came to the Prophet, when he was playing with boys, and took hold of him, and laid him on the ground, and split open his heart, and brought out a little bag of blood, and said to Muhammad 'This is the devil's part of you. After this, Gabriel washed the Prophet's heart with zamzam water, then sewed it up and replaced it Then the boys who were with the Prophet came running to his nurse, saying, 'Verily Muhammad is killed.'" Anas also says that he "had seen the marks of the sewing in the Prophet's breast." (Michial, book xxiv ch. vi)

According to the commentators al-Banzawi, al-Kamālān, and Husain, the first verse of the xurvth Surah of the Qur'an refers to this event: "Have we not opened thy breast for thee, and taken off from thee thy burden, which galled thy back?" But it seems probable that this simple verse of one of the earliest chapters of the Qur'an refers merely to the enlightenment of Muhammad's heart, and that his followers afterwards invented the miracle in order to give a supernatural turb to the passage [MUHAMMAD]

SHAR' (43) [LAW]

SHARĀB (—), In its original meaning, "that which is drunk" A drink Always applied to wine and intoxicating drinks In mystic writings, sharāb, "wine," signifies the dominion of Divine love over the heart of man

SHI'AH (days). Let "Followers." The followers of 'Ali, first cousin of Muhammand and the husband of his daughter The Shi'ahs maintain that 'Ali Fätımah was the first legitimate Imam or Khalifah, or successor, to the Prophet, and therefore reject Abu Bakr, 'Umar, and 'Usman, the first three Khalifaha of the Sunni Muslims, as usurpers They are also called the Imamiyahs, because they believe the Muslim religion consists in the true knowledge of the Imam or rightful leaders of the faithful Also the Isnā-'ashariyah, or the twelveurs, as followers of the twelve Imams The Sunni Muslims call them the Rafizi. or the forsakers of the The Shi'ahs strenuously maintain truth. that they are the "orthodox" Muslims and arrogate to themselves (as do also the Sunnis) the title of al-Mu'minan, or the " True Believers

The spirit of division, which appeared among the followers of Muhammad, even before his death, broke out with greater violence after it and the rapid strides of his successors to even imperial power, only af forded a wider sphere for ambition. The great and radical difference between the Shi'ahs and Sunnis, as we have already remarked, arises from the former maintaining the divine and indefeasible right of 'Ali to succeed to the Khalifate on the death of the Prophet 'Ali s claims, they assert, rested on his nearness of kindred to Muhammad, of whom he was a cousin, and on his having married Fatimah, the only offspring of the Prophet which survived him They also assert that he was expressly declared his successor by the Prophet himself, under direct guidance from God

The text quoted in defence of the divine institution of the Khalifate in the Prophet's own family, is the 118th verse of the Süratu 'l-Baqarah, or the Second Chapter of the Qur'an, which reads—

"And when his Lord tried Abraham with words and he fulfilled them, He said, 'I am about to make of thee an IMAM to mankind', he said, 'Of my offspring also?' 'My covenant,' said God, 'embraceth not evil doers.'"

According to the Shi'ahs, this passage shows that the Imamate, or Khalifate, is a divine institution, and the possessor thereof must be of the seed of Abraham This the Sunnis would also admit, as they hold that the true Khalifah can only be one of the Quraish tribe [RHALIFAH], but from the expression, "my covenant embraceth not evil doers," the Shi'ah doctors establish the supernatural character of the Khalifate, and hold that the divinely appointed leader must himself be without spot or blemish or espacitly to sin The primeval creation of 'Ali is therefore a dogma of the Shi'ah faith.

The author of the Hayatu 'l-Quist (Mer-rick's ed., p. 4), says "The Prophet de-clared that the Most High had created him, and 'Ali and Fatimah, and Hasan and Husain, before the creation of Adam, and when as yet there was neither heaven, no: earth, nor darkness, nor light, nor sun, nor moon, nor paradise, nor hell ' [HAQIQATU 'L-MUHAMMADIYAH ]

The Shi'ah traditions also give very lengthy accounts of the nomination of 'All by the Prophet to be his successor The following is the account given in the Hayatu 'l-Qulub

(p 884) —
"When the ceremonies of the pilgrimage were completed, the Prophet, attended by 'Alī, and the Muslims, left Makkah for al-Madinah On reaching Ghadirkhum the Prophet halted, although that place had never been known as a stopping-place for caravans because it had neither water nor pasturage The reason for stopping at this place being a direct message from the Almighty. The Prophet had received divine messages on the subject before, but He had not before expressly appointed the time of 'Ali's mauguration."

"As the day was very hot, the Prophet ordered them to take shelter under some thorn trees Having ordered all the camelsaddles to be piled up for a pulpit, he commanded a herald to summon the people around him. Most of them had bound their cloaks on their feet as a protection from the When all the people were excessive heat assembled, the Prophet ascended the pulpit made of camel-saddles, and, calling to him the Commander of the Faithful ('Ali), placed him on his right hand Muhammad then gave praise to God, and foretold his own death, saying that he had been called to the gate of God He then said, 'I leave among you the Book of God, to which, while you adhere, you will never go astray I leave with you the members of my family who cannot be separated from the Book of God until both they and the Book join me at the fountain of al-Kangar' [KAUSAR] He then, with a loud voice, said, 'Am I not dearer to you than your own lives?' And all the people said, 'Yes' He then took the hands of 'All and raised them up so high, that the white of his arm-pits appeared, and said, Whoseever from his heart receives me as his master, then let him receive 'Alı O Lord, befriend 'Ali. Be the enemy of all his enemies. Help all who help him, and forsake all who foreake him "

The writer also says:-

"Certain authorities, both Shi'ah Sunni, declare that when the Prophet died, the hypocritical Muhājirs and Anears, such as Abu Bakr, 'Umar, and 'Abdu 'r-Rahman ibnu 'l-'Auf, instead of visiting the family of the Prophet to comfort them at the time of his death, assembled at the abode of the Banu Saudah, and plotted to seize the Khalifate Most of them did not perform the prayers at the Prophet's burial, although 'Ali sent to call them for the purpose. This plan was to make Abū Bakr Khalifah, and for this they had plotted in the Prophet's lifetime. hypocritical Ansars, however, wished to make Sa'd ibnu 'l-Abadah Khalifah, but they were over-ruled by the Muhājira. A certain man brought the information that Abū Bakr was constituted Khahifah, when 'All was in the act of filling in the earth of the Prophet's grave, and said that the hypocrites had feared that if they waited till the funeral ceremony was over, they would not succeed in their design of depriving 'Ali of his rights 'Ali laid his spade on the ground and recited the first verses of the xxixth Surah of the Qur'an 'A L M Do men reckon that they will be left alone who say, "We believe," and not be tried? We did try those who were before them, and God will surely know those who are truthful, and he will surely know those who are hars'"

The Shi'ahs believe that at this time God made special revelations to Fatimah, the Prophet's daughter, and 'Ali's wife These revelations are said to have been possessed by the last of the Imams, al-Mahdi, and to be still in his possession. [MAHDI]

It need scarcely be added that the Sunni writers deny every word of these traditions

The strong hand of the Sunni Khahfah 'Umar kept the claims of 'Ali in abeyance, but when 'Umar died, the Khalifate was offered to 'Alī, on condition that he would govern according to the Qur'an, and the traditions as received by the Sunnis answer of Ali not being deemed satisfactory. the election devolved upon 'Usman (Othman). Usmān was assassinated A H 85, and 'Alī was elected on his own terms, in spite of the opposition of 'Ayishah, the favourite wife of the Prophet, who had become a great influence in Islam.

One of the first acts of 'Alī was to recall Mu'awiyah from Syria Mu'awiyah refused, and then claimed the Khalifate for himself His claims were supported by 'Avishah. 'Ali was eventually assassinated at Kufah, AR 40, and upon his death his son Hasan was elected Khalifah, but he resigned it in favour of Mu'awiyah, on the condition that he should resume it on the death of the latter Mucawiyah consented to this arrangement, although secretly determining that his own son Yazıd should be his successor

Upon the death of Mu'āwiyah, A. H. 60, his son Yazid, "the Polluted," obtained the posisition of Imam or Khalifah, without the form of election, and with this event commenced the great Shī'ah sohism, which has divided the forces of Islam until this day

The leading, or "orthodox" sect of the Shi'ahs, the Imamiyahs, receive the following as the rightful Khalifahs

1 'Alī, the son-in-law of the Prophet

Al-Hasan, the son of 'Ali.

8 Al-Husain, the second son of 'Ali.

- 4 'Ali, surnamed Zamu 1-'Abidin, the son of al-Husain.
- 5 Muhammad al-Baqır, son of Zaınu T •Abıdīn
- 6. Jatar as-Sadiq son of Muhammad al-

7. Mūsā al-Kāşim, son of Jā'far

8. Ar-Rass, son of Müss.

9 Muhammad at-Taqī, son of ar-Razā. 10. Alī an-Naqı, son of Muhammad at-Taqī

11 Al-Hasan al-'Askari, son of 'Ali an-

Nagi,

12 Muhammad, son of al-Hasan al-Askari, or the Imām al-Mahdī, who is supposed by the Shrahs to be still alive, 'hough he has withdrawn for a time, and they say he will again appear in the last days as the Mahdi, or "Director," which the Prophet prophesied would appear before the Day of Judgment

[MAHDI ]

The imagnites trace the descent of this Imam Muhammad as direct from 'Alī, thus making him the twelfth lawful Imam, on which account they are called the Isna 'asharigah, or the "Twelveans" They assert that this last Imam, whilst still a boy, being persecuted by the Abbaside Khalifahs, disappeared down a well in the courtyard of a house at Hillah near Baghdād, and Ion Khaldun says, so late as even in his day, devout Shī'ahs would assemble every evening after sunset at this well and entreat the absent Imam to appear again on earth in the present day, during the absence of the Imam, the Shi'ahs appeal to the Mujtakidan, or "enlightened doctors of the law," whose opinion is final on all matters, both temporal and spiritual

There have been two great schisms in the succession of the Imains, the first upon the death of 'Ali Zainu'l 'Abidin, when part of the sect adhered to his son Zaid, the founder of the Zaidiyah sect. And the second on the death of as-Şādiq, when his father nominated his second son, Musā al Kāzim as his successor, instead of allowing the Khahifate to go in Ismā'il's family, those who adhered to Isma'il's family being called Ismā'iliyah. The great body of the Shī'ahs acknowledge Musā al Kāzim and kis descendants as the true Imāms

The Ismä'ilıyah, like the Twelveans. make profession of a loyal attachment to the cause of 'Ali. Their schism was occasioned by a dispute regarding the succession to the Imamate on the death of Imam Jafar Şādiq Jafar had four sons, the eldest of whom was Ismā'il. One day, however, Ismā'il was seen m a state of mebriety, and his father disinherited him, and appointed his son Müsä. greater number of the Shi ahs accepted this decision, but a small number, who regarded the drunkenness of the Imam as an evidence that he accepted the hidden meaning and not the legal precepts of Islam ('), remained attached to Isma'll They say from the time of 'All to the death of Muhammad, the son of Ismā'il, the Imāms were visible, but from his death commenced the succession of concealed Imams. The fourth of these "concealed Imāms was a certain 'Abdu 'liāh, who hved about the third century of the Hurah

The contentions of the Shi'ahs regarding the succession have become endless, and of the proverbial seventy-three sects of Islam, not fewer than thirty-two are assigned in Shi'ahs, and, according to the Shari Muwaqif, there are as many as seven three sects of the Shi'ahs alone.

According to the Starku 'l-Muwaquf, three principal sects of the Shi'as are Ghulāt, or Zealots, the title generally g to those who, through their excessive for the Imams, have raised them above degree of human beings (2) *Za*rdī those who separated after the appointn of Muhammad Baqır to the Khalifate, followed Zaid (3) Imamiyah, or those acknowledged Jafar Sädig as the righ Imam, to the exclusion of Isma'il, and wi appears to be what may be called the or dox sect of the Shi'as Out of these th great divisions have grown innumerable se which it would be tedious to define Shi'ah religionists are more or less infe with mysticism

Many of the Shi'ahs have carried to veneration for 'Ali so far, as to raise him the position of a divine person, and most the sects make their Imams partakers of divine nature. These views have their for dation in the traditions already quoted, where the pre-existence of Muhammad 'Ali, and they have undoubtedly been foste by the gnostic tendencies of all forms of pan belief especially Suffism [SUFL]

sian belief especially Suffism [SUFL] Since the accession of Ismā'il, the first the Sūff dynasty, A.D. 1499, the Shī'ah fi has been the national religion of Per Nādir Shah, when at the summit of his post attempted to convert the Persians to Sunni form of Islām, in order to assist ambitious designs, but the attempt falled, the attachment of the Persians to the Shi faith has remained as decided as ever

Sir Lewis Pelly remarks ---

'Though the personal history of Ali his sons was the exciting cause of the Sh schism, its predisposing cause hes far dee in the impassable ethnological gulf wh separates the Aryan and Semitic rac Owing to their strongly centralised form government, the empire of the Sassani succumbed at once before the onslaught the Saracene, still, Persia was never re-converted to Islam, and when Mohamm the son of Ali, the son of Abduliah, the of Abbas, the uncle of the Prophet Mohs med, proclaimed the Imamate as inherent divine right, in the descendants of the Cali Ali, the vanquished Persians rose as one n against their Arab conquerors. The sons Abbas had all espoused the cause of the couse Ali against Moswiyah, and when Ye succeeded to the Caliphate, Abdullah refu to acknowledge him, and retired to Mec It was he who tried to dissuade Husain fr going to Cufa His son was Ali, who, order of the Caliph Walid, was flogged s paraded through the streets of Damese mounted on a camel, with his face to its to and it was to avenge this insult on his fat! that Mohammed resolved to overthrow dynasty of the Ommisdes

The Persians, in their hatred of t

Arabs, had from the first accepted the rights of the sons of Ali and Fatimah to the Imamate, and Mohammed cumingly represented to them that the Imamate had been transmitted to him by Abou Hashim, the son of Mohammed, another son of the Caliph Ali, whose mother was a daughter of the tribe of Hanifah. This was a gross fraud on the de-scendants of Fatimah, but the Persians cared not so long as they threw off the Arab yoke."

The Muhammadans of the province of Oudh in British India are for the most part Shi'ahs, and there are a few in the region of Tirah, on the frontier of India With the exception of the province of Oudh, the Muhammadans of India are for the most part Sunnis of the Hanafi sect, but practices pecuhar to the Shi'ahs have long prevailed in certain localities. In most parts of India, where the parties are Shi'ahs, the law of this school of jurisprudence is always administered, especially with regard to marriage and inheritance

It is not correct, as stated by Sale (Introduction to the Koran) and others, that the Shi'ahs reject the Sunnah, or Traditions, for although the Shi'ahs do not receive the " six correct books of the Sunnis," they acknowledge five collections of their own, namely (1), Al-Kāfī, (2) Manlayastahzırahu 'l-Faqih, (3) Tahzīb, (4) İstibşar, (5) Nahju 'l-Balāghah. [TRADITIONS] The works 'l-Balaghah. [TRADITIONS] written on the traditions are very numerous

The Rev James L Merrick (Boston, 1850) has translated into English portions of the Hayatu 'l-Qulub, the most popular book of traditions amongst the Shi'ahs. It was ori-Muhammad Tākī, whose last work was the well-known Haqqu 'l-Yaqin, A.H. 1027 (A D 1627).

The Shiah school of jurisprudence is of earher date than that of the Sunnis, for Abū Hanifah, the father of the Sunni Code of Mushm law, received his first instructions in jurisprudence from Ja'far as-Şādiq, the sixth Imam of the Shi'shs, but this learned doctor afterwards separated from his teacher, and established a code of laws of his own.

The differences between the Shi ahs and the Sunnis are very numerous, but the following are the principal points -

(1) The discussion as to the office of Imam, already alluded to

(2) The Shrahe have a profound veneration for the Khalifah 'Ali, and some of their sects regard him as an mearnation of divinity, whilst they all assert that next to the Prophet, 'All is the most perfect and excellent of men.

(8) They still possess Mujiakids, or "enlightened doctors," whose opinion is final in matters of Muslim law and doctrine. The Mujtahid is the highest degree amongst Mu-hammadan doctors The Sunnis say, in the present divided condition of Islam it is impossible to appoint them, but the Shi'ahs still elect them in Persia, and the appointment is confirmed by the king [MUSTAND]

(4) They observe the ceremonies of the Muharram in commemoration of al-Hasan and al-Husain, whilst the Sunnis only observe the tenth day of the Muharram, or the 'Ashura', being, they say, the day on which

God created Adam [MUHARRAM.]
(5) They include the Majusi, or fire worshippers, amongst the Ahlu 'l-Kitāb, or people who have received an inspired record from God, whilst the Sunnis only acknowledge the Jews, Christians, and Muslims as such

(6) They admit the principle of religious compromise called Taqiyah (kt. "Guarding oneself") A pious fraud, whereby the Shī'ah Muhammadan believes he is justified in either smoothing down, or denying, the peculiarities of his religious belief in order to save himself from persecution. [TAQIYAH.]

(7) There are also various minor differences in the liturgical ceremonies of the Shi aha, which will be found in the account of the hturgical prayers [PRAYER.]

(8) The differences between the civil law of the Shi'ahs and Sunni have been carefully noted in Mr N B E. Baillie's Introduction to his Digest of the Imameea Code (London,

(a) "With regard to the sexes, any connection between them, which is not sanctioned by some relation founded upon contract or upon slavery, is denounced by both the sects as zina, or formication But, according to the Hanafiyahs, the contract must be for the lives of the parties, or the woman be the slave of the man, and it is only to a relation founded on a contract for life that they give the name of nikah, or marriage According to the Shi'aha, the contract may be either temporary, or for life, and it is not necessary that the slave should be the actual property of the man, for it is sufficient if the usufruct of her person be temporarily surrendered to him by her owner To a relation established in any of these ways they give the name of nikāh, or marriage, which is thus, according to them, of three kinds, permanent, temporary, and service It is only their permanent marriage that admits of any comparison with the marriage of the Hanafiyahs And here there is, in the first place, some difference in the words by which the contract is effected According to the Hanafiyahs, the words may be sank (express) or kinayah (ambiguous). According to the Shi'ahs, they must always be express, and to the two express terms of the other sect (mkah and tazwi) they add a third mutah, which is rejected by the others as insufficient [MUTAH.] Further, while the Hanafiyahs regard the presence of witnesses as essential to a valid contract of marriage, the Shī'ahs do not deem it to be in anywise necessary The causes of prohibition correspond, to some extent, in both schools, but there is this difference between them, that the Hanafiyah includes a difference of dar, or nationality, among the causes of prohibition, and excludes han, or imprecation, from among them while the Shi'sh excludes the former and includes the latter There is, also, some difference between them as to the conditions and restrictions under which fosterage becomes a ground of prohibition And with regard to infidelity, though both schools entirely prohibit any sexual intercourse between a Mushmah or Musalman woman and a man who is not of her own religion, the Hanafi allows of such intercourse, under the sanction of marriage or of slavery, between a Muslim and any woman who is a kitabiyah, that is, who belongs to any sect that is supposed to have a revealed religion, while the Shi'ah restricts such connection to mutah, or temporary and servile marriages Among Kitabiyah both schools include Christians and Jews, but the Hanafi rejects Majūsīs, or fire worshippers, who are included among them by the Shi'aha The Shi'aha do not appear to make any distinction between invalid and valid marriages, all that are forbidden being apparently void accord ing to them But the distinction is of little importance to the parties themselves, as under neither of the schools does an unlawful marriage confer any nheritable quality upon the parties, and the rights of the children born of such marriages are determined by another consideration, which will be adverted to in the proper place hereafter

"(b) With regard to the servile marriage of the Shi'ahs, it is nothing more than the right of sexual intercourse which every master has with his slaves, but there is the same difference between the two sects, in this case, as in that of marriage by contract According to the Hanafiyahs, the right must be permanent, by the woman's being the actual property of the man. According to the Shi'ahs, the right may be temporary, as when it is conceded for a limited time by the owner of the slave When a slave has borne a child to her own master, which he acknowledges, she becomes his umm-ul-walad, or mother of a child, and cannot be sold, while she is entitled to emancipation at her master's death According to the Hanatiyahs, these privileges are permanent, but, according to the Shi ahs, the exemption from sale is restricted to the life of her child, and her satle to emancipation is at the expense of her child's share in the muster's estate If that be insufficient, her enfranchisement is only pro tanto, or so far as the share will go the child's father has only an usufructuary right in the mother, the child is free, though the mother, being the property of another, does not acquire the lights of in unam-ulwalad.

"(c) With regard to the persons who may be legally slaves, there seems to be little, if any, difference between the two sects According to the Shī'ahs, slavery is the proper condition of the karabis, or eremies with the exception only of Christians, Jews, and Majusis, or fire-worshippers, so long as they continue in a state of zimmah, or subjection, to the Mussulman community If they renounce their zenamah, they fall back into the condition of ordinary hurabis, and if a person should buy from a harabi his child, or wife, or at his consenguineous relations, the pe so purchased is to be adjudged a si There seems also to be but little rence in the manner in which slaves be enfranchised, or their bondage quali But there is an important difference a children, for, according to the Hanafiy a child follows the conditions of its mot being free or a slave, as she is the one or other, while, according to the Shi'ahs, free, if either of its parents be so Both sects are agreed that marriage may be solved by the husband at any time at pleasure, and to such dissolutions they give the name of talão

"(d) But there are some important d rences between the repudiation of the two s Thus, while the Hanafiyahs recognize forms, the Sunni and Bida'i, or regular irregular, as being equally efficacious, subdivide the regular into two other fo one of which they designate as absan, or 1 and the other as sasan, or good, the Shi reject these distinctions altogether, re nizing only one form of the Sunni, or regi So also as to the expressions by which re diation may be constituted, while the H fīvahs distinguish between what they sarih, or express words, which are inflect of the word talag, and various express which they term kināyah, or ambiguous, Shi'ahs admit the former only Further, Hanasıyaha do not require intention v express words are used, so that, thous man is actually compelled to use them. repudiation is valid according to them. do they require the presence of witne as necessary in any case to the valu of a repudiation, while, according to Shiahs both intention and the pres of two witnesses in all cases are essen Both sects agree that repudiation may either bain (absolute) or rayati (revocal and that a repudiation given three ti cannot be revoked, nor a woman so rep ated be again married by her husband z she has been intermediately married to other man, and the marriage with him teen consummated But, according to Hanafiyahs, repudiation may be made irre cable by an aggravation of the terms, or addition of a description, and three rep ations may be given in immediate success or even unico contextu, in one expressi while, according to the Shiahs, on the o hand, the irrevocability of a repudiation dependent on the state in which the wor may be at the time that it is given, three repudiations, to have their full of must have two intervening revocati To the bain and rajail repudiations both sects, the Shi ahs add one peculiar themselves, to which they give the nam the talaq u'l-'iddak, or repudiation of 'iddah, and which has the effect of render the repudiated woman for ever unlawfu her husband, so that it is impossible them ever to marry with each other ag The power of revocation continues until expiration of the 'iddah, or probationary period for ascertaining whether a woman is pregnant or not After it has expired, the repudiation becomes absolute, according to both schools So long as it is revocable, the parties are still in a manner husband and wife, and if either of them should happen to die, the other has a right of inheritance in the deceased's estate

"(e) With regard to parentage, maternity is established, according to the Hanafiyahs, by birth alone, without any regard to the connection of the parents being lawful or not According to the Shī'ahs, it must in all cases be lawful, for a waladu 'z-zına', or illegitimete child, has no descent, even from its mother, nor are there any mutual rights of inheritance between them. For the establishment of paternity there must have been, at the time of the child's conception, according to both stes, a legal connection between its parents by marriage or slavery, or a semblance of either According to the Hansliyahs, an invalid marriage is sufficient for that purposter, even, according to the head of the school, one that is positively unlawful, but, scording to the Shi'shs, the marriage must inalicases be lawful, except when there is rror on the part of both or either of the queents. Again, as to the children by slaves, express acknowledgment by the father is required by both the sects, except when the slave is his ummu'l-walad, or has already borns a child to him, for though according to the Shi'ahs, there are two reports on the subject, yet, by the most generally received of these, a slave does not become the wife of her muster by mere coition, and her child is not affiliated to him without his acknowledgment. With regard to children begotten under a semblance of right, the Hanafiyahs require some basis for the semblance in the relation of the parties to each other, while, according to the Shi'ahs, bond fide belief on the part of the man that the woman is his wife or his slave reems to be all that is required, while no relation short of a legal marriage or slavery, without such belief either on the part of the man or the woman, would apparently be sufficient.

(f) On the subject of testimony, both schools require that it shall be direct to the point in issue, and they also seem to be agreed that when two or more witnesses concur in asserting a fact in the same terms, the judge is bound by their testimony, and must give his judgment in conformity with it They agree in requiring that a witness should in general have full knowledge, by the cognizance of his own senses, of the fact to which he is beering testimony, but both allow him, in certain exceptional cases, to testify on information received from others, or when he is convinced of the fact by inference from circumstances with which it is connected.

"(g) Nasub, or descent, is included by both sects among the exceptional facts to which a witness is allowed to testify when they are generally notorious, or when he is credibly informed of them by others But according to the Hanafiyaha, it is enough if the infer-mation be received from two just men, or one just man and two just women; while the Shi'ahs require that it should have been received from a considerable number of persons in succession, without any suspicion of their having got up the story in concert The Hanafiyahs class marriage among the exceptional facts, together with Nasab, but, according to the Shi'ahs, it more properly follows the general rule, which requires that the witness should have the direct evidence of his own senses to the fact to which he is giving his testimony They seem, however, to admit an excep-tion in its favour, for they reason that as we adjudge Khadijah to have been the mother of Fatimah, the daughter of the Prophet, though we know it only by general notoriety and tradition, which is but continued hearsay so also we may equally decide her to have been the Prophet swife for which we have the same evidence thoughwe were not present at the contract of marriage nor even heard the Prophet acknowledge Both sects are agreed that a withess may lawfully infer and testify that a thing is the property of a particular person when he has seen it in his possession, and so, according to the Hanafiyahs, 'When a person has seen a man and woman dwelling in the same house, and behaving familiarly with each other in the manner of married persons, it is lawful for him to testify that she is his wife, in the same way as when he has seen a specific thing in the hands of another' The Shī'ahs do not apply this principle of inference to the case of marriage, and there is no ground for saying that, according to them, marriage will be presumed in a case of proved continual cohabitation

"(h) There is difference between the two schools as to the person who is entitled to claim a right of shiftah, or pre-emption. According to the Hanafiyahs, the right may be claimed, firstly, by a partner in the thing itself, secondly by a partner in its rights of water and way; and thirdly, by a neighbour According to the Shi'ahs, the right belongs only to the first of these, with some slight exception in favour of the second. The claim of the third they reject altogether in gift the principal difference between the schools is, that a gift of an undivided share of a thing, which is rejected by the Hanafiyah is quite lawful according to the Shi'alia

"(s) In appropriation and alms there do not seem to be any differences of importance between the two schools. And in wills the leading difference seems to be that, while, according to the Hansfiyahs, a bequest in favour of an heir is positively illegal, it is quite unobjectionable according to the Shi'ahs

"(j) In respect of inheritance, there are many and important differences between the two sects, but they admit of being reduced to a few leading principles, which I now proceed to notice, following the ording which the different branches of the subject are treated of in this volume. The impediments to inheritance are four in namber, according to the Hansflyshs, viz. slavery, homeide, difference of religion, and difference of dar, or country. Of these the Shrahs recognize the first, the second also with some modification, that is, they require that the homicide be intentional, in other words, murder, while with the Hansfiyshs it operated equally as an impediment to inherit ance, though accidental For difference of religion the Shiraha substitute infidelity, and difference of country they reject entirely Exclusion from the whole inheritance, according to the Hensilyshs is founded upon and regulated by two principles The one is that a person who is related to the de The one ceased through another has no interest in the succession during the life of that other, with the exception of half-brothers and sisters by the mother, who are not excluded by her The other principle is, that the nearer relative excludes the more remote. The former of these principles is not expressly mentioned by the Shirahs, but it is included without the exception in the second which is adopted by them, and extended, so as to postpone a more remote residuary to a nearer sharer-an effect which is not given to it by the Hanafiyaha "With regard to partial exclusion or the diminution of a share, there is also some difference between the sects. According to the Hanafiyahe, a child, or the child of a son, how low seever, reduces the shares of a husband, a wife, and a mother, from the highest to the lowest appointed for them, while, according to the Shin'he, the reduction is effected by any child, whether male or female, in any stage of descent from the deceased Further, when the deceased has left a husband or wife, and both parents, the share of the mother is reduced, according to the Hanafiyaha, from a third of the whole estate to a third of the remainder, in order that the male may have double the share of the female but, according to the Shieha, there is no reduction of the mother's third in these circumstances, though, when the deceased has left a husband, the share of the father can only be a sixth The shares and the person for whom they are appointed being expressly men-tioned in the Qur'an, there is no difference in respect of them between the two schools But they differ materially as to the relatives who are not sharers They are divided by the Hanafiyahs into residuaries and distant kindied The residuaries in their own right they define as every male in whose line of relation to the deceased no female enters 'and the distant kindred,' as 'all relatives who are neither sharers nor res-The residuaries not only take any duarres surplus that may remain after the sharers have been satisfied, but also the whole estate when there is no sharer, to the an entire exclusion of the distant kindred, sun, bough these may, in fact, be much nearer ordi 1 bleed to the deceased. This preference of the residuary is rejected with abhorrance by the Shi'ahs, who for objection to it, certainly with some ance of version, on two passages of the steel below. Instead of the triple of the Hanaiyahs, they mix up the all the relatives together, and then them into three classes, according proximity to the deceased, each of its order is preferred to that which so that while there is a single in even a female of a prior class, no room for the succession of an others.

"Within the classes operation is the doctrine of the return by the nearly in the same way as by th ffyahs that is, if there is a surp the shares, it reverts to the share the exception of the husband or v is proportionately divided among the cording to the Hannfivahs, this si always intercepted by the residuary is only when there is no residuary t is with them any room for the do When the shares ex the return whole estate, the deficiency is distri the Hanafiyahs over all the shares ing the extractor of the case-a which is termed the 'uni, or increase is also rejected by the Shi'ahs, wi the deficiency to lass containing to among them whose relationship to among the farher's side. Wit the deficiency to fall exclusively up to the computation of shares, there appear to be any difference between schools" A Digest of Monhummus Imameea Code N.R.E. Baillie, Londo M: Wilfrid S Blunt, in his Future has the following remarks on the position of the Shi'sh sect — "In theory, I believe the Shins ! that there is an Imam and Caliph. will not tolerate the pretention of any in authority to the title, and leave it ance until the advent of the Mohady or guide, who is to reunite Islam and its fortunes. So much is this the c sovereign though he he and absolut in Persia, the Shah is to the prelooked upon by the Persians as a and he himself acknowledges the rather curious ceremony. It is a ma Mussulmans of all sects that pray valid if made in another man's house his permission, and this being ac. Shah admitting that his palaces of long not to himself but to the Mol 18 obliged to lease them according form from an alem ('alem) or mujta' ing or the supposed Mobady, before pray in them to his spiritual profit

"It will be readily understood to auch an organization and with such to deductive reasoning, a wide basis for divergence of opinion among the and that while the more highly editheir mollahs occasionally preach pantheism, others consult the grown stions of the vulgar, and induly hearers with the most extravagant tales of miracle and superstition. These are a constant source of mockery to the Sunites Among the more respectable Shite beliefs, however, there seems to be a general conviction in Persia that a reform of Islam is at hand, and that a new leader may be expected at any moment and from any quarter, so that enthusiasts are constantly found simulating the grifts of inspiration and affecting a divine mission The history of the Babites, so wall described by M de Gobineau in his Religions of Ama, is a case in point, and similar occurrences are by no means rare in Persia. I met at Jeddah a highly educated Persian gentleman, who informed me that he had himself been witness, when a boy, to a religious produgy, notorious, if I remember rightly, at Tabriz that occasion, one of these prophets, being condemned to death by the supreme government, was bound to a cross with two of his companions, and, after remaining suspended thus for several hours, was fired at by the royal troops It then happened that, while the companions were dispatched at the first volley, the prophet himself remained unhurt, and, incredible to relate, the cords which bound him were cut by the bullets, and he fell to the ground on his feet 'You Ohristians,' said another Persian gentleman once to me 'talk of your Christ as the Son of God and think it strange, but with us the occurrence is a common one. Believe me, we have "sons of God" in nearly all our villages' [suri ]

"Thus, with the Shuter, extremes meet No Moslems more readily adapt themselves to the superficial atheisms of Europe than do the Persians, and none are more ardently devout, as all who have witnessed the miracle play of the two Imams will be obliged to admit Extremes, too, of morality are seen, flerce asceticisms and gross licentiousnesses By no sect of Islam is the duty of pilgrimage more religiously observed, or the prayers and ablutions required by their rule per-formed with a stricter ritual. But the very pilgrims who go on foot to Mecca scruple not to drink wine there, and Persian morality is everywhere a by-word In all these circumstances there is much to fear as well as to hope on the side of the Shiite sect, but their future only indirectly involves that of Islam proper Their whole census does not probably exceed fifteen millions, and it shows no tendency to increase. Outside Persia we find about one million Irak: Arabs, a few in Syria and Afghanistan, and at most five miltions in India. One small group still maintains itself in the neighbourhood of Medina, where it is tolerated rather than acknowledged, and a few Shuites are to be found in most of the large cities of the west, but everywhere the sect of Ali stands apart from and almost in a heatile attitude to the rest of Islam It is noticeable, however, that within the last fifty years the religious bitterness of Shiite and Sanite is sensibly in decline

SHIRB (شرب) The share of water used for tillage [RIVER]

SHIRK (هرك ) "Idolatry, pagan-ism, polytheism" Ascribing plurality to the Deily. Associating anything with God According to Wahhabi writers, Shirk is defined to be of four kinds Shirku 'l-'ilm, ascribing knowledge to others than God, Shirku't-tasarruf, ascribing power to others than God, Shirku'l-tabadah, offering worship to created things, Shirku 'l-'adah, the performance of ceremonies which imply rehance

on others than God

(1) Sharku V-tlm is illustrated by the statement that prophets and holy men have no knowledge of secret things unless as revealed to them by God. Thus some wicked persons made a charge against The Prophet was troubled in 'Ayishah mind, but knew not the truth of the matter till God made it known to him To ascribe then, power to soothsayers, astrologers and saints is Polytheism. "All who pretend to have a knowledge of hidden things such as fortune tellers, soothsayers, and interpreters of dreams, as well as these who profess to be inspired, are all hars. Again, "should anyone take the name of any saint, or invoke his aid in the time of need, instead of calling on God, or use his name in attacking an enemy, or read passages to propitiate him, or make him the object of contemplation-it 18 Shirku 'l-'ilm'

(2) Shirku 't-tasarruf is to suppose that anyone has power with God. He who looks up to enyone as an intercessor with God commits Shirk Thus "But they who take others beside Him as lords, saying, 'We only serve them that they may bring us near God, —God will judge between them (and the Faithful) concerning that wherein they are at variance." (Sûrah xxxix 4) Intercession may be of three kinds For example a criminal is placed before the King The Vizier intercedes The King, having regard to the rank of the Vizier, pardons the of-fender This is called Shafā'at-i-Wajākak, or "intercession from regard" But to suppose that God so esteems the rank of anyone as to pardon a sinner merely on account of it is Shirk Again, the Queen or the Princes intercede for the criminal. The King, from love to them, pardons him This is called Shafa'at-1-mahabbah, or "intercession from affection" But to consider that God so loves anyone as to pardon a criminal on his account is to give that loved one power, and this is Shirk, for such power is not possible in the Court of God "God may out of His bounty confer on His favourite servants the epitheta of Habib, 'favourite,' or Khalil, friend, do., but a servant is but a servant, no one can put his foot outside the limits of servitude, or rise beyond the rank of a servant" Again, the King may himself with to pardon the offender, but he feare lest the majesty of the law should be lowered The Vinter perceives the King's wish, and intercedes. This intercession is lawful. It is called Shafe'at-1-ba-12n, intercession by permission," and such power Muhammad will have at the Day of Judgment Wahhābīs permussion," hold that he has not that power new, though all other Musalmans consider that he has, and in consequence (in Wahhabi opinion) commit the sin of Shirku't-tasar, of The Wahhabis quote the following passages in apport of their view "Who is he that can intercede with Him but by His own per-mission" (Surah ii 256) "Say Intercession is wholly with God! His the kingdoms of the heavens and of the earth." (Surah xxxix 45) They also say "Whenever an allusion is made in the Qur'an, or the Traditions to the intercession of certain prophets or apostles, it is this kind of intercession and no other that is meant

(3) Shirku 'l-'Ibādah is prostration before any created being, with the idea of wor shipping it, perambulating the shrines of departed saints "Prostration, bowing down standing with folded arms, spending money in the name of an individual, fissing out of respect to his memory, proceeding to a distant shrine in a pilgrim's garb and calling out the name of the saint." It is wrong "to cover the grave with a sheet, to say prayers at the shrine, to kiss any particular stone, to rub the mouth and breast against the walls of the shrine, &c" This is a stern condemnation of the very common practice of visiting the tombs of saints and of some of the special practices of the pilgrimage to Makkah. All such practices as are here condemned are called Ishrāk fī 'l-'Ibādah, "association in worship"

(4) Shirku 'l-'ādah is the keeping up of superstitious customs, such as the letichārah, seeking guidance from beads, &c., trusting to omens, good or bad, belisving in lucky and unlucky days, adopting such names as 'Abdu n-Nabī (Slave of the Prophet), and so on. In fact, the denouncing of such practices and calling them Shirk brings Walchbabūlam into daily contact with the other sects, for scarcely any people in the world are such profound behavers in the virtue of charms and the power of astrologers as Musalmāns. The difference between the first and fourth Shirk, the Shirku 'l-'adah, seems to be that the first is the belief, say in the knowledge of a sooth-sayer, and the second the habit of consulting him.

To swear by the name of the Prophet, of 'Ali, of the Imiss, or of Pirs (Leaders) is to give them the henour due to God alone. It is Ishrāk fi 'l-adab, "Shirk in association" [WAHRARI]

SHIRKAH ((%,)) "Partnership"
The term signifies the union of two or more persons in one concern. It is applied in Muslim law to contracts as well as to partnerships Sharkah, or association, with regard to the essence and person of God, is forbidden in Islâm

SHIS (هيث ). [aeth]

SHOES The removal of the sandals, shoes, or boots, from the feet upon entering either a mosque or house, or during worship, is not enjoined in Muhammadan law although it has become a common custem in all Eastern countries, for the modern Muslim uncovers his test upon entering the Ka'bah at Makkah (Burekhardts Arabia, vol. 1 p 270), the Muhammadans of Palestine remove the shoes upon entering their places of worship (Robinson's Researches, vol 11 p 36) and it is also the practice to take off the shoes in Egypt (Lane, vol. i pp_16, 105, vol. ii. p. 11), and in Hindustan

The number of traditions which prove that Muhammad allowed his followers to worship with their feet covered, is very numerous, and they are held to be Adding of good authority, and supported by the fatteds of sininess doctors of law

Shaddad ibn Aus relates that the Prophet said, "Act the reverse of the Jews in your prayers, for they do not pray in bonts or shoes."

Abu Sa'id al-Khudri says "the Prophet said his prayers with the Companions, and suddenly took off his shoes, and put them down on his left side, and when the people observed it, they took off theirs also, and when prayers were flushed, the Prophet asked why they took their shoes off The Companions replied, 'We followed your example' The Proph t then said, 'Verrly Gabriel came to me and told me there was a little filth on Therefore, when any of you enter my shoes a mosque, look well at your shoes, and if you percente any dut on them, wipe it off, and then say your prayer in them."

"Amr ibn Shu'aib relates that he saw the Prophet saying his prayers sometimes with ins shoes and sometimes without (Mishkat, book iv ch 9)

In the Hidayah it is enjoined that when there a any uncleanness on the shoom, such as dung, blood, &c, they must be rubbed with earth, and then they become legally clean and fit for worship Arabic edition, vol 1 p 26)

This is confirmed by the Durru'l Mulhtar (vol 1 pp 80, 65), and by unmerous tradi-

(Mishkat, book in ch 11)

If the dut cannot be removed from the shoes by rubbing them with earth, the law permits the Muslim to make them coremonally clean by wetting his three fingers and drawing them once over the upper part of the shoos or boots

According to the Traditions, when a Muslim sits down on the floor, he should take off his shoes and place them on one side, and be should take off the right shoe first and then the left (Mishkut, book vx ch m)

SHROUD Arabic kajan (کفن) The act of shrouding is called takfin. wooden coffin is called tabut, the use of which is generally held to be forbidden by Sunnis but it is used by the Shi'sha

Muhammad is related to have said :-

"Do not be expensive in your abroads, for they soon rot.

"Plain white is the best for the shrouds of your dead "

"The bost cloth for a shroud is hullah" (i e. white striped cloth used in Arabia)

'Ayishah says "The Prophet was abronded in three garments but there was neither a cost nor a turban."

These three garments are still used as shrouds in all parts of Jelam

(1) Izar, a piece of cloth which covers from the waist to the foet.

(2) Reda, covering from the feet to the shoulders

(3) Liftifah, a large sheet covering the whole body from head to feet, and closed at the ends.

The bodies of martyrs are not shrouded, but are buried in the garments in which they fell, for it is related that Muhammad so ordered the men who fell in the battle of Uhud to be buried; their wespons being first removed from their bodies, they were buried in their blood-stamed clothes [BURIAL.]

SHU'AIB ( The Muslim commentators generally suppose Shu'arb to be the same person with the father-in-law of Moses, who is named in scripture Reuel or Rageul and Jethro But Ahmad ihn 'Abdi 1-Halim charges those who entertain this opinion with ignorance. They say (after the Jews) that he gave his son in-law [MOSES] that wonder-working rod with which he performed all those miracles in Egypt and the desert, and also gave excellent advice and mstruction, whence he had the surname of Khatibu 'l-Ambiya' (عطيب الانبياء), the "Preacher to the Prophets"

The account given of him in the Qur'an,

Sūrah vu. 88–91, 15 as follows –

"And vrto Midian did we send thour brother Shu'alb, who said, 'O my people! serve God, ye have no god save Him There has come to you a manifest sign from your Lord then give good weight and measure, and be not suggerdly of your gifts to men, and do not swil in the earth after it has been righted That is better for you if ye are believers, and sit not down in every path, threatening and turning from the path of God those who believe in Him, and craving to make it crooked Remember when ye were few and He multiplied you, and see what was the end of the evil doors! And if there be a party of you who believe in what I am sent with, and a party who believe not, then wait patiently until God judges between us, for He is the best of judges! Said the crowd of those who were big with pride amongst his people, 'We will of a surety turn thee out, O Shu'aib, and those who believe with thee, from our village, or else thou shalt return unto our faith. Said he, What even if we be averse therefrom? We shall have devised a he against God if we return unto your faith after Gou has saved us from it, and what should silus that we should isturn thereto, unless that God our Lord should please? Our Lord embraces everything in His knowledge, on God do we rely O our Lord' open between us and between our people in truth, for Thou art the best of those who open And the chiefs of those who disbelieved amongst his people said 'If ye follow Shu'aib, verily, ye shall be the lowers'. Then there took them the earthquake and in the morning they lay in their dwellings prom. Those who called Shu air a har, (were) as though they had not dwelt therein. Those who called Shu air a har the ware the losers. then! And he turned away from them and said, 'O my people' I proached to you the messages of my Lord, and I gave you good advice, how should Lbe vexed for a people who do musbeheve?'"

ABH-SHU'ARĀ (الشعراء) Poets" The title of the xxvith Surah of the Qur'an, so called because at the concinsion of the chapter the Arabian poets are severely consured. [POETS ] SHUF AH (Said) [PREEMPTION.]

ASH-SHÜRĀ (الغوري)) "The Consultation" The title of the xxxxxxx Sürsh of the Qur'an Taken from the 36th verse, in which the believers are commended for taking consultation together

SHURB (حرم) Let "Drinking" A term used for wine drinking, which is forbidden by the Mushm law. [DRUMKENNESS]

A word which occurs in the Quran, Surah u.

182 "The dow of God! And who is better than God at dycing? And we are worshippers of Him", which both Mr Sale and Mr Rodwell translate buptism, but which Professor Palmer says must be rendered "dye" According to al-Baizāwī, it stands in the text for the Islām of God, but refers to Christian baptism [BAPTISW]

SIDDIQ (حديد) "One who speaks the truth" It occurs in the Qur'an for Idris (generally identified with Enoch), who is described as a man of eminent truthfulness Professor Palmer translates the word "confessor" (see Surah xix. 57)

fessor" (see Sürah xıx. 57)

As-Suddıq is a title said to have been given to the first Khalifah Abü Bakr by Muhammad himself

SIDRATU 'L-MUNTAHA (أمنته) Let "The Lote-tree of the extremity" A tree in the seventh heaven, having its roots in the sixth Its fruits were like water-pots and its leaves like elophant's ears (Mishkāl, book xxiv ch. vii pt 1)

It is mentioned twice in the Qur'an, Sürah lm 8-18 --

"Then came he (Gabriel or the angel) nearer and approached,

And was at the distance of two bows, or even closer,—

And he revealed to his servant what he revealed

His heart falsified not what he saw

What will ye then dispute with him as to what he saw?

He had seen him also another time.

Near the Sidrah-tree, which marks the boundary

Near which is the garden of repose

When the Sidrah-tree was covered with what occurred it.

His eye turned not aside, nor did it wan-

For he saw the greatest of the signs of his Lord '

The Sidiah-tree is the Zizyphus nipuba of Linnaus, the prickly plum, which is called Ber in India. A decoction of its leaves is used in India to wash the dead, on account of the sacredness of the tree

SIFAH (dap) pl Sifat. An attribute Used for the attributes of God The Qur'an is also said to be a Sifah of the Almighty Ismu 's-Sifah, the name of an attribute, is a term applied to any of the ninety-nine names or attributes of God. [GOD] '

SIFATIYAH (Lith.) From Sifet, "attributes" A school of thought rather than a sect of Islam, although it is given by Mr Sale as one of the Muhammadan sects The orthodox Sunni claims to be a Sifati, or Attributist (as opposed to the Mutazilahs, who reject the idea of God's attributes being eternal), and maintains that the attributes of God are eternally inherent in His essence without separation or change, every attribute being conjoined with Him as life with knowledge, or knowledge with power With regard to the verses of the Quran which are held to be Mutashabih, and assign some resemblance between God and His creatures, the Sifatiyahs say the expressions "hands," "face," "sitting," &c., must simply be accepted as they stand, without any attempt at explanation [MUTAZILAH, WAHHABI]

As-SIHĀHU 'S-SITTAH (والمناز), also called al-Kutubu 's-Sittah (المناز) "The six correct (books)" The title given to the six most trustworthy collections of traditions received by Sunni Muslims, namely, those by—

(1) Abū Abdi 'liāh Muhammad ibn Isma'īl

al Bulhari, born A is 194, died A is 256
(2) Abn 'l Hussin Muslim ibn al-Hajjāj

al-Qushairi, born a H 204, died A.H. 261
(3) Abū Isa Muhammad ibn Isa I-Tirmazi,

born A H 209, died A H 279

(4) Abu Du'ud Sulaman ibn Ash'sa as-Sajastani, born AH 202, died AR 275

(5) Abu 'Abdı 'r-Rahman Ahmad ibn Shu'aib an-Nasa'i, born A.H. 215, died A.H. 303

(6) Abū 'Abdı 'Ilāh Muhammad ibn Yazīd, ibn Mājah, al-Qaswīnī, born A.E. 209, died AH 278

The above are generally esteemed the six authentic collections but some substitute for the Sunan Ibn Mājah the Munafta' of Abu 'Abdi 'llāh Mālik ibn Anas ibn Mālik ibn Abī 'Āmir ibn 'Amr ibn al-Hāris al-Asbahi al-Himyarī, born a # 95, died a.e. 179

(The above words in stalics denote the popular title of the collection.)

Al-Bukhārī and Muslim are held in highest reputation, and are called as Sabikān, or "the two authentics."

The collection by Mähk, the founder of the second orthodox sect of the Sunnis, is the most ancient collection of traditions, and is held in high reputation, but it is sometimes omitted from the list by the Hanafis, because he is the founder of a certain school of jurisprudence [TRADITIONS]

SIJDAH [BAJDAH]

SIJILI (jam) A register. The record of a court of justice The decree of a judge In the Quran, the word occurs when it is used for the angel which has charge of the register of the fate of mankind, or, according to others, it may mean the roll

Sürah ax: 104 "The day when we will roll up the heavens as as-Syill rolls up his books, as We produced it at the first creation, will we bring it back again."

SIJIN (coar). A deep pit in which is kept the register of the actions of the wicked, and hence this register itself Quran, Sürah ixxxii. 7, 8 "The book of the wicked is in Sijin, and what shall make thee know what Sijin is?—It is an inscribed book" (See also Mishkāt, book v ch iii pt. 3.)

SIKANDAR (مكندر) The Persian for Alexander, by which is meant Alexander the Great [zu 'L-Qarnain]

SIKHISM (from the Panjabi word sikh or sikhā-Sanskrit sishya, "a disciple" or "pupil") The religion of the Sikha in the Panjabi. Founded by Nānak, who was born in the village of Tslvandi (now known as Nankānā), on the banks of the river Rūvī, near Lahore, in a.d. 1469

The history of the Sikh religion has not vet been subjected to the scruting necessary to warrant strong dogmatism as to the ultimate source, or sources, whence the system of Nanak and his followers took its rise. The literature and traditions of Sikhism present a strange intermingling of Hindu and Muhammadan ideas, and this is so palpably apparent that even superficial inquirers have been led to conclude that Nanak purposely intended his creed to be a compromise between those two great religions. Dr. Trumpp, the able translator of the Adi Granth (the sacred book of the Sikhs), who is the only author that has written with knowledge on the subject, 14, however, distinetly of opinion that Sikhism has only an accidental relationship with Muhammadanism In the Introduction to his Translation of the Adı Grantk (p cı ), he says -

"It is a mistake, if Nanak is represented as having endeavoured to unite the Hindu and Muhammadan ideas about God Nanak remained a thorough Hindu, according to all his views, and if he had communionship with Musalmans, and many of these even became his dissiples, it was owing to the fact that Süfism, which all these Muhammadans were professing, was in reality nothing but a Pantheism, derived directly from Hindu sources, and only outwardly adapted to the forms of the Islam Hindu and Muslim Pantheists could well unite together, as they entertained essentially the same ideas about the Supreme."

If the foregoing opinion accurately represents the real truth, then Sikhiam hardly deserves mention in the present work, but it will soon he seen that the balance of evidence is heavily on the other side. A careful investigation of early Sikh traditions points strongly to the conclusion that the religion of Nanak was really intended as a compremise between Hindhism and Muhammadanism, if it may not even be spoken of as the religion of a Manan-madan seqt. The very little that seems to be known as to the views of the early bikh teachers, coupled with the decided opinion pair forth by Dr. Trumpp, has made it necessary to give here a longer article on Sikhism than its importance with respect to Islam would have otherwise warranted, because it was necessary to establish the relationship which astually existed between the two faiths. It will be seen that the information given in this article is chiefly taken from original Panjabi books, and from manuscripts in the India Office Library, and it is supported by the authority of the Adi Granth which is the sacred canon of the Sikhs

The Janum-Sakhus, or biographical sketches of Nanak and his associates contain a profusion of curious traditions which throw considerable light on the origin and development of the Sikh religion From these old books we learn that in early life, Nunak, although a Handa by burth, came under Sufa miluence, and was strangely attracted by the saintly demeanour of the fagins who were thickly scattered over Northern India and swarmed in the Panjab Now, Süfnen is not. as Dr Trumpp supposes, due to Hindu pantheism, for it arose in the very earliest days of Muhammadarism, and is almost cortainly due to the influence of Persian Zoroastrianism on the rude faith of Arab Islam-19m Persia has ever been the stronghold of Suffictic doctrine, and the leading writers who have illustrated that form of Muhammadanum have been the Persian poets Firdusi, Nizāmī, Sa'dı Jalalu d Din Hafiz, and Jāmī.

Hafir, the prince of Safi posts, boldly declares "I am a disciple of the old Magian. be not angry with me, O Shukh! For thon gavest me a promise he hath brought me the reality." Although this stanza alludes directly to two persons known to Haftz, its almost obvious meaning is "I a Persian adhere to the faith of my ancestors. Do not blame me, O Arab conqueror! that my faith is more sublime than thine." That Hafix meant his readers to take his words in a gene ral sense, may be inferred from the stanza in which he says "I'am the servent of the old man of the tavern (se. the Magian) because his beneficence is lasting on the other hand, the beneficence of the Shaikh and of the Sai yid at times is, and at times is not " Indeed. Haffz was fully conscious of the fact that buffism was due to the influence of the faith of his ancestors, for, in another ede, ne plainly says "Make fresh again the essence of the creed of Zeroaster, new that the tubp has kindled the fire of Nunrod." And Nizami, also, was aware that his ideas were perilously akin to heterodoxy, for, he says in his Khusrk wa Shrin " See not in me the guide to the temple of the Fire worshippers, see only the hidden meaning which cleaveth to the alle-gory" These citations, which could be indefinitely multiplied, sufficiently indicate the Zoroastrian origin of the refined aprintuality of the Sufis The sublimity of the Persian faith lay in its conception of the unity of I ternal Spirit, and the intimate association of the Divine with all that is manifest. Arab M hammadane believe in the unity of a per schal God, but mankind and the world were, to them, mere objects upon which the will of God was exercised. The Sufis approached nearer to the Christian sentiment embodied in the phrase, " Christ in us"

The Persian conquerors of Hindustan carried with them the mysticism and spirituality of the Islamo Magian creed It was through of the Islamo Magnan creed Persia that India received its flood of Muhammadenism, and the mysticism and asceticism of the Persian form of Islam found congenial soil for development among the speculative ascetice of northern India. It is, therefore, only ressenable to suppose that any Hindu affected by Muhammadanism would show some traces of bufi influence fact we find that the doctrines preached by the Sikh Gurus were distinctly Suffistic, and, indeed the carly Gurus openly assumed the manners and dress of fagirs, thus plainly announcing their connection with the Suffistic side of Muhammadanism In pictures they are represented with small resaries in their hands, quite in Muhammadan fashion, as though ready to perform sike Guru Arjun, who was fifth in succession from Nanak, was the first to lay aside the dress of a faqir The doc trines, however, still held their position, for we find the last Guru dying while making an open confession of Suffism His words are "The Smritis, the Sastias, and the Vedas, all speak in various ways I do not ac-knowledge one (of them) O possessor of hap-mess, bestow thy morey (on me) I do not say 'I, I recognise all as 'Thee' (Sikhān de Ray de Vethi a p 81) Here we have not only the ideas, but the very language of Suis implying a pantheistin denial of all else than Deity The same manner of expression is found in the 4th Granth itself, eg "Thou art I, I am thou. Of what kind is the difference?" (Translation, p 180), and again, 'In all the One dwells, the One is contained" (p 41) Indeed, throughout the whole Adv Granth, a favourite name for Deity is the "True One," that is, that which is truly one-the Absolute Unity It is hardly possible to find a more complete correspondence of ideas than thui furnished by the following sentences, one taken from the Yusuf we Kulinkha of Jami the Persian Sufi, and the others, from the Jap-ji and the 4di Granth Janu says —

"Dismiss every vam fancy, and abandon every doubt,

Blend into one every spurit, and form, and place,

See One—know One—speak of One— Desire One—chant of One—and seek One

In the Jup-ys, a formula familiar to every Sikh household, we find —

"The Guru is Isar (Siva), the Guru is Gorakh (Viehnu), Brahmā, the Guru is the mother Pārbati I should know, would I not tell? The story cannot be told O Gura, let me Know the One; that the One liberal patron of all living beings may not be forgotten by me."

In the Adi Granth, we read -

"Thou recitest the One, thou placest the One in (thy) mind, thou recognizest the One.

The One (is) m eye, in word, in mouth, thou knowest the One in both places (se worlds).

In sleeping the One, in waking, the One, in the One thou art absorbed."
(India Office MS, No 2184, fol 568)

It is not only with respect to the sdea of the unity of Ged that this Identity of expression is discernible, for other technical terms of Süfüsm are, also, reproduced in Sikhism. Thus the Şūiı Farıdu 'd Din Shakrgani calls Doty "the light of life," and Jalain 'd-Din speaks of "flathes of His love," while Jami ropresents the "light' of the Lord of Angels as animating all parts offthe universe, and Nizāmī exclaims, "Then fell a light, as of a lamp, into the garden (of my heart)," when he feels that a ray of the Divine has entered into his soul It is not difficult to collect many such instances from the works of Persian Sufis Turning to Sikhism, we find that the Adi Granth is full of similar expressions. It is enough to cite the following exclamation of Nanak himself "In all (18) light. He (18) light From His light, there is light in all." (India Office MS, No 2484, tol 35) And in another place he says "The Luminous One is the mingler of light (with himself)" (fol 186) On fol 51 we find "There death enters not , light is absorbed in the Luminous One Another favourite metaphor of Salis for the Deity is "the Beloved", for example, when Klaiz says "Be thankful that the Assembly is lighted an by the presence of the Beloved" This term is well recognized in 5thism, thus in the Adi Granth, "If theo cull thyself the servant of the Beloved, do not speak despitefully (of Kim) (India Office MS. No 2484, fol 564) "Love to the Beloved naturally puts joy into the heart I long to neet the Lord (Prabhu), therefore why should I be slothful." (India Office MS. 2484 fol 177) Also, "In my soul and body are excessive pangs of separation, how shall the Beloved come to my house and meet (with me)?" And again "The Beloved has become my physician." (India Office MS. No 1728, fol. 87) The words used in the Pinjäbi texts are puriā pritam, and put, "a lover," or "beloved one"

Another remerkable proof of Persian influence is found in the form of the Adi Granth itself. It consists of a collection of short poems, in many of which all the verses composing the poem rhyme together, in singular conformity with the principle regulating the construction of the Persian ghasal. This resemblance is rendered more striking by the fact that the name of Nanak is worked into the composition of the last line of each of the poems. This last characteristic is too nt to be considered the result of t, and while it is altogether foreign practice of Hindu verse, it is in accord with the rule for the correct tion of the ghazal foregoing facts seem conclusive as to sence of Persian Suffism on the origin sikh religion. Dr Trumpp, when disthe philosophy of the Ad Granth, the intimate connection between Sikh-Stiffism in the following words can distinguish in the Granth a grosser ner kind of Pantheism. In this ade of Pantheism, creation assumes n of emanation from the Supreme (as system of the Sufis), the atomic is either likewise considered co-eternal e Absolute and immanent in it, bemoulded into various, distinct forms mergizing vigour of the absolute jots or, the reality of matter is more or sed (as by the Sufis, who call it the μη ον) so that the Divine jots is the al essence in all "---(Introduction to tion of the Adi Granth, pp c ei) doubt that may remain on the quesms to be set at rest by the express nt in the life of Guru Aljun, who was y his followers to reduce to writing une utterances of Nanak, because" by the numerous verses and speeches y other Suf is, which have received the Bābā Nānak, pride and worldly wisspringing up in the hearts of men de Raj di Vithi a, p 29) And in the anth itself, we find the following rele verses ascribed to Nanak ball of intoxication, of delusion, is iven by the Giver mtoxicated forget death, they enjoy hemselves four days a True One is found by the Sof is, who eep fast his Court"

(Translation, p 23) have not only a plain claim of kinth the Sufis, but the incorporation of of their favourite terms traditions of Nanak preserved in the Sukhi, are full of evidences of his with Muhammadanism. He was a birth, of the Vedi Khattri caste, the son of the patwars, or villageant, of the place now called Nankana, neighbourhood of Labore In his rly days, he sought the society of and used both fair and unfair means them service, more especially in the l of alms. At fifteen years of age, he opriated the money which his father in him for trade, and this induced his to send him to a relative at Sultanpur, that he might be weared from his for fagirs (India Office MS No 1 29) His first act in his new home join the service of a Muhammadan named Daulat Khan Lodi , and while him, he continued to give to fagira alary except the bare maintenance he i for himself While in the service of this Muhammadan, Nänak received the ecstatic exaltation which he felt to be Divine inspiration. It is stated in the tradition of his life, that Nanak went to the river to perform his ablutions, and that whilst so engaged, he was translated bodily to the gates of Paradise. "Then a goblet of amrita (the water of life) was given (to him) by command (of God) The command was 'This amrita is the goblet of my name, drink thou it' Then the Gura Nanak made salutation, and drank the goblet. The Lord (Sāhib) had mercy (and said) Nānak, I am with thee, I have made thee happy, and whoever shall take thy name they all shall be rendered happy by me Go thou, repeat my name, and cause other people to repeat it Remain uncontaminated from the world Continue (steadfast) in the name; in alm- giving, in ablutions, in service, and in the remembrance (of me) I have given to thee my own name do thou this work " (fol 33) Here we have notions closely akin to those of the Sufis, who lay much stress on the repetition of the name of God, which they term ZIKR [qv], on religious ablutions [wazv', qt], and on meditating on the unity of God [WAH-DANIYAM, q 1 ] No sconer had Nanak recovered from us trance than he uttered the key-note of his future system in the celebrated phrase, "There is no Hindu, and there is no Musalman" (fol 36) The Janam Sakhi then goes on to say that, "The people went to the Khan (his former employer) and said, Baba Nanak is saving, There is no Hindu, there no Musalman. The Khan replied, 'Do not regard his statement, he is a faqir.' A Qazī sitting near said. 'O Khan! it is surprising that he is saying there is no Hindu and no Musalman ' The Khan then told an attendant to call Nanak, but the Guru Nanak said 'What have I to do with thy Khun?' Then the people said 'This stupid is become mad'

Then the Baba (Nanak) was silent When he said anything, he repeated only this statement 'There is no Hindu, there is no The Qazī then said 'Khan, is Musalman it right that he should say There is no Hindu, there is no Musaiman ? Then the Khan said 'Go fetch him' The attendant went, and 'Sir the Khan is calling (you) The Khan says For God's sake give me an interview [Pan] aj barā Khudo i de tān i = Persian az bara, Khuda] I want to see thee' The Guru Nanak arose and went, saying 'Now the summous of my Lord (Sahib) is come, I He nin ed a staff upon his neck and The Khan said hansk, for God's will go went sake take the staff from off thy neck, gird up thy waist thou art a good faqīr ' Then Guru Nanak took the staff from off (ins) neck and girded up his loins The Khan said 'O Nanak, it is a misfortune to me that a stemard such as thou shouldst become a fagir ' Then the Khan seated the Guru Nanak near himself and said 'Qazi, if thou desirest to ask anything, ask now, otherwise this one will not again utter a word' The Qazi becoming friendly, smiled and said 'Nanak, what dost thou mean by saying, There is no Hindu, there is no Musalman' Nanak Te-phed 'To be called a Musalman is difsuit, when one (becomes it) then he may be called a Musalman First of all, Laving made religion (din) sweet, he clears away Musalman wealth Having become firm رمسلم), religion (dm) in this way brings to an and the revolution of dving and hving '-(1 0 MS, 2484, fol 84) When Nanak had nttered this verse, the Qari became amazed. The Khan said 'O Qari is not the questioning of him a mistake?' The time of the afternoon prayer had come 'll arose and went (to the mosque) to prayers, and the Baba (Nanak) also went with them" Nanak then domonstrated his supernatural power by reading the thoughts of the Quzi "Then the Quzi came and fell Wonderful, down at his feet exclaiming wonderful! on this one is the favour of God' Then the Qizi believed, and Nanak uttored this stanza 'A (real) Musalmar claris away purity of speech (what 18) erect he does not annoy (what) hes (dead) he does not est O Nänak! that Musalman goes to heaven (bihisht)' When the Baba had uttered this stanza, the Salyids, the sons of the Sharkhs, the Qazi, the Mufti, the Khan, the chiefs and leaders were amazed. The Khan said Qazi, Manak has reached the truth, the additional questioning is a mistake Wher ever the Baba looked, there all were saluting him After the Baba had recited a few stanzas, the Khan came and fell down at his feet Then the people, Hindus and Musal mans, began to say to the Khān that God (Khudā) was speaking in Nanak" (India Office MS 1728 fol. 36-41)

The foregoing ancedotes are taken from the India Office MS No 1726, but the ordinary Janum-Sakhis current in the Panjab vary the account somewhat by saying that when the Khan reproved Nanak for not coming to him when sent for, the latter replied "'Hear, O Nawab, when I was thy servant I came before thee now I am not thy servent, now I am become the servant of Khuda (God) ' The Nawab said 'Sir, (if) you have become such, then come with me and say prayers (niwāj = nimāz, see prayer) It is Friday' Nānak said 'Go, Sir' The Nawab, with the Qazi and Nănak, and a great concourse of people, went into the Jami' Masjid and stood there the people who came into the Masjid began to say, 'To-day Nanak has entered this sect' There was a commetion among the respect able Hindus in Sultanpur, and Jairum, being much gneved, returned home Nanaki perceiving that her husband came home dejected, rose up and said, 'Why is it that you are to-day so grieved?' Jairam replied 'Listen, O servant of Paramesur (God), what has thy brother Nanak done : He has gone, with the Nawab, into the Jami' Masjid to pray, and, in the city, there is an outery among the Hindue and Musalmans that Nanak has beoffice MS, No 2885, fol 89) (India

that the immediate successors of Nanak believed that he went very close to Muham madanism, and we can scarcely doubt the accuracy of their view of the matter, when we consider the almost contemporaneous character of the record, from which extracts have been given, and the numerous confirmatory evidences contained in the religion itself It is particularly worthy of remark that a 'cup of america" (i.e. immortality) is considered the symbol of inspiration, just as Hafiz exclaims, "Art thou searching, O Hafig, to find the waters of eternal life : " And the same poet expresses his own ecstasy in a way almost identical with the reception accorded to Nanak at the gate of Paradise His words are "Then he gave into my hand a cup which flashed back the splendour of Heaven so gloriously, that Zuhrah broke out into dancing and the lute-player exclaimed, 'Drink!'" The staff (muttaka) that is men tioned is, also, that of a faqir, on which a devotee supports himself while in meditation Another significant fact is that when Nansk speaks of himself as the servant of God, be employs the word Khuda, a Persian Muhammadan term, but when his brother-in-law Jarram speaks of God, he uses the Hundu word Paramena It will, also be noticed that Muhammadans are affected by the logic and plety of Nanak, and to them he shows I imself so partial that he openly accompanies them to the mosque, and thereby causes his Hindu neighbours and friends to believe that he is actually converted to the faith of Islam But, of course, the most remarkable expression of all is the emphatic and repeated announcement that "There is no Hindū; there is no Musalmān" This can mean nothing else than that it was Nanak's settled intention to do away with the differences between those two forms of behef, by instituting a third course which should supersede both of them

Nanak's whilom employer, in consequence of the foregoing manifestations of wisdom, became his devoted admirer After this, Nanak undertook a missionary tour, and it is noticeable that the first person he went to and converted was Shaikh Sajan (P.), who showed himself to be a pious Muhammadan Nanak then proceeded to Panipat, and was met by a certain Shaikh Tatibar, who accosted him with the Muhammadan greeting, "Peace be on thee, O Darvesh'" (Salam-āleka Durves), to which Nanak immediately replied, "And upon you be peace, O servant of the Pir! (aleka us-salamu, he Pir Le dasta-pee)." (India Office MS, No 1728, fol. 48) Here we find Nanak both receiving and giving the Muhammadan salutation, and also the ac knowledgment that he was recognized as a darvesh The Panjabi form of the Arabic salutation is given lest it might be thought that the special character of the words is due to the translation. The disciple then called his master, the Pir Shaikh Sharaf, who repeated the salutation of peace, and after a long conversation acknowledged the Divine mission of Nanak, kissed his hands and feet, and left him (fol. 52.) After the departure of this Pir, the Guru Nānak wandered on to Dehli, where he was introduced to Sultān Ibrahīm Lodi, who also called him a darvesk The previous conversations and acts are found to have awakened the curiosity of Nānak's attendant Maidānā, who asked in surprise "Is God, then, one?" To which Nānak firmly replied "God (Khudā) is one" (fol. 55.) This was intended to satisfy Mardānā that there is no difference between the Muhammadan and the Hindū God

Nansk is next said to have proceeded to the holy city of Benares, and there he met with a Pandit named Satrudas The MS 1728 (fol. 56) says "He came to this Nanak, and cried, 'Ram ! Ram!' Seeing his (Nanak's) disguise (bhekhu), he sat down, and said to him, O dovotee (bhaqat), thou hast no sāligram, no necklace of tulsi, no rosary, no tika of white elay, and then callest (thyself) a devotee' What devotion hast thou obtained?'" In other words, the Pandit 18 made to challenge his piety, because he has none of the marks of a Hindu upon him Nanak explains his peculiar position and views, and is reported to have converted the Hindu Pandit to his own way of think ing This anecdote, also, shows that the immediate successors of Nanak were aware that their great Guru occupied an intermediate position between Muhammadanism and Hinduism, for we see that he is made to convert Muhammadans on the one hand and Hindus on the other After this primary attack on Hinduism, Nanak is said to have converted some Jogis, Khattris, Thags, necromancers, witches, and even the personined Kahyug, or present age of the world These conquests over imaginary Hindüs are obviously allegorical, though they clearly point to a well recognized distinction between the teaching of Nanak and that of orthodox Hinduism

The most significant associate which Nanak found was, undoubtedly, Sharkh Farid He was a famous Muhammadan Pii and a strict bull, who attracted much attention by his piety, and formed a school of devotees of his own. Shaikh Farid must have gained considerable notoriety in his day, for his special disciples are still to be found in the Panjab, who go by the name of Sharkh Farid's fagirs This strict Muhammadan became the confidential friend and companion of Nanak, and if all other traditions had failed, this alone would have been enough to establish the eclectic character of early Sikhism flist grooting of these famous men is significant enough Shakh Faild exclaimed, "Allah, Allah, O Darvesh", to which Nanak replied, "Allah is the object of my efforts, O Farid! Come, Shaikh Farid! Allah, Allah (only) is over my object." The words in the original being Allah, Farid, juhdi, hamesa au, Sekh Farid, juhd, Allah Allah (India Office MS., No 1728, fol. 86) The use of the Arabic term juid implies the energy of the purpose with which he sought for Allah, and the whole phrase is forcibly Muhammadan in tone.

An intimacy at once sprang up between these two remarkable men, and Sharkh Farid accompanied Nanak in all his wanderings for the next twelve years. The intended compromise between Hindüism and Islam is shown not only in the fact of this friendship, but in the important circumstance that no less than 142 stanzas composed by Shaikh Farid are admitted into the Adv Granth itself An examination of these verses still further proves the mingling of the two religions which Nanak effected. They are distinctly Süffistic in tone, containing such lines as, "Youth is passing, I am not afraid, if love to the Beloved does not pass"; and still more pointedly, "Full of sins I wander about, the world calls me a Darvesh", while, between these declarations of steady adherence to Islam, comes the remarkable Hindu line, "As by fire the metal becomes purified, so the fear of Ham removes the filth of folly" The fact that the compositions of a genuine Suil should have been admitted into the canonical book of the Sikhs, and that they should con tain such a clear admixture of Hindu and Muhammagan ideas, is conclusive evidence that Nanak, and his immediate successors, saw no incongruity in the mixture

As soon as Nanak and his friend Shaikh Farid begin to travel in company, it is related that they reached a place called Bisi ar, where the people applied cow dung to every spot on which they had stood, as soon as they departed (I O MS, No 1728, fol 94) The obvious meaning of this is, that orthodox Hindus considered every spot polluted which Nanak and his companion had visited. This could never have been related of Nanak had he remained a Hindu by religion. In his next journey Nanak is said to have visited Patan and there he met with Shaikh Ibrahim, who saluted him as a Muslim, and had a conversation with him on the Unity of God Nanak expressed his views in the following openly Suffictic manner " Thou thyself (art) the wooden tablet, thou (art) the pen, thou (art) also the writing upon (it) O Nanak, why should the One be called à second?" (India Office MS 1728, fol. 117) The Pir asks an explanation of this verse in these words "Thou sayest, There is One, why a second?' but there is one Lord (Saht), and two traditions Which shall I accept, and which reject? Thou sayest, 'The only One, he alone is one, but the Hindus are saving that in (their) faith there is certainty, and the Musalmans are saying that only in (their) faith is there certainty Tell me, 10 which of them is the truth, and in which is there falsity?" Nanak replied, "There is only one Lord (Sant), and only one tradi-tion" (fol 119) This anecdote serves still further to illustrate the intermediate position between the two religions ascribed to Nanak by his immediate followers

Shortly after the foregoing episode, Nānak was captured among the prisoners taken by the Emperor Babar, who seems to have been attracted by the Gura's piety, and to have shown him some attentions. The chromeler informs us that "all the people, both Hindus and Musalmans, began to salute (Nānak) (fol. 137) After his release, Nānak recommenced his missionary work, and is described as meeting a Muhammadan named Miyan Mithā, who called upon him for the Kalmah [see Ralmah], or Muhammadan confession of faith (fol. 143), which leads to a long conversation, in which Nanak lays emphasis on the Sūfi doctrine of the Unity of God. In this conversation Nānak is made to say "The book of the Qur'ān should be practised' (fol. 144.) He also acknowledged that "justice is the Qur'ān." (fol. 148.) When the Miyan asked him what is the one great name, Nanak took him aside and whispered in his ear, "Allah" [GOD] Immediately the great name is ut tered, Miyān Mithā is consumed to ashes, but a celestial voice sgain utters the word "Allah!" and the Miyān regums hife and falls at the feet of Nanak (fol. 147.)

falls at the feet of Nanak (fol 147)

Nanak then proceeded to convert some Jamas, and even a Rākshasas, or Hindū demon, and reat went to Multān, where he converted the famous Pir Makhdum Baha u 'd-Dīn. In Kashmu he met with i Hindu Pandit who recognized him as a sadha, or virtuous person, has asked him why he had abandoned caste usages, why he wore sams, and after meat and fish. The Pandit's accupies having been satisfied he flung away his idols, and became a devoted believer in Nanak's doctrines. This anecdote again fullinables with distinct evidence that Nanak took up an intermediate position between Islam and Hindūism, and sought to bring both under one common system

In precise conformity with this deduction is the tradition of Nanak's pilgrimage to Makkah. The particulars of his visit to that holy place are fully given, in all accounts of Nanak's life and although, as Dr Trumpp reasonably concludes, the whole story is a fabrication, yet the mere invention of the tale is enough to prove that those who most intimately knew Nanak considered his relationsh p to Mulicum idamsm sufficiently close to warrant the belief in such a pilgrim-In the course of his teaching in Mak ksh, Nansk is made to say "Though men they are like women, who do not obey the Sunnat, and Divine commandment, nor the order of the bok (ie the Quran) (10 MS No 1728, fol 212) He also admitted the intercession of Muhammad, denounced the drinking of bhang, wine, &c, acknowledged the existence of hell, the punishment of the wicked, and the resurrection of mankind, in fact, the words here ascribed to Nanak contam a full confession of Islam These tenets are, of course, due to the narrator of the tale, and are only useful as showing how far Nanak's followers thought it possible for him to go

A curious modert s next related to the effect that Makhdum Bahā'n'd-Din, the Pir of Multān, feeling his end approaching, said to his disciples, 'O friends, from this time the faith of no one will remain firm, all will become faithless (be-iman)" His disciples asked for an explanation, and in reply he delivered himself of an oracular "O friends, when one Hindū sha Heaven (bihishi), there will be (ujālā) in Heaven" To this st nouncement his disciples replied, people say that Heaven is not d the Hindū, what is this that you hi (I O MS 1728, fol. 224) The Pithat he was alluding to Nānak at of his disciples to ask Nānak if he received an intimation of his at death

In this anecdote we have the ext admission from a Muhammadan tl would succeed in breaking up th Islam It is in consequence of having conquered Heaven itself, cated his right to a place in the ; Muhammad, that those who were fault of the Prophet would lose co. Here again the his teaching ployed are useful, for the Pir u m that Muslims will become be-iman, ! term specially applicable to the Islam and Heaven is called in th story bhisat, that is bihisht, the F Muhanimadans [see PARADISE], fo Hindû heaven been intended, some as swarg, or paralok, or Brahmalok v been used

The final incident in the life o hightened teacher is in precise accou that has been said of his former care came to the bank of the Ravi to d formity with Hindu custom-by th natural stream of water It is exp that both Hindus and Muslim panied him He then seated hims foot of a Sarth tree, and his Assen faithful (Sangat) stood around him asked him what their position was t he told them to subordinate ther the Guiu Angad whom he had ap his successor They were to succ power or dignity merely on the relationship, no hereditary claim recognized, on the contrary, the frankly told to consider themse entities. The words are "Sons, dogs of the Guru are not in want, clothes will be plentiful, and si mutter 'Guru' Guru' (your) 'if (properly) adjusted '(I O MS 1721 The anecdote then proceeds in the remarkable manner "Then the H Musalmans who were firm in the God), began to express themselve the Musalmans said, 'We will bur and the Hindus said, 'We will bu Then the Baba said 'Place flower sides, on the right side those of th on the left side those of the Musaim we may perceive) whose will contil to-morrow If those of the Hin green, then burn (me), and if the Musalmans keep green, then bu Then the Baba ordered the Ass repeat the praises (of God), and sembly began to repeat the praise ingly [After a few verses had been

he laid down his head. When the sheet (which had been stretched over him) was raised, there was nothing (under it), and the flowers of both (sides) remained green. The Hindus took away theirs, and the Musalmäns took away theirs. The entire Assembly fell to their feet." (I O MS 1728, fol 239, 240)

The mixture of Hindusm and Muhammadanism is evident in this tradition. obviously intended to summarize the life of Nanak and the object of his teaching not represented as an outcaste and a failure, on the other hand, his purposes are held to have been fully accomplished. The great triumph was the establishment of a common basis of religious truth for both Muhammadan and Hindu, and this he is shown to have accomplished with such dexterity that at his death no one could say whether he was more inclined to Hinduism or to Muhamma danism His friends stood around him at the last moment quite uncertain as to whether they should dispose of his remains as those of a Muhammadan, or as those of a Hindu And Nänak is represented as taking care that the matter should ever remain a moot point The final miraculous disappearance of the corpse is obviously intended to convey the idea that Nanak belonged specially neither to one party nor to the other, while the green and flourishing appearance of the flowers of both parties conveys the lesson that it was his wish that both should live together in harmony and union The nari itor of the life clearly wishes his history to substantiate the prophetic statement recorded at the courmencement of his book (I O MS 1728, fol 7) that, at Nanak's birth, "The Hindus said The manifestation of some God (1) rate has been produced, and the Musalmans said, Some holy man (sadig) of (rod (Khada) has been born '"

The most potent cause of the uncertainty as to Nänak a true position in the religious world, arises from the unitial fact that he was born a Hindu, and necessarily brought up in that form of belief He was a perfectly uneducated man, there being no recson to suppose that he could either read or waite, or perform any other literally first beyond the composition of extemporan one verses in his mother tengue Guin \1 an the tourth successor of Nanak, appears to have been the Arst chieftain of the frateinity who could read The necessary result of \unak's and write early associations was that all his ideas throughout life were substantially Hindu, his mode of the ght and expression was Hindu, his illustrations were taken from Hindu sources, and his system n is based on Hindu models It must be borne in mind that Nanak never openly secoded from the pale of Hinduism, or ever centemplated doing 50 Thus in the Sakhi of Mayon Witha it is related that towards the end of Nanak s life a Muhammadan named Shāh Abdu 'r-Rahman acknowledged the great auvantages he had derived from the teaching of Nanak and sent his friend Miyan Mitha to the Guru so that he might derive similar benefit "Then Miyan Mitha said, 'What is his name? Is he a Hindu, or is he a Musalman?' Shah 'Abdu 'r-Rahman replied, 'He is a Hindu, and his name is Nanak'—(Sikhān de Rāj di Vithi,ā, p 258) He struck a heavy blow at Hinduism by his rejection of caste distinctions, and on this point there can be no doubt, for his very words, preserved in the Adi Granth, are "Thou (O Lord) acknowledgest the Light (the ray of the Divine in man), and dost not ask after caste In the other world there is no caste "-(Translation of the Ada Granth, 494) In consequence of this opinion Nanak admitted to his fraternity men of all castes, his constant companions being spoken of as Salyids and Sikha, that is, Muhammadan and Hindu pupils Sikhs have ever before them the intermediate character of their religion by the stanza (21) of the Jap-Ji, which says, "Pandits do not know that time, though written in a Purana, Qaris do not know that time, though written in the Qur an " Hindu scholars are told in the Adi Granth that they miss the true meaning of their religion through delusion · Reading and reading the Pandit explains the Veda, (but) the infatuation of Maya (delusion personined) lulis him to sleep. By reason of dual affection the name of Hari (1 e, God) is forgotten" (Translation p 117) In the same way Nānak turns to the Musalman and

"Thou must die, O Mulla! thou must die! remain in the fear of the Ore-ator!

Then thou art a Mullä then thou art a Qazī, if thou knowest the name of God (Ahuda)

None trough he be very learned, will remain, he hurries onwards

He is a Qazi by whom his own self is abandoned, and the One Name is made his support

He is, and will be, He will not be destroyed, time is the Creator

Five times he prais (use as augarhs), he reads the book of the Quasi "

(Translation, p 97) . Nanak does not seem to have been fastice no as to the name under which he recognized the Duty, he was more concerned with impressing on his companions a correct understanding of what Deity was The names Hau, Ram, Govind, Brahma, Parames'war, Khuda, Allah, &c., are used with perfect froedom, and are even mixed up in the same poem The most common name for God in the Adv Granth is certainly Ham, but that does not seem to have shocked the Muslim friends of Nanak Thus, in a poem addressed to Harr as "the invisible, maccessible, and infinite," we are told that, "Pus, prophets, sālīks, sādīgs, martvrs, shaikhs, muliās, and darveshes, a great blessing has come upon them, who combinually recite his salvation" -(Iranslation, p 75)

The chief point of Nannk's teaching was unquestionably the Unity of God. He set himself firmly against the idea of associating any other being with the Absolute Supreme This exalted idea of Divine Majesty enabled Nanak to treat with indifference the crowd To such a mmd as that of of Hmdū desties Nänak it would have been sheer waste of time to argue, with any earnestness, about the attributes, powers, or jurisdictions, of a class of beings, the whole of whom were subordinate to one great, almighty, and incom-prehensible Ruler Without any overt attack on the Hindu pantheon, he caused the whole cluster of deities to subside into a condition similar to that of angels in modern Christianity, whose existence and operations may be the subject of conversation, but the whole of whom sink into utter insignificance compared with the central idea of the Divine Majesty The One God, in Nanak's opinion (and, it may be added, in the opinion of all Suffis), was the creator of plurality of form, not the creator of matter out of nothing. The phenomenal world is the manifestation of Deity, and it is owing to pure deception that the idea of severalty exists In the Adi Granth we read-

"The cause of causes is the Creator
In His hand are the order and reflection
As He looks upon, so it becomes
He Himself, flimself is the Lord Whatever is made, (is) according to His own pleasure
He is far from all and with all
He comprehends soes, and makes discrimination
He Himself is One, and He Himself is many
He does not die nor perish, He neither comes nor goes

Nanak says He is always contained (in all) "---(Translation, p 400)

Notwithstanding this conception that the Supreme One comprehends both spirit and matter, and therefore is what is, He is nevertheless spoken of as in some way different from the creatures He has formed, and has been endowed with moral and intellectual qualities. Thus we find in the Adi Granth—

"Whose body the universe is, He is not in it, the Creator is not in it Who is putting (the things) together, He is always aloof (from them) in what can He be said (to be contained)?" (Translation, p. 474)

The soul of man is held to be a ray of light from the Light Divine, and it necessarily follows that, in its natural state, the soul of man is sinless. The impurity, which is only toe apparent in man, is accounted for by the operation of what is called Maya, or Delusion and it is this Māyā which deludes (reatures into egotism and duality, that is, into selfconsciousness or concert, and into the idea that there can be existence apart from the Divine This delusion prevents the pure soul from freeing itself from matter, and hence the spirit passes from one combination of matter to another, in a long chain of births and deaths, until the delusion is removed, and the entramelled ray returns to the

Divine Light whence it originally smanated The belief in metempsychosis is thus seen to be the necessary complement of pantheism, and it is essential to the creed of a Hindu, a Buddhist, and a Suff

In Sikhism, as in Buddhism, the prime object of attainment is not Paradise, but the total ossistion of individual existence. The method by which this release from transmigration is to be accomplished is by the perfect recognition of identity with the Supreme When the soul fully realizes what is summed up in the formula so ham, "I am that," se. "I am one with that which was, and is, and will be," then emancipation from the bondage of existence is secured. This is declared by Nanak himself in the Ads Granth in these words—

"Should one know his own self as the so ham, he believes in the esoteric mysters.

Should the disciple (Gur-mukhi) know his own self, what more can he do, or cause to be done?"—(I O MS 2484, fol 58)

The principles of early Sikhiam given above are obviously too recondite for acceptance among masses of men, accordingly we find that the pantheistic idea of Absolute Substance became gradually changed into the more readily apprehended notion of a self-conscious Supreme Being, the Creator and Governor of the universe. Here Dr Trumpp himself admits the influence of Muhammadanism, when he says "It is not improbable that the Islam had a great share in working allently these changes, which are directly opposed to the teaching of the Gurus"—(Introduction to Translation of the Adi Granth, p exit) The teaching of Nanak was, however, very practical. His followers are daily reminded in the Jap-Ji that, "Without the practice of virtue there can be no worship"

In all that has preceeded we have confined ourselves strictly to the intimate relationship subsisting between early Sikhism and the Muhammadan religion It is, however, need ful to allude to the fact that certain surviving relics of Buddhism had no small share in moulding the thoughts of the Founder of the Sikh religion A full examination of this part of the subject would be out of place in the present work. It must suffice to say that Buddhism held its position in the Panjab long after it had disappeared from other parts of Northern India, and the abundance of Buddhistic relics, which are continually being unearthed in the district, prove the wide-spread and long-continued influence of the tenets of the gentle-hearted Buddha Indications of this influence on early Sikhism are seen in its freedom from caste, in the respect for animal life, the special form of metempsy chosis accepted, the importance ascribed to meditation, the profuse charity, the reverence paid to the seat of the Guru (like the Buddhistic worship of the throne), Nänak's respect for the lotos, his missionary tours, and the curious union subsisting between the Guru and his Sangat. In the Travels of Guru Teah Bahader, translated from the original Gurmukhî by an excellent scholar, Sirdar Atar Singh, we find the following remarkable sentence "The Guru and his Sangat are like the warp and wood in cloth,—there is no dif-ference between them" (p. 37) In the Adi Granth there is an entire Sukhmani, or poem, by Guru Arjun, wholly devoted to a recita-tion of the advantages of "the acciety of the plous," the term employed being, however, in this case, sadk kan sang (I O MS 2484, fol. 134.) In addition to these points of resemblance, there is found in early Sikhism a curious veneration for trees, offerings to which were sometimes made, as will be seen by reference to pp 67, 70, and 83, of the Travels of Guru Tegh Bahadur, just cited In precise conformity with the tradition that Buddhs died under a Sal tree, we have seen that Nanak purposely breathed his last under a Sarih tree. Anyone familiar with Buddhism will readily recognize the remarkable coincidences stated above, but the most conclusive of all is the positive inculcation of views identical with the crowning doctrine of Buddhism—the Nirvans itself The following is what Dr. Trumpp says on the subject -

" If there could be any doubt on the pantheistic character of the tenets of the Sikh Gurus regarding the Supreme, it would be dissolved by their doctrine of the Nirban Where no personal God is taught or believed in, man cannot aspire to a final personal communion with him, his aim can only be-absorption in the Absolute Substance, te individual annihilation. We find, therefore, no allusion to the joys of a future life in the Granth, as heaven or paradise, though supposed to exist, is not considered a desirable object The immortality of the soul is only taught so far as the doctrine of transmigration requires it, but when the soul has reached its highest object, it is no more mentioned, because it no longer exists as individual soul.

The Nirban, as is well known, is the grand object which Buddha in his presching held out to the poor people. From his atheistic point of view, he could look out for nothing else, personal existence, with all the concomitant evils of this life, which are not counterbalanced by corresponding pleasures, necessarily appeared to him as the greatest evil His whole aim was, therefore, to counteract the troubles and pain of this existence by a stoical indifference to pleasure and pain, and to stop individual consciousness to its utmost limit, in order to escape at the point of death from the dreaded transmigration, which he also, even on his atheistic ground, had not ventured to reject. Buddhism is, therefore, in reality, like Sikhism, nothing but unrestricted Pessimism, unable to hold out to man any solace, except that of annihilation.

"In progress of time, Buddham has been expelled from India, but the restored Brahmanism, with its confused cosmological legends, and gorgeous mythology of the Puranas, was equally unable to satisfy the thinking minds. It is, therefore, very remarkable, that Buddhism in its highest object, the Nirban, soen emerges again in the popular teachings of the medisoval reformatory movements Nämdev, Trilochan, Kabīr, Ravidās, &c., and after these Nāṇak, take upon themselves to show the way to the Nirbān, as Buddha in his time had promised, and find eager listeners, the difference is only in the means which these Bhagats [saints] propose for obtaining the desired end." (Introduction to Translation of the Adi Granti, p. evi.)

Such, then, was the Sikh religion as founded . * by Guru Nānak. It is based on Hinduism, modified by Buddhism, and streed into new life by Suffism. There seems to be superabundant evidence that Nanak laboured earnestly to reconcile Hinduism with Muhammadanism, by insisting strongly on the tenets on which both parties could agree, and by subordinating the points of difference impossible to deny that Nansk in his life-time actually did effect a large amount of reconcihation, and left behind him a system designed to carry on the good work The or cumstances which led to the entire reversal of the project, and produced between Muhammadans and Sikhs the deadlest of fends, does not come within the purview of the present article. It is enough to state that the process was gradual, and was as much due to political causes as to a steady departure from the teachings of the Founder of Sikhism.

The Sikhs acknowledge ten Gurus, whose names, with the year in which each died, are given in the following list —

| Name              | Date ofDeath | Durationd Gura-ship |
|-------------------|------------------|-------------------------|
| Guru Nênak        | A D1538      | Years.84            |
| Guru Angad        | 1552             | 14                      |
| Guru Amar-Das     | 1574             | 23                      |
| Guru Rām-Dās      | 1581             | 7                       |
| Garu Aryan        | 1606             | 25                      |
| Guru Har Govind . | 1638             | 82                      |
| Guru Har-Ru 1     | 1660             | 22                      |
| Guru Har-Kısan    | 1664             | 4                       |
| Guru Tegh-Bahadur | 1675             | 11                      |
| Guru Govind Singh | 1708             | 38                      |

It is thus seen that the Sikh fraterarty was under the guidance of personal Gurus frem A.D 1504, when Nänak received the spiritual impulse which gave birth to the new sect, until A.D. 1708, a total period of 204 years. After the death of Guru Govind Singh, the Ach Granth itself was taken to be the ever-existing impersonal guide

The first successor of Nanak was appointed on account of his devotion to the cause. Shortly after the supposed visit to Makkub, Nanak met with a devotee named Lehana, whose faith and earnestness were so fully demonstrated that Nanak named him, in preference to either of his sons, as his successor in the leadership of the new sect. His name was also changed from Lahana to Angad (—anga-du, "body-giving"), implying that he was willing to give his very body to the cause of God. He was a poor and ignorant man, and maintained himself by rope-making He is said to have heard the whole account of Nanak's life from Bhā,ī Bālā, who had long been with the Founder It is related that all the counsel which Nanak had given to the Sikhs was sedulously inculcated by him (Sikhān de Rāj di Vithiā, p 19) Like his predecessor, the Founder, he also named as his successor a devoted servant, although he had sons whom he might have appointed

Amar-Das, the third Gura, was a simpleminded and moffensive man, who was as unlearned as his two predecessors, nevertheless, he composed several verses incorporated in the Adi Granth It was in his time that we hear of the first differences between the Sikhs and the Muhammadans The gentle disposi-tion of Amar Das was unsuited to the position of ruler among the strong-willed people of the Panjab, accordingly, when a difference occurred, he was quite incapable of settling the matter It is related that Amai-Das was completely absorbed in the service of Puramesur (God) (Sikhan de Raj di Vithija, p 25) The use of this word indicates a marked melination towards the Hindu side of Sikhism, and we may suppose that such an inclination would be resented by the firmer adherents to Islam for we find that the Muslims began to annoy this Gurus disciples by trivial acts of aggression The disciples asked their Guru what they had better do and he suggested various temporising expe dients, which only emboldened the aggressors When again appealed to, he desired his dis ciples te endure the wrong, as it was more meritorious to submit than to resent an insult The weak conduct of this Gurn left a legacy of ill-will for his successors to deal with Amar-Dās nominated his son in-law as his successor, an example which initiated the hereditary Guru-ship which followed

Ram-Das was a poor lad, who got a scanty living by selling boiled grain. He was taken into the family of Amar-Das, and married his daughter He had acquired the elements of education, and was a peaceful and non-aggressive man On attaining the Guru-ship, he set himself industriously to the acquisition of disciples, and took large contributions from them in the shape of voluntary offerings This wealth placed him above his brothers in the faith, and conferred upon him the elements of a royal state. He restored an old tank in magnificent style, for the purpose of religious ablution, and called it American, or the lake of the water of life. This tank enabled the Sikhs to perform their ablutions in a luxurious manner, and necessarily attracted many to the spot In the course of time, a town grew up round the tank, which gradually increased in importance and is now one of the most important places in the Panj-This assumption of dignity and increasing wealth in all probability awakened the auxiety of the Muhammadan governers of the com try , and the gradual drifting into common Hinduism accentuated the feeling It is clear that the Muhammadous who had fought so desposately to overture the ancient Hindu kingdoms, could not view with indifference the up-growth of a Hindu sovereignty in their very midst. Rām-Dās named his son as his successor in the Guru-ship—an act which sealed the fate of the Sikh attempt at compromise in religious matters, for every Muhammadan felt his position as a citizen threatened by the establishment of a rallying-point for disaffected Hindus

Guru Arjun, the fifth Guru, was an active and ambitious man He laid aside the dress of a fagir which had been worn by all his predecessors and converted the voluntary offerings of his disciples into a tax. This raised him to some importance, and enabled him to take men into his pay, a proceeding which conferred additional dignity upon him, and, at the same time, intensified the jealousy of his Muhammadan neighbours A an additional means of uniting his community into one compact body, he collected the words of Nanak, and those of other saintly personages, into a book, which he called Granth, ie "the book," and strictly enjoined his followers to accept no speech as authoritative which was not contained in " the book" The spark which lit the torch was, however, a distinct interference in political affairs, which provoked the resentment of the Muhammadan ruler at Delhi, and occasioued the arrest and, ultimately, the death of the Guru It is not clear whether the Emperor actually executed him, or whether the Guru committed suicide, but his death was brought about by the ruler of Delhi, and this was enough to inflame the passions of the Sikhs, who were eager to revenge his death

Har-Govind succeeded his father in the Guru-ship, and at once proceeded to arm his followers, and slay those who had been personally concerned in procuring the death of the late Guru. This did not, however, prevent him from entering the service of the Emperors Jahängir and Shāh-Jahān in a military capacity, but his turbulence got him into much trouble, and he spent a picdatory, rather than a roligious, life. Under his Guru-ship the Sikhs were changed from faqurs into soldiers, and were freely recruited from the warlike Jat population, who eagerly availed themselves of any opportunity for securing plunder. It is evident that the actions of this Guru must have led him into frequent contests with the Muhammadan authorities, and provoked the efforts afterwards made to break up what the rulers must have felt to be a dangerous confederation.

Hai-Rāji was the grandson of the last Guru, and was chosen as successor because Har-Govind distrusted the fitness of his sons for the office Har-Rāj fought against Aursingzib in the interest of Dara-Shikoh, and when the latter was defeated he made his submission to the Emperor, and was pardoned.

Har-Kishan was the younger son of the preceding Nothing eventful occurred during his short tenure of power. He was called to Delhi by the Emperor Aurangzib, and was there attacked by small-pox, of which disease he died. The succession to the Guru-ship was broken by his death, for he was too weak to appoint a successor, and merely indicated that the next Guru would be found ın Bakala, a village near Anand-pur

Tegh Bahadur, who happened to be residing in Bakala, was the son of Har-Govind, and had been passed over by his father in favour of Har-Rall. He was by nature contemplative, and not particularly anxious to assume the delicate position of leader among the bellicose Sikha Aurangaib was in the full fury of his Islamizing mania and was accordingly specially solicitous to suppress the ambitious projects of the Sikh The Paujab appears to have been too carefully guarded to be pleasant to Tegh-Bahadur, and he, there fore, began a wandering life over the north of India. An account of his travels has been translated from Panjabi into English by the learned Sirdar Atar Singh, and the story is singularly interesting to the student of Sikh We learn from one anecdate that, even in the time of this ninth Guru, Maham madans could feel a certain respect for the Sikhs The tale relates that a small party of Hindus and Muhammadans went to rob the Guru, but at the last moment the Muli dismadans felt remorse, for they said, ' ne was undoubtedly a prophet "-(Irairle of Guru Tegh Bahadur, p 24) On reaching Sivaram the Guru met a Saivid seated under a Saria tree (the same kind of tree, be it remarked as that under which Nanak breathed his last, sud the Sarvid saluted the Guru with reverence saying "I am really happy now, ha ing seen your divine countenance" - (Travels, &c, p 46) Still more marked is the friendly feeling shown by the courteque reception which Tegh-Bahadus received from Sharafu 'd-Din, a Muhammadan gentleman residing near Patiala. This Muslim sent him presents, and then went out to meet him He conducted him with much ceremony to his own palace, where he entertained him. It is specially mentioned that "the Guru's eyes fell upon a mosque, and Sharafu 'd-Din immediately said that that was the house of God - (Travels, &c. p 2) Not withstanding this reverential treatment by pious "Thammadans, it is contain that Togh Bahadur spent his life in violent antagonism to the Muslim rulers of the country book of Travels, from which we are quoting, gives numerous metances of this, as may be seen by those who care to study the dotails in pp 45, 49, 57, 58, 69, 126, 130 131 Some desperate fights took place, and after a specially severe engagement it is said on p 58 that " from that day the Muhammadans never ventured to fight with the Garu? However, the Guru appears to have been hunted from place to place, and on many occasions he narrowly escaped capture. The apparent contradiction myolved in the reverential attitude of prous Muhammadans, and the skirmishes with Muhammadan soldiery, finds its explanation in the supposition that the religious aspect of Sikhiani was not artago Distic to Muamamadan ideas, while its political aspect provoked the violence of the Court of Delhi In the present day much the same state of things is recognizable with respect to the Wahlabis The English Govern mert would never dream of interfering with the religious opinions of that, or any other, sect, but when their doctimes find expression in the subversion of civil authority leaders soon find themselves in the Andaman islands. Tegh-Bahadur was at length elected and the Emperor is stated to have endeavoured earnestly to bring him over to the pure Mus lun faith, but when he proved obduratehe was thrown into prison, where long-continued cruelty induced him to command a Sikh, who was with him, to cut off his head

Govind Singh was the torta and last Guru and he succeeded his father Tegh-Bahadur when only 15 years of age, He was brought up under Hindu guidance and became a staunch devotee of the golders Durga; and by his pronounced preserence for Hindusan he caused a division in the Sikh community He introduced several important changes inie the constitution of Sikh secrety The chief among these was the establishment of the Khālan, by which he bound his disciples into in army, and conferred upon each or thom the name Singh, or hon He freely admitted all castes to the ranks of his army, and laboured more carnestly over their military than over their religious discipline. The nature of the cuanges which Gorind Singh effected in the fratermity is heat shown by the fact that the special followers of Nanak personally sepa rated themselves from him, and formed a com munity of their own, rejecting the title of Singh In other words, they preferred the religious to the military idea. This Guro fougus against the Mahammadans with determination, and was so incensed against them that he mata tuted a fine or 25 rupees fer saluting a Muhammadan tomb, however saintly wards the end of his Gurn ship an attempt was made to raise this fine to 5,000 rapoes but it was ult mately fixell at 125 rupees (Travels, &c , pp 69 and 180) The spirit of toleration so marked during the life of Na ik was clearly gone, and in yet later times this hostility gave birth to the max in that 'a true Sikh should always be engaged in war wish the Muhamma-dans and slay them fighting them face to tace.' After a turbulent reign, Guru Govind Singh was treacherously slain by the dagger of a Patheu follower He refused to name a successor telling his followers that after his death the Granth Sainh or "the Lord the Book," was to be their guide in every respect (Sikhan de Raj de Vithe, a, p 79)

The firegoing sketch of the relation of the Sikks to the Muhammadens is sufficient to show that the religion of Nanak began in large-hearted tolerance, and that political neuses operated to convert its adherents into a narrow minded sect. The Hindustra which Nanak had disciplined, reasserted us, superiority under his successors, and ulti-While thus mately became predominant change was in progress the rengious aspect of the movement became gradually converted into a military and political propa No contrast, indeed, could well be ganda greater than that between the moffensive and gentle-minded Nanak, and the warlike and ambitious Gurus of later times But while we cannot help being painfully impressed with the apparently undying feud which still sub-sists between the Sikhs and the Muhammadans, it seems perfectly clear that the intention of the Founder was to reconcile the differences between those creeds, and that m this excellent work he attained a large measure of success. His pious object was de feated by political causes and by the watlike nature of the people of the Panjab The name "Muhammadan" in the various countries in which it exists, is allowed to cover differences in religious belief quite as great as those between the views of Nanak and those of Muhammad, and in all probability would have done so in this instance also, but for the reasons pointed out We cannot, however concern opraelves with probabilities it is enough for the purposes of this article to have established the fact that Sikhism, in ils inception, was intimately associated with Muhammadanism, and that it was intended as a means of bridging the gulf which sepa rated the Hindus from the believers in the Prophet

There are five leading sects of Sikha, the names of which need only be mentioned. They

- 1 The Udass, or those who are 'indif ferent" to the world
- The Suthre, or the " pure " 3 The Diwane or ' mad " saints
- 4. The Nirmale Sadhu or "spotless saints "
- 5 The Akalu, or worshippers of the "Eternal One"

Muhammadan writers are not agreed as to the exact number of kabirah sins, but they are generally held to be the following seventeen -

1 Aufr or infidelity

- 2 Constantly committing little sins
- 3 Desputing of God's mercy

"He is not a believer who commits adul tery, or steals, or drinks Equor, or plunders, or embezzles, when entrusted with the plunder of the infidel. Beware!

It is related that a Jew once said to his friend, " Take me to this Prophet." He said, "Do not call him a prophet, for if he hears it he will be pleased" And they came to the Prophet and asked him about the nine (sic) wonders (te Ten Commandments), which appeared (from the hands of Moses) He said "Do not associate anything with God nor steal, nor commit adultery, nor murder, nor take an moffensive person before the king to be killed, nor practise magic, not take interest, nor accuse an innocent woman of adultery, nor turn your backs on the field of battle, and it is proper, particularly for the The Jews Jews, not to work on Saturday kissed the hands and feet of the Prophet, and said, "We bear witness that you are a Prophet" He said, "What prevented you from being my disciples?" It is referred to m the Qur'an as the mountain on which Ged gave the tables of the Law (Sürah vii. 189), and as the place where God assembled the prophets and took a compact from them (Sürah ii. 75) In Sürah xov 2, Muhammad makes the Almighty swear "by Mount Sinai", and in Surah xxui 20, we are told that, "a tree growing out of Mount Sinai produces oil and a condiment for those who cat."

Al-Başawî (Fleischer's ed., vol. i. p 848), and the author of the Mayma'n l-Bijar (p. 57), both say that Moses received the tables of the Law on the mountain called Jebalu Zuban .(جبل زاس).

SINGING. Arabio ghina' (alia). Among Muslim theologians, singing is generally held to be unlawful, and the objection is founded on a tradition recorded by Jabur, who relates that Muhammad said, "Singing and hearing songs causeth hypocrisy to grow in the heart, even as rain causeth the corn to grow in the field." (Mishkat, book xxi. ch ix pt 3)
Shakh 'Abdu 'l-Haqq, m his commentary, remarking on this tradition, says, it is not a tradition of any authority, and adds, "The traditionists all agree that there is no Hadis of any authority forbidding the practice of singing" (vol iv p 63)

SIRĀT ([], Lit "A road" The word occurs in the Qur'an thirty-eight times, in nearly all of which it is used for the Sirātu 'l Mustayim or the "right way" of religion In Muslim traditions and other writings it is more commonly used for the bridge across the infernal fire, which is described as finer than a hair and sharper than a sword, and is beset on each side with briars and hooked thorns The righteous will pass over it with the swiftness of the lightning, but the wicked will soon miss their footing and will fall into the fire of hell. (Mulla 'Ali Qârī, p 110)

Muhammad appears to have borrowed his ides of the bridge from the Zorosstrian system. according to which the spirits of the departed, both good and bad, proceed along an ap-pointed path to the "bridge of the gatherer" This was a narrow road (chinvat peretu) conducting to Heaven or Paradise, over which the souls of the pious alone could pass, whilst the wicked fell into the gulf below (Rawlinson's Seventh Oriental Monarchy,

The Jews, also, believed in the bridge of hell, which is no broader than a thread, over which idolaters must pass. (Medrash, Yalkut, Reubest, sect Gehinnom.)

"Abd (A.C.) (Surah ii. 220), Heb "All ched; Mamlük (A.C.) (Sürah xv: "W) A female slave, amah (A.C.) (Surah ii. 220) The terim generally used in the Qur'an for slaves is with the mai malaket amanukum, "that which your right hands possess."

"that which your right hands possess"

Muhammad found slavery an existing institution, both amongst the Jews and the idolaters of Arabia, and therefore it is recognised although not established in the Qur'ān.

I — The Traching of the Qur'an on the subject of slavery is as follows

(1) Muslims are allowed to cohabit with any of their femile slaves. Sürah iv 8. "Then marry what seems good to you of women, by twos, or threes, or fours, and if ye fear that ye cannot be equitable, then only one, or what your right hands possess" Sürah iv. 29. "File of what your right hands possess of young momen" Sürah xxxiii 49. "O prophet" verily We make lawful for thee wives to whom thou hast given their hire (dowry), and what thy right hand possesses at at the booty God hath grouted thee."

(2) They are allowed to take possession of married women of they are slaves. Sürah iv 28 "Unlawful for you are ... married women nave such as your right hands possess" (On thus verse al-Jalulan the commentators say "that is it is lawful for them to cohebit with those women whom you have made capture, even though their husbands be alive

m the Daru l-Harb")

(3) Muslims are excused from strict rules of decorum in the presence of their female slaves even as in the presence of their wives. Surah arm 5 "Those who are strict in the rules of decorum, except for their wives, or what their right hands possess" See also Surah lex 29

'1) The helpless position of the slave as regards his master illustrates the helpless position of the false gods of Arabia in the presence of their Creator. Surah xvi. 77 "God has struck out a parable, an owned slave, able to do nothing, and one provided with a good provision, and one who expended therefrom in alms secretly and openly, shall they be held equal? Praise be to God, most of them do not know!" See also Surah xxx 27

(5) Muslims shall exercise kindness towards their slaves. Surah iv. 40. Serve God and do not associate aught with Him, and show kindness to your parents and to kindred.

and to that which your right hands passess"

(6) When slaves can redoem themselves at its the duty of Muslims to grant the emancipation Sarah xxiv. 88 "And such of these whom your right hands possess as crave a writing (i.e. a document of freedom), write it out for them if ye knew any good in them, and give them of the wealth of God which He has given you. And do not compel your alave-girls to prostitution if they desire to keep continent.

From the teaching of the Qur'an above quoted

it will be seen that all male and female slaves taken as plunder in war are the lawful property of their master, that the master has power to take to himself any female alave, either married or single, that the position of a slave is as helpless as that of the stone idols of Arabia, but they should be treated with kindness, and be granted their freedom when they are able to ass for and pay for it

IL -- From the TRACKING OF THE TRADI-TIONS, it appears that it was the custom of Muhammad either to put to death or take captive those of the enemy who fell into his hands. If a captive embraced Islam on the field of battle he was a free man, but if he were made captive, and afterwards embraced Islam, the change of creed did not emanerpate him 'Atiyatu 'l-Qurasi relates that, after his battle with the Banu Quraizah, the Prophet ordered all those who were able to fight to be killed, and the women and children to be enslayed

Very special blessings are attached to the emancipation of a slave Abū Hurairah relates that Muhammad said, "Whosoever frees a slave who is a Muslim, God will redeem every member of his body, himb for limb, from hell fire." Abu Zarr asked which slave was the best to emancipate, and the Prophet replied, "That which is of the highest price and most liked by his master An Arab once asked the Prophet what act would take him to Paradise, and the Prophet said, "Free a slave, or assist one in redeeming a bond of slavery The following are some of the sayings of Muhammad re The following garding the treatment of slaves

'It is well for a slave who regularly worships God and discharges his master's

"Whoever buys a slave and does not agree about his property, then no part of it is for the purchaser of the slave"

"When a slave of yours has money to redeem his bond, then you must not allow bim to come into your presence afterwards

"Behaving well to slaves is a means of prosperity, and behaving ill to them is a cause of loss

"When any one of you is about to beat his slave, and the slave asks pardon in the name of God, then withhold yourself from besting him "

It is incumbent upon the master of slaves to find them in victuals and clothes, and not order them to do what they are not able to do "

"When a slave-girl has a child by her master she is free at big death

"Whosver frees a siave, and the slave has property, it is for the master, unless the master shall have agreed that it was the slave's at the time of freeing him (See Mishkäte 'l Macäbih, Sakiku l Bulbar Sahiku Musim.)

III — With regard to the Englaving of PAPITYLE, the author of the Hiduyak says

"The limin, with respect to captives has it-ir lds choice to sizy them, because the Prophet put captives to death, and also because elaving them terminates wicked-ness, or, if he choose, he may make them slaves, because by ensiring them the wickedness of them is remedied, and at the same time the Muslims reap an advantage; or, if he please, he may release them so as to make them freemen and Zimmis secording to what is received of Umar, but it is not Lawful so to release the ido-laters of Arabia, or apostates. It is not lawful for the Imam to return the coptives to their own country, as this would, be strengthening the infidels against the Mus-lims If captives become Muslims, let not the Imam put them to death, because the wickedness of them is hereby remodied without slaying them , but yet he may lawfully make them slaves, after their conversion, because the reason for making them slaves (namely, their being secured within the Muslim territory) had existence previous to their embracing the faith. It is otherwise where infidals become Muslims before their capture, because then the reason for making them slaves did not exist previous to their conversion. It is not lawful to release infidel captives in exchange for the release of Muslim captives from the infidels According to the two disciples, this is lawful (and such also is the opinion of ash-Shaff'i), because this produces the emancipation of Muslims, which is preferable to slaving the infidels or making them slaves. The argument of Imam Abu Hanifah is that such an exchange is an assistance to the infidels, because those captives will again return to fight the Mushins, which is a wickedness, and the prevention of this wickedness is preterable to effecting the release of the Muslims since as they remain in the hands of the infidels, the injury only affects them, and does not extend to the other Muslims, whereas the unit attending the release of intidel, captives extends to the whole body of An exchange for property (that Muslims is, releasing infidel prisoners in return for property) is also unlawful, as this is assisting the infidels, as was before observed, and the same is mentioned in the Mazhabu'l-Mashhür In the Sairu 'l-Kabir it is asserted that an exchange of prisoners for property may be made where the Muslims are necessitous, because the Prophet released the captives taken at Badr for a ransow. If a captive become a Muslim in the hands of Muslims, it is not lawful to release and send him back to the infidels in return for their releasing a Muslim who is a captive in their hands, because no advantage can result from the t susaction It however, the converted captive consent to it, and there be no appreheneion of his apostatizing, in this case the releasing of him in exchange for a Muslim captive is a matter of discretion. It is not lawful to confer a favour upon captives by releasing them gratuitously, that is, without receiving anything in return, or their be-coming Zimmis, or being made alaves. Ash-Shan's says that showing favour to captives in this way is lawful, because the Prophet showed favour in this way to some of the captives taken at the battle of Badr. The arguments of the Hanafi doctors upon this point are two-fold. First, it is said in the Qur'an, 'Slay idolaters wherever ye find them', secondly, the right of enslaving them is established by their being conquered and captured, and hence it is not lawful to annul that right without receiving some advantage in return, in the same manner as holds with respect to all plunder, and with respect to what ash-Shāfi'i relates that the Prophet showed favour in this way to some of the captives taken at the battle of Badr. It is abrogated by the text of the Qur'an already quoted (Hamilton's Hidāyah, vol il p 160)

IV—SLAVE TRAFFIC is not only allowed but legislated for by Muhammadan law, and is clearly sanctioned by the example of the Prophet as given in the Traditions (see Sahiku Muslim, Kitābu 'l-Buyū', vol 1 p 2) In the Law of Sale (see Raddu 'l-Muhtār Hidayah, Hamilton's ed, vol. in p. 458), slaves, male and female, are treated merely as articles of merchandize. In chapters on sale, and option, and wills, the illustrations are generally given as regards slaves, and the same, or very similar rules apply both to the sale of anima's and bondsmen

The following traditions (Mishkat, book min chap. Ex.) with reference to the action of the Prophet in this matter are notable —

"Imran ibn al-Hussin said a man freed six slaves at his death, and he had no other property besides, and the Prophet called them, and divided them into three sections, and then cast lots, he then ordered that two of them should be freed, and he retained four in slavery, and spoke severely of the man who had set them free"

"Jähr said we used to sell the mothers of children in the time of the Prophet, and of Abu Bakr, but 'Umar forbade it in his

V—The Manumission of Slaves is permitted by Muhammadan law under the following forms (1) 'Atāq ('Atq, I'tāq), (2) Kitābah, (3) Tadbir, and (4) Istilād

(1) 'Atā', in its literal sense, means power, and in law expresses the act of the owner of a slave (either male or female) giving immediate and unconditional freedom to his slave. This act is lawful when it proceeds from a person who is free, sane, adult, and the actual owner of the slave in question If such a person say to his slave, "Thou art free," or "Thou art mu'taq," or "Thou art consecrated to God," or make use of any smallar expression to his slave, the slave becomes ipso facto free, whether the owner really mean emancipation or not

(2) Kitābah, hterally "a writing," aignifies a bend of freedom granted to a slave (male or female), in return for money paid It is founded on the teaching of the Qur'an Sūrah xxiv 33 "And such of these as your right hands possess as crave a writing, write it out for them if ye know any good in them," which precept is held to be recommendatory, although not munctive. The slave thus ransomed is called mukātab, until the ransom is fully paid. During the interval between the promise of freedom and the payment of the money the mukātab enjoys a certain degree of freedom, but is nevertheless placed under certain restrictions. For example, although he is free to move from place to place, he cannot marry, or bestow aims, or become bail, or grant a loan, or make a pilgrimage, &c., without the permission of his master.

(8) Tadbir signifies literally, "arrangement, disposition, plan" but in the language of the law it-means a declaration of freedom made to a slave (male or female), to take effect after the masters death. If the owner of slave say, "Thou art free at my death," or "Thou art a mudabbir," or words to that effect the slave can claim his freedom upon the decease of his master, and any children born to him in the interval are placed in the same position

(4) Istilad, Let 'the odepring's claim," signifies a man having a child born to him of a female slave, which he claims and acknowledges as his own, which acknowledges as his own, which acknowledgment becomes tipso facto the cause of the freedom of the female slave. The woman is then called ummu'l walad, "the mother of offspring," and stands in relation to her master as his wife, the child being also free

(5) In addition to the above forms of emancipation, it is also established that the manumission of slaves is the legal penalty or expiation (kaffārah) for certain sins, eq for breaking the fast of Ramazān the expiation is either the islease of a slave or feeding seven poor persons, this expiation is also made for a rash oath [OATH], as also for the rash form of divorce known as gihār [ZIHAE] (See Raddu 'l-Meihtār, vol. in p 175, ii p 92, ii p 952.)

VI.—Modern Muslim Slavery The slaves

VI.—Modern Muslim Slavery The slaves of the Arabs are mostly from Abyssinia and negro countries, a few, chiefly in the homes of wealthy individuals, are from Georgia and Circassia

Mr Lane says, in Egypt "Abyssinian and white female slaves are kept by many men of the middle and higher classes, and often instead of wives, as requiring less expense, and being more subservient, but they are generally indulged with the same luxuries as free ladies, their vanity is gratified by costly dresses and ornaments, and they rank high above free servents, as do also the male slaves. Those called Abyssinians appear to be a mixed race between negroes and whites, and from the territories of the Gallas. They are mostly kidnapped and sold by their own countrymen. The negro female staves, as iew of them have considerable personal attractions (which is not the case with the Abysamians, many of whom are very beautiful), are usually employed only in cosking and other menial offices

"The femiale slaves of the higher classes are often instructed in plain needlework and embroidery, and sometimes in music and

Formerly many of them possufficient literary accomplishments to largely from esteemed poems, or even mpose extemporary verses, which they often accompany with the lute son of many concubine slaves is happy, nat of many quite the contrary These, Il other slaves of either sex, are genetreated with kuidness, but at first they ually importuned, and not unfrequently with much harshness, to induce them ibrace the Muhammedan faith, which t all of them do Their services are only light, the usual office of the male slave, who is called (memlook) mamiuk, t of a page, or a military guard unucus are employed as guardians of omen, but only in the houses of men th rank or of great wealth, on account important office which they fill, they encially treated in public with special leration. I used to remark, in Cairo, few persons saluted me with a more led and consequential air than these le but self-concerted beings are Abyssinians or negroes Indeed, aves in general take too much advanof the countenance of their masters, ally when they belong to men in power

nan Nights, vol 1 p 55)

Central Asia the great slave-trade is d on with Käsiristan. The Kafirs, uch as they enslave each other in war, ieir own countrymen and countrywomen lavery, and, when the slave market is the Muhammadans residing on their rs make inroads upon the Kafirs and them (especially the women who are fair and pretty) into slavery Some slaves have risen to eminence in Cabul, te Sher Alı Khan's commander-ın-chief, noz Khān, being a Kāfir slave

Hindustan British rule has abolished ry, but it nevertheless exists in noble ies, where the slaves seem willingly to t to their condition of bondage

-The Treatment of Slaves. already shown that, both according to saching of the Qur'an and also according injunctions of Muhammad, as given in raditions, kindness to slaves is strictly sed, and it must be admitted that the nent of slaves in Muhammadan countries asts favourably with that in America, slavery existed as an institution under ustian people

Lane (Arabian Nights, vol i p 55), ig from his personal observations of

ry in Egypt, remarks

he-master is bound to afford his slaves r food and clothing, or to let them for their own support, or to sell, give or liberate them. It is, however, dered disgraceful for him to sell a slave has been long in his possession, and it m happens that a master emancipates ale slave without marrying her to some able to support her or otherwise prog for her he Prephet strongly enjoined the duty of kindness to slaves 'Feed your slaves,' said he, with food of that which ye eat, and clothe them with such clothing as ye wear, and command them not to do that which they are unable. These precapts are generally attended to, either entirely or in a degree "

"Some other sayings of the Prophet on this subject well deserve to be mentioned, as the following -

""He who beats his slave without fault, or slaps hum on the face, his atonement for this is freeing him.'

"'A man who behaves ill to his slave will not enter into Paradise '

"'Whoever is the cause of separation between mother and child by selling or giving, God will separate him from his friends on the day of resurrection'

"' When a slave wishes well to his master, and worships God well, for him are double rowards '

"It as related of Othman ('Usman), that he twisted the ear of a memicok belonging to him, on account of disobedience, and afterwards, repenting of it, ordered him to twist his ear in like manner, but he would not Othman urged him, and the slave advanced and began to wring it by little and little He said to him, Wring it hard, for I cannot endure the punishment of the Day of Judgment [on account of this act]' The memlook answered, O my master, the day that thou fearest I also fear '

"It is related also of Zainu 'l-Abidin, that he had a memlook who seized a sheep and broke its leg, and he said to him, 'Why didst thou this?' He answered, 'To provoke thee to anger' 'And I,' said he, 'will provoke to anger him who taught thee, and he is Iblis (i e the Devil) go, and be free, for the sake of God

" Many similar anecdotes might be added. but the general assertions of travellers in the East are far more satisfactory evidence in favour of the humane conduct of most Muslims to their slaves

But although this testimony of Mr Lane's will be borne out with regard to the treatment of slaves in Islam in all parts of the Muhammadan world, the power which a Muslim possesses over the persons of his bondsman or bondsmaid is unlimited example, according to the Hidayah (vol iv. p. 282), "A master is not slain for the murder of his slave," nor "if one of two partners in a slave kill the slave is retaliation incurred." In this the law of Muhammad departs from that of Moses. See Exodus xxi 20 "And if a man smite his servant, or his maid, with a rod, and he die under his hand, he shall be surely punished (Heb avenged.) Notwithstanding, if he continue a day or two, he shall not be punished for he as his money"

Slaves have no civil liberty, but are en-terely under the authority of their owners, whatever may be the religion, sex, or age, of the latter, and can possess no property, unless by the owner's permission. The owner is entire master, while he pleases, of the person and goods of his slave, and of the offspring of his female slave, which, if begotten by him or presumed to be so, he may recognise as his own legitimate child, or not the child, if recognised by him, enjoys the same privileges as the offspring of a free wife, and if not recognised by him is his slave.

He may give away or sell his slaves, excepting in some cases which have been mentioned, and may mairy them to wnom he will, but not separate them when married A slave, however, according to most of the doctors, cannot have more than two wives at the same time. Unemancipated slaves, at the death of their master, become the property of his heirs and when an emancipated slave dies leaving no male descendants or collateral relations, the former master is the heir, or, if he be dead, his heirs inherit the slave's property. As a slave enjoys less advantages than a free person, the law, in some cases ordains that his punishment for an offence shall be half of that to which the free is hable for the same offence, or even less than half if it be a fine, or perumary compensation, it must be paid by the owner to the amount, if necessary, of the value of the slave, or the slave must be given in compensation

The owner, but not the part owner, may cohabit with any of his female slaves who is a Muhammadan, a Christian, or a Jewess, if he has not married her to another mar but not with two or more who are sisters, or who are related to each other in any of the degrees which would prevent then both being his wives at the same time if they were free after having so lived with one, he must entirely relinquish such intercourse with her before he can do the same with another who is so related to her He cannot have intercourse with a pigar slave Christian or Jew may have slaves, but not enjoy the privilege above mentioned with one who is a Muhammadan. The master must wait a certain period (generally from a month to three months) after the acquisition of a female slave before he can have such intercourse with her. If he find any fault in her within three days, he is usually allowed to return her

When a man from being the bushand, becomes the master of a slave, the marriage is dissolved, and he cannot continue to live with her but as her master, enjoying, however, all a master's privileges, unless he emancipates her, in which case he may again take her as his wife, with her consent. In like manner, when a woman, from being the wife, becomes the possessor of a slave, the marriage is dissolved, and cannot be renewed unless she emancipates him, and he consents to the reunion.

There is absolutely no limit to the number of slave-girls with whom a Muhammadan may cohabit and it is the consecution of this illimitable includence which so popularizes the Muhammadan religion amongst uncivilized nations, and so popularize, slavery n the Muslim religion.

In the Akhlāg-t-Jilāli, which is the popular work upon practical philosophy amongst the Muhammadaus, it is said that "for service a slave is preferable to a freeman, inasmuch as he must be more disposed to submit, obey and adopt his patron's habits and pursuits"

Some Muslim writers of the present day (Syed Ameor Ali's Lije of Mohammed, p 257) contend that Muhammad looked upon the custom as temporary in its nature, and held that its extinction was sure to be achieved by the progress of ideas and change of orcumstances, but the slavery achieved by the progress of ideas and change of circumstances, but the slavery of Islam is interwoven with the Law of marriage, the Law of sale, and the Law of inheritance, of the system, and its abolition would strike at the very foundations of the code of Mulammadanism

Slavery is in complete harmony with the spirit of Islam, while it is abhorrent to that of Christianity. That Muhammad ameliorated the condition of the slave, as it existed under the heathen laws of Arabia, we cannot doubt, but it is equally certain that the Arabian legislator intended it to be a perpetual institution.

Althou h slavery has existed side by side with Christianity it is undoubtedly contrary to the spirit of the teaching of our divine Lord, who has given to the world the grand doctrine of universal brotherhood

Mr Lecky believes (European Morals, vol ii p 70) that it was the spirit of Christianity which brought about the abolition of slaver, in Europe He says, 'The services of Christianity were of three kinds It supplied a new order of relations, in which the distinction of classes was unknown It imparted a moral dignity to the service classes. It gave an unexampled impeture to the movement of enfrarchise ment."

SLEEPING Arabic naum (eg)
Heb and naum It is usual for Mushims to sleep with the head in the direction of Makkah

Al ü Zarr relates that on one occasion he was scoping on his belly and the Prophet saw him, and, kicking him, said, "O Jundub! this way of sleeping is the way the devils sleep!"

Abbab says he saw the Prophet sleeping on his back, with one log lying ever the other, but Jabir says the Prophet forbade that way of sleeping (Mishlet, book xxii oh v pt 1)

According to the Muhammadan religion it is a sacred duty to reply to a sneeze For example, if a person sneeze and say immediately afterwards, "God be praised" (albamdu li 'llāh, all , all , if is incumbent upon at least one of the party to exclaim, "God have mercy on you" (Yaphamu-ka'llāh all)). This custom of replying to a sneeze existed amongst the Jaws, whose aneszing formula was "Tobim khayim!" i.e. "Good

There are interesting chapters on saluting after encezing in Tylor's Primitive Culture, and Isaac D'Israeli's Cursosities of Laterature

Replying to a sneeze is amongst the duties called Farz Kafā': (Mushkāt, book v ch i. pt. 1)

Abū Hurairah relates that Muhammad said, "Verily God loves sneezing and hates yawning" (Miskkāt, book xxii ch vi)

SODOM Arabic Sadūm ("Lot"). Heb DJD Sedūm "The City of Lot" The Qāṇūs says it is more correctly Zazūm The city is not mentioned by name of the "overturned cities" referred to in Sūrahs ix. 71, lxix 9 Amongst Muhammadans, this city is associated with sodomy, or unnatural crime, called in Arabic liwātah Prederastia, is held to be forbidden by Mus lim law, and the reader will find a discussion on the subject in Hamilton's Hidāyah, vol. ii p 26 The prevalence of this vice amongst Muhammadans is but too well known (See Vambery's Sketches of Central Asia, p 192)

SOLOMON Arabic Sularmān (על אבר) Heb אל Shelōmūh

Both according to the Qur'an and the Muhammadan commentators, Solomon was celebrated for his skill and wisdom. The following is the account given of him in the Qur'an, with the commentators' remarks in takes, as given in Mr Lane's Selections from the Kur'an (2nd ed by Mr Stanley Lane-Poole)—

"And We subjected unto Solomon the wind, blowing strongly, and being light at his desire, which ran at his command to the land that We blessed (namely Syria), and We knew all things (knowing that what We gave him would stimulate him to be submissive to his Lord) And We subjected, of the devils, those who should dive for him in the sea and bring forth from it jewels for him, and do other work besides that, that is, building, and performing other services, and We watched over them, that they might not spoil what they executed, for they used, when they had finished a work before night, to spoil it, if they were not employed in something else." (Surah xxi 81, 82)

"We gave unto David Solomon his son How excellent a servant was he! For he was one who earnestly turned himself unto God, glorifying and praising Him at all times Remember when, in the latter part of the day, after the commencement of the declining of the sun, the mares standing on three feet and touching the ground with the edge of the fourth foot, swift in the course, were displayed before him. They were a thousand maises, unich u are deployed before him after he had performed the noon-prayers, on the occurrent of his desiring to make use of them in a holy war, and when nine hundred of them had been displayed, the sun set, and he had not performed the afternoon prayers. So he was greeved, and he said, Verily I have preferred the love of earthly goods above the remembrance of my Lord, (that is, the performance of the afternoon prayers,) so that the sun is concealed by the veil. Bring them (namely the horses) back unto me. Therefore they brought them back And he began to sever with his sword the legs and the necks, slaughtering them, and cutting off their legs, as a sacrifice unto God, and gave their flesh in alms, and God gave him in compensation what was better than they were and swifter, namely the wind, which travelled by his com-mand whithersoever he desired. And We tried Solomon by deprising him of his kingdom. This was because he married a woman of whom he became enamoured, and she used to worship an idol in his palace without his knowledge His dominion was in his signet, and he pulled it off once and deposited it with his wife, who was named El Emeeneh (Aminah), and a jumee came unto her in the form of Solomon, and took at from her And We placed upon his throne a counterfest body namely that sense, who was Sakhr (Sakhr), or another He sat upon the throne of Solomon, and the birds and other creatures surrounded him, and Solomon went forth, with a changed appearance, and saw him upon his throne, and said unto the people, I am Solomon —but they denied him. Then he returned unto his kingdom, after some days, having obtained the signet and put it on, and seated himself upon his throne He said, O my Lord, forgive me, and give me a de-minion that may not be to anyone after me (or beside me), for Thou art the Liberal Giver So We subjected unto him the wind, which ran gently at his command whither-soever he desired, and the devils also, every builder of wonderful structures, and diver that brought up pearls from the sea, and others bound in chains which connected their hands to their necks And We said unto him, This is Our gift, and bestow thou thereof upon whomsoever thou wilt, or refrain from bestowing, without rendering an account And verily for him was ordained a high rank with Us, and an excellent retreat. (Sürah xxxviii 29-39)

"We bestowed on David and Solomon knowledge in judging men and in the language of the birds and other matters, and they said, Praise be to God who hath made us to excel many of His believing servants, by the gift of prophecy and by the subjection of the jinn and mankind and the devils. And Solomon inherited from David the gift of prophecy and knowledge, and he said, O men, we have been taught the language of the birds, and have had bestowed on us of everything whereauth prophets and kings are gifted. Verily this is manifest excellence. And his armies of jinn and men and birds were gathered together unto Solomon, and they were led on in order, until, when they came unto the valley of ants, which was at EtTaif [at-Ta'tf], or in Syria the ants whereof were small or great), an ant (the queen of the ents), having seen the troops of Solomon, said, O ants, enter your habitations, lest Solomon and his troops crush you violently, while they perceive not And Solomon smiled, afterwards laughing at her saying, which he heard from the distance of three miles, the wind conveying it to him so he withheld his forces when he came in sight of their valley, until the ents had entered their dwellings and his troops were on horses and on foot in this expedition. And he said, O my Lord, inspire me to be thankful for Thy favour which Thou hast bestowed upon me and upon my parents, and to do righteousness which Thou shalt approve, and admit me, in Thy mercy, among Thy servants, the righteous, the prophets and the saints

"And he examined the birds, that he might see the lap-wing, that saw the water heneath the earth, and directed to it by pecking the earth, whereupon the devils used to draw it forth when Solomon wanted it to perform the ablution for prayer, but he saw it not and he said, Wherefore do I not see the laphe said, Wherefore do I not see the lap-wing? Is it one of the absent? And when he was certain of the case he said, I will assuredly punish it with a severe punishment, by plucking out its feathers and its tail and casting it in the sun so that it shall not be able to guard against excessive thirst, or I will slenghter it, or it shall bring me a manifest convincing proof showing its excuse And it tarried not long before it presented ttself unto Solomon submissively, and raised its head and relaxed its tool and its wings so he forgave it, and he asked it what it had met with during its absence, and it said, I have become acquainted with that wherewith thou hast not become acquainted, and I have come unto thee from Sebs (a tribe of El Yemen) with a sure piece of news I found a woman reigning over them, named Bilkees (Rilque), and she hath been gifted with everything that princes require, and hath a magnificent throne (Its length was eighty cubits, and its breadth, forty cubits, and its height, thirty cubits it was composed of gold and silver set with fine pearls and with rubies and chrysolites, and its legs were of rubies and chrysolites and ome alds upon it were closed seven doors to each chamber through which one passed to it was a closed door ) I found her and her people worshipping the sun instead of God, and the devil hath made their works to seem comely unto them, so that he hath hindered them from the right way, wherefore they are not rightly directed to the worship of God who produceth what is hidden (namely, the rain and regetables) in the heavens and the earth, and knoweth what they [that is, mankind and others | conceal in their hearts, and what they reveal with their tongues Ged: there is no deity but He, the Lord of the magnificent throne, between which and the three of Bilkees is a vast difference u Solomon said to the lapsing. We will see whether thou bast spoken truth or whother then art of the hars Then the lapsing of led Gem to the water, and it was drawn forth by the devile, and they quent thirst and performed the ablution an Then Solomon wrote a letter, the for was this -From the servant of God the son of David, to Bilkees the quee In the name of God, the Compassi Merciful, Peace be on whomsoever the right direction After this sale say, Act we not proudly towards me, unto me submitting He then seals musk, and stamped it with his signet, unto the lapwing, Go with this my l throw it down unto them (namely B her people) then turn away from stay near them, and see what reply So the lapwing took it, unto her, and around her were her fo he threw it down into her lap, and sav it, she trembled with fear sidered what was in it, and she said nobles of her people, O nobles, an h (scaled) letter hath been thrown d It is from Solomon, and it i In the name of God, the Compassic Merciful Act ye not proudly tow but come unto me submitting nobles, advise me in mine affair decide upon a thing unless ye bear ness - They replied. We are endo strongth and endowed with great va the command belongeth to thee, see what thou wilt command us to when they erter a city, waste it, an the mighty of its ir habitants abj thus will they do who have sent . But I will send unto them with a g will see with what the messen return, whether the gift will be acc whether it will be rejected. If he be king, he will accept it and if he be i he will not accept it And she sent female servants, a thousand in equal five hundred of each sex, and five bricks of gold, and a crown set wi and musk and ambergers and other this messenger with a letter And the hastened unto Solomon, to tell him t on hearing which, he commanded that gold and silver should be cast, an horse-course should be extended to the nine leagues from the place where he that they should build around it a battlements, of gold and silver, and handsomest of the beasts of the land a sea should be brought with the son jinn on the right side of the horse-co on its left

"And when the messenger came gift, and with him his attendants, u mon, he (Solomon) said, Do ye aid wealth? But what God hath gi (namely, the gift of prophecy and the is better than what He hath given worldly goods, yet ye rejoice in y because ye glory in the shows thing world Return unto them with the thou hast brought, for we will sure unto them with forces with which the not power to contend, and we will drive them out from it, (that is, from their country, Seba, which was named after the father of their tribe,) abject and contemptible, of they come not unto us submitting And when the messenger returned unto her with the gift, she placed her throne unthin seven doors, within her palace, and her palace was within seven palaces; and she closed the doors, and set guards to them, and prepared to go unto Solomon, that she might see what he would command her to do She departed with twelve thousand kings, each king haring with him many thousands, and proceeded until she came us near to him as a league's distance; when he knew of her approach, he said, O nobles, which of you will bring unto me her throne before they come unto me submitting? An 'efreet ('Ifrit) of the jnn, answered, I will bring it unto thee before thou shalt arise from thy place wherein thou sittest to judge from morning until midday, for I am able to do it, and trustworthy with respect to the jewels that it comprises and other matters Solomon said, I desire it more speedily And thereupon he with whom was knowledge of the revealed scripture (namely his Wezeer, Asaf the son of Barkhiya, who was a just person, acquainted with the most great name of God, which ensured an answer to him who invoked thereby) sa d, I will bring it unto thee before thy glance can be withdrawn from any object And he said unto him, Look at the sky So he looked at it.

then he withdrew his glance, and found it placed before him for during his look towards the sky, Asaf prayed, by the most great name, that God would bring it, and it so happened, the throne passing under the ground until it came up before the throne of Solomon And when he saw it firmly placed before him, he said, This is the favour of my Lord, that He may try me, whether I shall be thankful or whether I shall be unthankful. And he who is thankful is thankful for the sake of his own soul, which will have the reward of his thankfulness, and as to him who is ungrateful, my Lord is independent and bountiful.

"Then Solomon said, Alter ye her throne so that it may not be known by her, that we may see whether she be rightly directed to the knowledge thereof, or whether she be of those who are not rightly directed to the knowledge of that which is altered. He desired thereby to try her intelligence. So they altered it, by adding to it, or taking from it, or in some other manner. And when she came, it was said unto her, Is thy throne like this? She answered, As though it were the same. (She answered them ambiguously like as they had questioned her ambiguously, not saying. Is this thy throne?—and had they so said, she had answered, Yes.) And when Solomon saw her knowledge, he said, And we have had knowledge bestowed on us before her, and have been Muslims. But what she worshipped instead of God hindered her from worshipping Him, for she was of an unbelieving people. It was said unto her also, Enter the palace. (It had a floor of white, transparent plass, beneath which was running water, wherein were fish. Solomon had made it on its being said unto him that her legs and fest were hairy, like the legs of an ass. And when she saw it, she imagined it to be a great water, and she uncovered her legs, that she might wade through it, and Solomon was on his throne at the upper end of the palace, and he saw that her legs and her feet were handsome. He said unto her, Verily it is a palace evenly spread with glass And he invited her to embrace El-Islam, whereupon she said, O my Lord, verily I have acted unjustly towards mine own soul, by worshipping another than Thee, and I resign myself, with Solomon, unto God, the Lord of the worlds And he desired to marry her, but he disliked the hair upon her legs, so the devils made for him the depilatory of quicklime, wherewith she removed the hair, and he married her, and he loved her, and confirmed her in her kingdom. He used to visit her every month once, and to remain with her three days; and her reign expired on the expiration of the reign of Solomon It is related that he began to reign when he was thirteen years of age, and died at the age of three and fifty years Extolled be the perfection of Him to the duration of whose dominion there is no end!" xxvn 15-45)

We subjected unto Solomon the wind, which travelled in the morning (unto the person when the sun began to decline) the distance of a month's journey, and in the evening from the commencement of the declining of the sun into its setting) a month's journey And We made the fountain of molten brass to flow for him three days with their nights in every month, as water floweth, and the people worked until the day of its flowing, with that which had been given unto Solomon And of the jum were those who worked in his presence, by the will of his Lord, and such of them as swerved from obedience to Our command We will cause to taste of the punishment of hell in the world to come (or, as it is said by some, We cause to taste of its punishment in the present world, an angel beating them with a scourge from hell, the strips of which burneth them.) They made for him whatever be pleased, of lofty halls (with steps whereby to ascend to them), and images (for they were not forbidden by his law), and large dishes, like great tanks for watering cameles, around each of which as-sembled a thousand men, eating from 11, and cooking-pots standing firmly on their legs, cut out from the mountains in El-Yemen, and to which they ascended by ladders And We said, Work, O family of David, in the service of God, with thanksgiving unto Him for what He hath given you —but few of My servants are the thankful And when We decreed that he (namely Solomon) should die, and he died, and remained standing, and leaning upon his staff for a year, dead, the jinn meanwhile performing those difficult works as they were accustomed to do, not knowing of his death, until the worm ate his staff, whereupon he fell down, nothing showed them his death but the eating reptile (the worm) that ate his staff And when he fell down, the jum plainly perceived that if they had known things unseen (of which things was the death of Solomon), they had not continued in the ignominious affliction (that is, in their difficult works), imagining that he was alive, enconsistently with their opinion that they knew things unseen And that the period was a year was known by calculating what the worm had eaten of his staff since his death in each day and night or other space of time." (Sürah xxiv 11-18)

Mr Sale, quoting from the commentators al-Jalalan and al-Baigawi, has the following remarks on the foregoing account of Solo-

"Some say the spirits made him (Solomon) two lions, which were placed at the foot of his throne, and two eagles, which were set above it, and that when he mounted it, the hons stretched out their paws, and when he sat down, the eagles shaded him with their wings, and that he had a curpet of green silk, on which his throne was placed, being of a prodigious length and breadth, and sufficient for all his forces to stand on, the men placing themselves on his right hand, and the spirits [or jinn] on his left, and that when all were in order, the wind at his conimand took up the carpet and transported it with all that were upon it wherever he pleased, the army of birds at the same time flying over their heads and forming a kind of canopy to shade them from the sun. The commentators tell us that David, having laid the foundations of the Temple of Jeru salem, which was to be in heu of the tabernacle of Moses, when he died, left it to be finished by his son Solomon, who employed the genn in the work, that bolomon, before the edifice was quite completed, percurving his end drew nigh, begged of God that his death might be concealed from the genu till they had entirely finished it, that God there fore so ordered it that Solomon died as he stood at his prayers, leaning on his staff, which supported the body in that posture a full year, and the genu, supposing him to be alive, continued their work during that term, at the expiration whereof, the temple being perfectly completed, a worm, which had gotten into the staff, ate it through, and the corpse fell to the ground and discovered the king's death. That after the space of forty days, which was the time the image had been worshipped in his house, the devil flew away, and throw the signet into the sea the signet was immediately swallowed by a fish, which being taken and given to Solomon, he found the ring in its bell, and, having by this means recovered the kingdom, took Şakhr, and, tying a great stone to his neck, threw him into the Lake of Tiberias The Arab historians tell us that Solomon, having finished the Temple of Jerusalem, went in pilgrmage to Makkah, where having stayed as long as he pleased, he proceeded towards al-Yaman, and leaving Makkah in the morning he arrived by noon at San'a', and being extremely delighted with the country rested there, but wanting water to ablution, he looked among the b lapwing which found it for him that Bilqis, to try whether Scherophet or not, drest the boys he the girls like boys, and sent him a pearl not drilled and an onyx derocked hole, and that Solomon of the boys from the girls by t manner of their taking water, one worm to bore the pearl, and pass a thread through the onyx "

Of the above quotations, all Muslim commentators are agreed in applying Nos 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, 11, 12, 14, to the angel Gabriel, Nos 3, 15, 16, are said to be Jesus, the Ruhu "lish, or "Spirit of God", Nos 17, 18, 19, the Rus, or "Lafe," given to Adam, Nos. 9, 13, "the Spirit of Prophecy", No 10 is held to mean God's grace and strength With reference to No 7, there is some discussion The Khalifah 'Ali is related to have said that it was an angel with 7,000 mouths, in each mouth there being 7,000 tongues, which un-ceasingly praised God. Ibn 'Abbas held that it meant the angel Gabriel Mujahid, that it meant beings of another world.

The Commentators al-Kamalan say the Jews came and asked Muhammad regarding the spirit of man, and the Prophet replied, "The Spirit proceedeth at my Lord's com-mand, but of knowledge only a little to you is given, 'from which it is evident that it is impossible for the finite mind to understand the nature of a spirit.

The philosophical bearings of the question are fully discussed, from an Oriental standpoint in the Kashshāfu 'stilāhāti 'l-Funun, A Dictionary of Technical Terms used in the Sciences of the Mussalmans, edited by W Nassau Lees, LLD, 1862, vol 1 p 541, also in the Sharhu 'l-Mawayı', p 582

Muhammadan writers hold very conflicting views regarding the state of the soul or spirit after death All agree that the Angel of Death (Malaku 'l-Maut), separates the human soul from the body at the time of death, and that he performs his office with ease and gentleness towards the good, and with force and violence towards the wicked, a view which they establish on the testimony of the Qur'an, Surah lxxxx. 1, where the Prophet swears by "those who tear out violently and those who gently release." After death the spirits enter a state called al-Barzakh, or the interval between death and the Resurrection, the "Atons of the New Testament. The souls of the faithful are said to be divided into three classes (1) those of the Prophets who are admitted into Paradise immediately after death, (2) those of the martyrs who, according to a tradition of Muhammad, rest in the crops of green birds, which eat the fruits and drink of the waters of Paradise, those of all other believers, con-cerning the state of whose souls before the Resurrection there is great diversity of opinion. Some say they stay near the graves, either for a period of only seven days, or, according to others, until the Day of Resurrection. In proof of this, they quote the example of Muhammad, who always saluted the spirits of the departed when passing a grave-yard. Others say, all the departed spirits of the faithful are in the lowest heaven with Adam, because the Prophet declared he saw them there in his pretended ascent to heaven. [MTRAJ] Whilst others say the departed spirits dwell in the forms of white birds under the throne of God (which is a Jewish tradition).

Al-Baizāwī says the souls of the wicked are carried down to a pit in hell called Sijjin [SLIJIN], and there is a tradition to the effect that Muhammad said the spirits of the wicked are termented until the Day of Resurrection, when they are produced with their bodies for judgment

The author of the Sharku 'l-Mawaqif (p 588), says that some Muslim philosophers state that after death the spirit of man will enther be in a state of enlightenment or of ignorance Those who are in a state of ignorance will go on from worse to worse, and those who are in a state of enlightenment will only suffer so far as they have contracted qualities of an undesirable character when in the body, but they will gradually improve until they arrive at a state of per-fect enjoyment. This view, however, is not one which is tenable with the views propounded by the Qur'an, in which there are very decided notions regarding the future state of heaven and hell. [SOUL.]

SPITTING. According to the Traditions, Muslims must spit on the left side, and cover it over with earth Spitting in mosques is forbidden. (See 'Abdu 'l-Haqq's Commentary on the Mishkat, vol. i. p 295)

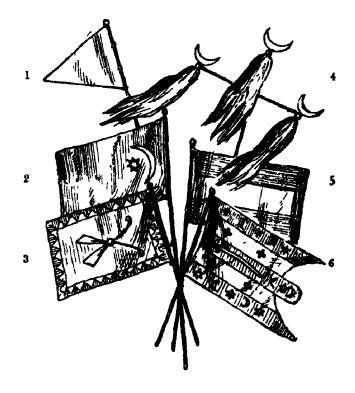

Muhammad said. "Spit not in front, for you are in God's presence Spit not on the right hand, for there standeth the angel who recordeth your good actions"

SPOILS, The. Arabic al-Anfāl (الاسال) The title of the virith Surah of the Qur'an, in which are given instructions regarding the division of the spoils taken at the battle of Badr, a dispute having arisen between the young men who had fought and the old men who had stayed under the ensigns, the former insisting they ought to have the whole, and the latter that 'hey deserved a share. [PLUNDER]

STANDARDS Arabic 'alam (علم), pl a lam Regarding the standards used by Muhammad, there are the following traditions -

Jabir says "The Prophet came into Makkah with a white standard.

MUHAMMADAN STANDARDS (A. F Hole)

Muslim Standard of Central Asian Tribes
 Standard of the Turkish Empire
 Standard of the Empire of Morocco

Horse-tail Standard of Modern Turks . Standard of Egypt Standard of Persia.

The 'Abhās says "The Prophet had two standards, a large black one and a small white one.

Al-Bara' ibn 'Āzib says "The standard, I remember, was a square one, and black spotred with divers colours"

In the struggle between the Shī'ahs and the Sunnīs, the Fatmades adopted green as the colour of their standard, whilst the Banī

Umsiyah assumed white for theirs

In Central Assa, the ordinary Muslim standards are either black or green, and are triangular. The sign of the crescent, as it appears on Turkish standards, was adopted after the taking of Byzantium, for, long before the conquest of Constantinople, the crescent had been used in the city for an emblem of sovereignty, as may be seen from the medals struck in honour of Augustus and Trajan [CRESCENT]

There is a standard still preserved at Constantinople amongst the ancient relics, and called as-Sinyaqu'sh-sharif, which is held to be a most sacred emblem, and is only produced on very special occasions. It is said to be the ancient standard of the Prophet

A modern writer, describing this flag, says "It is made of four lavers of silk, the top-most of which is green, those below being composed of cloth, embroidered with gold Its entire length is twelve feet, and from it is suspended the figure of a human usud, which clasps a copy of the Qur'an, transcribed by the Khalifah Usmān. In times of peace, the banner of the Prophet is kept in a chamber appropriated to the purpose, along with the clothes, teeth, the venerable locks, the stirrups, and the bow of the Prophet"

In the Muharram, when the martyrdom of al-Hasan and al-Husain is celebrated, numerous standards are carried about in the procession.

The origin of the horse-tail standard borne by modern Turks, appears to have been from the people bearing the horse-tail as a distinction of rank, the two ranks of pashas being distinguished respectively by two and three tails, and a further distinction of rank being marked by the elevation of one of the tails above the others

MUHARRAM STANDARD

According to the Traditions, the Mahdī, in the Last Days will appear from the direction of Khorosan with black ensigns, and there seems to be every reason to regard the black standard as the primitive ensign of Islam, although the Wahhābīs have generally carried green standards

STATUES [SCULPTURE]

STONING TO DEATH Arabic In Muslim law, the razm (144) punishment of lapidation is only inflicted for adultery (Under the Jewish law idolaters and bearers of false witness were also stoned) It is founded, not upon the Qur'an, where the only punishment awarded is one hundred strapes (Surah xxiv 2), but upon the Traditions (Mishlat, book xv ch 1), where Muhammad is related to have said, "Verily God hath ordained for a man or woman not married one hundred lashes and expulsion from their town one year, and for a man or woman having been married one hundred lashes and stoning" 'Abdu 'l-Haqq says the hundred lashes, in addition to the stoning, is abrogated by the express example of the Prophet, who ordered stoning only, for 'Abdu 'lish ibn 'Umai relates the following tradition .

"A Jew came to the Prophet and said,
'A man and woman of ours have committed adultery And the Prophet said, 'What do you meet with in the Book of Moses in the matter of stoning?' The Jew said, 'We do not find stoning in the Bible, but we disgrace adulterers and whip them' Then 'Abdu Tläh ibn Saläm, who was a learned man of the Jews, and had embraced Islam, said, 'Yeu he, O Jewish tribe! verily the order for stoning is in the Book of Moses' Then the book was brought, and opened, and a Jew put his hand upon the revelation for stoning, and read the one above and below it, and 'Abdu 'lläh said, 'Lift up your hand' And he did so, and behold the revolution for stoning was produced in the book, and the Jews said, 'Abdu 'lläh spoke true, O Muhammad! the stoning revelation is in the Book of Moses' Then the Prophet ordered both the man and woman to be stoned' (Mishkāt, book xv ch 1)

The author of the Hidayah (vol 11 p 9) gives the following instructions as to the correct way of carrying out the sentence

"It is necessary, when a whoremonger is to be stoned to death, that he should be carried to some barren place void of houses or cultivation, and it is requisite that the atoning be executed—first by the witnesses, and after them by the Imam or Qazi, and after those by the rest of the bystanders, because it is so recorded from 'Ali, and also because in the circumstance of the execution being begun by the witnesses there is a precaution, since a person may be very bold in delivering his evidence against a criminal, but afterwards, when directed himself to commence the infliction of that punishment which is a consequence of it, may from compunction retract his testimony, thus, causing the witnesses to begin the punishment may be a means of entirely preventing it Ash-Shaff's has said that the wilnesses beginning the punishment is not a requisite, in a case of lapidation, any more than in a case of scourging To this our doctors reply that reasoning upon a case of lapidation from a case of scourging is supposing an analogy between things which are essentially different, because all persons are not acquainted with the proper method of inflicting flagellation, and hence, if a witness thus ignorant were to attempt, it might prove fital to the sufferer, and he would die where death is not his due, contrary to a case of lapidation, as that is of a destructive nature, and what every person is equally copable of executing, wherefore if the witnesses shrink back from the commencement of lapidation the punish ment drops, because their reluctance argues their retraction.

"In the same manner punishment is remitted when the witnesses happen to die, or to disappear, as in this case the condition, namely, the commencement of it by the witnesses, is defeated. This is when the whoredom is established upon the testimony of witnesses but when it is established upon the confession of the offender, it is then requisite that the lapidation be executed, first by the Imam or the Qazī, and after them by the rest of the multitude, because it is so recorded from 'Ali Moreover, the Prophet threw a small stone like a bean at Ghamdiyah who had confessed whoredom. When a woman is to be stoned, a hole or excavation should be dug to receive her, as deep as her waist, because the Prophet ordered such a hole to be dug for Chamdiyah before mentioned, and 'Ali also ordered a hole to be dug for Shuraha Hamdiani is, however, immaterial whether a hole be dug or not, because the Prophet did not issue any particular ordinance respecting this, and the nakedness of a woman is sufficiently covered by her garments, but yet it is laudable to dig a hole for her, as decency is There is thus most effectually preserved no manner of necessity to dig a hole for a man, because the prophet did not so in the case of Ma'ız. And observe, it is not lawful to bind a person in order to execute punishment upon him in this case, unless it appears that it cannot otherwise be inflicted.

"The corpse of a person executed by lapidation for whoredom is entitled to the usual ablutions, and to all other funeral cere momes, because of the declaration of the Prophet with respect to Ma'iz 'Do by the body as ye do by those of other believers', and also, because the offender thus put to death is slain in vindication of the laws of God, wherefore ablution is not refused, as in the case of one put to death by a sentence of retaliation, moreove the Prophet allowed the prayers for the dead to Ghamdiyah, after lapidation." (Hudayah, book ii. p 9)

This punishment of lapidation for adultery has become almost obsolete in modern times, even in Bukhärah, where the institutes of Muhammad are supposed to be most strictly observed, it is not inflicted.

SUFI (مونى), more correctly بَيْنَ iy (The Persian form of the plural being مونيان). Sufiyān) A man of the people called مونيان Sufiyān, who profess the mystic principles of مونيا Tayawwif There is considerable discussion as to the origin of this word It is said to be derived (1) from the Arabic Sūf, 'wool,' on account of the woollen dress worn by Eastern ascetics, (2) or from the effort to attain to metaphysical purity (which is scarcely probable), (3) or from the Greek cochia, 'wisdom", (4) or, according to the Ghyāgu 'l-Luyhāt, it is derived from the Sūfah, the name of a tribe of Arabs who in the "time of ignorance," separated themselves from the world, and engaged themselves exclusively in the service of the Makkah

Temple.

It might at first sight appear almost an impossibility for mysticism to engraft itself upon the legal system of the Qur'an, and the Ahadin, with the detailed ritual and cold formality, which are so strikingly exemplified in Islam, but it would appear that from the very days of Muhammad, there have been always those who, whilst they called themsolves Muslims, set aside the literal meaning of the words of Muhammad for a supposed mystic or spiritual interpretation, and it is generally admitted by Sufis that one of the great foundors of their system, as found in Islam, was the adopted son and son in-law of the Prophet, 'Ali ibn Abi Tālib The Şūfis themselves admit that their religious system has slways existed in the world, prior to the mission of Muhammad, and the unprejudiced student of their system will observe that Taşawwuf, or Şü ilsm, 18 but a Muslim adaptation of the Vedanta school of Hindu philosophers, and which also we find in the writings of the old academics of Greece, and Sir William Jones thought Plato learned from the sages of the East

The Sufis are divided into innumerable seets, which find expression in the numerous religious orders of Darweshes or Faqira [FAQIR], but although they differ in name and in some of their customs, as diess, meditations and recitations, they are all agreed in their principal tenets, particularly those which incuicate the absolute necessity of blind submission to a murshid, or inspired guide. It is generally admitted that, quite irrespective of minor sects, the Sufis are divided into those who claim to be only the Ilhāmiyah, or inspired of God, and those who assert that they are Itinhādiyah, or unionist

with God

I The Doctrine of the Sufia

The following is a succenct account of the doctrines of the Sūfis —

1 God only exists He in all things, and all things in Him.

2 All visible and invisible beings are an emanation from Him, and are not really distinct from Him

8. Religious are matters of indifference they however serve as leading to realities Some for this purpose are more advantageous than others, among which is al Islam, of which Suffixm is the true philosophy

4. There does not really exist any difference between good and evil, for all is reduced to Unity, and God is the real Author of the acts of mankind

5 It is God who fixes the will of man man therefore as not free in his actions

6 The soul existed before the body, and is confined within the latter as in a cage Death, therefore, should be the object of the wishes of the Şūfī, for it is then that he returns to the bosom of Divinity.

7. It is by this metempsychosis that souls which have not fulfilled their destination here below are purified and become worthy of reunion with God.

8 Without the grace of God, which the Sūfīs call Fayazānu 'Uāh, or Fazlu 'Uāh, no one can attain to this spiritual union, but this, they assert, can be obtained by fervently asking for it

9 The principal occupation of the Suff, whilst in the body, is meditation on the wahdaniyah or Unity of God, the remambrance of God's names [ZIKE], and the progressive advancement in the Tarigah, or journey of life, so as to attain unification with God.

II The Sufi Journey

Human life is likened to a journey (safar), and the seeker after God to a traveller

(sālik)

The great business of the traveller is to exert himself and strive to attain that perfect knowledge (maintal) of God which is diffused through all things, for the Soul of man is an exile from its Oreator, and human existence is its period of banishment. The sole object of Safiism is to lead the wandering soul onward, stage by stage, until it reaches the desired goal—perfect union with the Divine Being

The natural state of every human being is humanity (nāsāi), in which state the disciple must observe the Law (shari'sh), but as this is the lowest form of spiritual existence, the performance of the journey is enjoined upon every searcher after true knowledge.

The various stages (mandril) are differently described by Sūfī writers, but amongst those of India (and, according to Malcolm, of Persia also,) the following is the usual journey —

The first stage, as we have already remarked, is humanity (nāsāt), in which the disciple must live according to the Law (sharīah), and observe all the rites, customs, and precepts of his religion. The second is the nature of angels (malakūt), for which there is the pethway of purity (tarīqāh). The third is the possession of power (jabrūt), for which there is knowledge (mārīfāh), and the fourth is extinction (fanā) (i.e. absorption into the Deity), for which there is Truth (haqīqāh)

The following more extended journey is marked out for the traveller by a Suffi writer, 'Aziz ibn Muhammad Nafasi, in a book called al-Maqsadu 'l-Aqsa, or the "Remotest-Aim," which has been rendered into English by the lamented Professor Palmer (Oriental Mysticism, Cambridge, 1867) —

When a man possessing the necessary requirements of fully-developed reasoning powers turns to them for a resolution of his doubts and uncertainties concerning the real nature of the Godhead, he is called a falls, "a searcher after God"

If he manufest a further inclination to prosecute his inquiry according to their system, he is called a murid, or "one who inclines"

Placing himself then under the spiritual instruction of some eminent leader of the sect, he is fairly started upon his journey and becomes a salsk, or "traveller," whose whole business in life is devotion, to the end that he may ultimately arrive at the knowledge of God

1 Here he is exhorted to serve God, as the first step towards a knowledge of Him This is the first stage of his journey, and is called 'ubudiyah (عبودية), or "service"

2 When in answer to his prayers the Divine influence or attraction has developed his inclination into the love of God, he is said to have reached the stage called 'Ishq or " love "

8. This Divine Love, expelling all worldly desires from his heart, leads him to the next stage, which is zund ( ), or "seclusion"

4. Occupying himself henceforward with contemplations and investigations of metaphysical theories concerning the nature, attributes, and works of God, he reaches marifah (Lipso), or "knowledge"

5 This assiduous contemplation of start-ling metaphysical theories is exceedingly attractive to an oriental mind, and not unfrequently produces a state of mental excitement Such ecstatic state is considered a sure prognostication of direct illumination of the heart by God, and constitutes the next stage, called ward ( ..., ). or " ecstasy "

6 During this stage he is supposed to receive a revelation of the true nature of the Godhead, and to have reached the stage called haqiqah ( ala ), or "truth "

7 He then proceeds to the stage of . asl ومل), or "union with God"

8 Further than this he cannot go, but pursues his habit of self-denial and contemplation until his death, which is looked upon as fand (all), "total absorption into the Deity, extinction."

To develop this quasi "spiritual life" the Sufi leaders have invented various forms of devotion called gibr (نكر), or "recitations" These eccentric exercises have generally attracted the notice of travellers in the East. and have been described by Lane, Vambéry, Burton, and other Orientalists For an account of these ceremonies of Zikr the reader is referred to the article under that head [EIKR.]

III The Perfect Man in Sufi Spiritualism

The late Professor E H. Palmer of Cambridge has in his Oriental Mysticism, compiled from nat.ve sources, given a very correct idea of what may be considered the spiritual side of Muhammadanism, as expressed in the teaching of Muslim Sufis

"The perfect man is he who has fully comprehended the Law, the Doctrine, and the Truth, or, in other words, he who is endued with four things in perfection, viz. 1 Good words, 2 Good deeds, 3 Good principles, 4 The sciences It is the business of the Traveller to provide himself with these things in perfection, and by so doing he will provide himself with perfection.

"The Perfect Man has had various other names assigned to him, all equally applicable, viz. Elder, Leader, Guide, Inspired Teacher, Wise, Virtuous, Perfect, Perfecter, Beacon and Mirror of the world, Powerful Antidote, Mighty Elixir, Isa (Jesus) the Raiser of the Dead, Khisar the Discoverer of the Water of Life, and Solomon who knew the language of Birds

"The Universe has been likened to a single person, of whom the Perfect Man is the Soul, and again, to a tree, of which mankind is the fruit, and the Perfect Man the pith and essence. Nothing is hidden from the Perfect Man; for after arriving at the knowledge of God, he has attained to that of the nature and properties of material objects, and can henceforth find no better employment than acting mercifully towards mankind Now there is no mercy better than to devote oneself to the perfection and improvement of others, both by precept and example. Thus the Prophet is called in the Coran 'a mercy to the Universe (Cor cap 21, v 107) But with all his perfection the Perfect Man cannot compass his desires, but passes his life in consistent and unavoidable self-denial he is perfect in knowledge and principle, but imperfect in faculty and power,

"There have indeed been Perfect Men possessed of power, such power as that which resides in kings and rulers, yet a careful consideration of the poor extent of man's capacities will show that his weakness is preferable to his power, his want of faculty pi 3ferable to his possession of it. Prophets and saints, kings and sultans, have desired many things, and failed to obtain them, they have wished to avoid many things, and have had them forced upon them Mankind is made up of the Perfect and the Imperfect, of the Wise and the Foolish, of Kings and Subjects, but all are alike weak and helpless, all pass their lives in a manner contrary to their desires, this the Perfect Man recognises and acts upon, and, knowing that nothing is better for man than renunciation, forsakes all and becomes free and at leisure. As before he renounced wealth and digmity, so now he foregoes eldership and teachership, esteeming freedom and rest above everything the fact is, that though the motive alleged for education and care of others is a feeling of compassion and a regard for discipline, yet the real instigation is the love of dignity as the Prophet says, The last thing that is removed from the chiefs of the righteous is love of dignity' I have said that the Perfect Man should be endued with four things in perfection now the Perfectly Free Man should have four additional characteristics, viz renunciation, retirement, contentment, and leisure He who has the first four is virtuous, but not free he who has the whole eight is perfect, liberal, virtuous, and free Furthermore, there are two grades of the Perfectly Free-those who have renounced week and dignity only, and those who have further renounced eldership and teachership, thus becoming free and at leisure. These againare subdivided into two classes, those who, after renunciation, retirement and contentment make choice of obscurity, and those who, after renunciation, make choice of submission contemplation, and resignation, but the object of both is the same Some writers assert, that freedom and lessure consists in the former course, while others maintain that it is only to be found in the latter

"Those who make choice of obscurity are actuated by the knowledge that annoyance and distraction of thought are the invariable concomitants of society, they therefore avoid receiving visits and presents, and fear them as they would venomous beasts The other class, who adopt submission, resignation and contemplation, do so because they perceive that mankind for the most part are ignorant of what is good for them, being dissatisfied with what is baneficial, and delighted with circumstances that are harmful to them, as the Coran says, 'Perchance ye may dishke what is good for you, and like what is hurtful to you.' (Cor cap 2, v 218) For this reason they retire from society equally with the other class, caring little what the world may think of them

"Fellowship has many qualities and effects both of good and evil. The fellowship of the wise is the only thing that can conduct the Traveller safely to the Goal, therefore all the submission, earnestness, and discipline that have been hitherto inculcated are merely in order to mender him worthy of such fellowship. Provided he have the capacity, a single day, nay, a single hour, in the society of the wise, tends more to his improvement than years of self-discipline without it 'Verily one day with thy Lord is better than a thousand years' (Cor cap. 22, v 46)
"It is, however, possible to frequent the society of the wise without receiving any benefit therefrom, but this must proceed either from want of capacity or want of will. In order then to avoid such a result the Sufis have laid down the following rules for the conduct of the disciple when in the presence of his teachers

"Hear, attend, but speak little

- "Never answer a question not addressed to you, but if asked, answer promptly and concisely, never feeling ashamed to say, 'I know not.
  - "Do not dispute for disputation's sake

"Never boast before your elders

"Never seek the highest place, nor even accept it if it be offered to you.

"Do not be over-ceremonious, for this will compel your elders to act in the same manner towards you, and give them needless annoyance

"Observe in all cases the stiquette appropriate to the time, place, and persons present

"In indifferent matters, that is, matters involving no breach of duty by their omission or commission, conform to the practice and wishes of those with whom you are associating

"Do not make a practice of anything which is not either a duty or calculated to increase the comfort of your associates, otherwise it will become an idol to you; and it is incumbent on every one to break his idols and renounce his habits."

IV Renunciation.

"This leads us to the subject of Renunciation, which is of two kinds, external and internal. The former is the renunciation of worldly wealth, the latter, the renunciation of worldly desires. Everything that hinders or veils the Traveller's path must be re-nounced, whether it relate to this world or Wealth and dignity are great himthe next drances, but too much praying and fasting are often hindrances too. The one is a shroud of darkness, the other a veil of light. Traveller must renounce idolatry, if he desire to reach the Goal, and everything that bare his progress is an idol All men have some idel, which they worship, with one it is wealth and dignity, with another overmuch prayer and fasting. If a man sit always upon his prayer-carpet, his prayer-carpet becomes his idel. And so on with a great number of instances

"Renunciation must not be performed without the advice and permission of an elder It should be the renunciation of trifles, not of necessaries, such as food, clothing, and dwelling-place, which are indispensable to man, for without them he would be obliged to rely on the aid of others, and this would beget avarios, which is "the mother of vice ' The renunciation of necessaries produces as corrupting an influence upon the mind as the possession of too much wealth. The greatest of blessings is to have a sufficiency, but to over-step this limit is to gain nought but additional trouble

"Renunciation is the practice of those who know God, and the characteristic mark of the wise Every individual fancies that he alone possesses this knowledge, but knowledge is an attribute of the mind, and there 18 no approach from unaided sense to the attributes of the mind, by which we can discover who is, or who is not, possessed of this knowledge. Qualities however are the sources of action, therefore a man's practice is an infallible indication of the qualities he possesses, if, for instance, a man asserts that he is a baker, a carpenter, or a blacksmith, we can judge at once if he possesses skill in these crafts by the perfection of his handi-work In a word, theory is internal, and practice external, the presence of the practice therefore, is a proof that the theory too is there

"Renunciation is necessary to the real confession of faith, for the formula 'There is no God but God, involves two things, negation and proof Negation is the renunciation of other Gods, and proof is the knowledge of Wealth and dignity have led many God from the right path, they are the gods the people worship, if then you see that one has renounced these, you may be sure that he has expelled the love of this world from his heart, and completed the negation, and whosoever has attained to the knowledge of God has completed the proofs This is really confessing that 'there is no God but God' he who has not attained to the knowledge of God, has never really repeated the confession of faith. Early projudices are a great stumbling-block to many people, for the first principles of Monotherem are contained in the words of the Hadís 'Every one is born with a disposition [for the true faith], but his parents make him a Jew, a Christian, or a Magian.' The Unitarians also say, that the real confession of faith consists in negation and proof, but they explain negation by renunciation of self, and proof by acknowledgment of God

"Thus, according to the Sufis, confession of faith, prayer and fasting contain two distinct features, namely, form and truth, the former being entirely inefficacious without the latter Renunciation and the knowledge of God are like a tree, the knowledge of God is the root, renunciation the branches, and all good principles and qualities are the fruit To sum up, the lesson to be learnt is that in repeating the formula the Traveller must acknowledge in his heart that God only always was, God only always will be This world and the next, nay, the very existence of the Traveller, may vanish, but God alone remains This is the true confession of faith, and although the Traveller before was blind, the moment he is assured of this his eyes are opened, and he seeth.

V Helps to Devotion

"The Suils hold that there are three ands necessary to conduct the Traveller on his

"1 Attraction (بيداب عداب), 2 Devotion ('ibādah عادة ) 3 klevation ('urūj

"Attraction is the act of God, who draws
"Attraction is the act of God, who draws wards this world, and is entangled in the love of wealth and dignity, until the grace of God steps in and turns his heart towards God The tendency proceeding from God is called Attraction, that which proceeds from man is called Inclination, Desire and Love As the inclination increases, its name changes, and it causes the Traveller to renounce everything else becoming a Kiblah, to set his face towards God, when it has become his Kiblah, and made him forget everything but God, it is developed into Love. [QIBLAR]

"Most men when they have attained this stage are content to pass their lives therein, and leave the world without making further progress Such a person the Sufis call Attracted ( majzūb)

"Others, however, proceed from this to self-examination, and pass the rest of their lives in devotion. They are then called Devently Attracted ( lill majzūb-i-Sālık). If devotion be first practised, and the attraction of God then step in, such a person is called an Attracted Devotee ( Sālik-s-majzūb) If he practise and complete devotion, but is not influenced by the attraction of God, he is called a Devotee (william Sālık)

"Sheikh Shehab-uddin, in his work entitled 'Awarf al Madrif, says that an elder or teacher should be selected from the second class alone for although many may be estimable and righteons, it is but few who are fit for such offices, or for the education of disciples.

"Devotion is the prosecution of the journey, and that in two ways, to God and in God The first, the Sufis say, has a limit, the second is boundless, the journey to God 18 completed when the Traveller has attained to the knowledge of God, and then com-mences the journey in God, which has for its object the knowledge of the Nature and Attributes of God, a task which they confess is not to be accomplished in so short a space as the lifetime of man

The knowledge wisest men have shared Of Thy great power and Thee Is less, when with Thyself compared,

Than one drop in a sea. "The Unitarians maintain that the journey to God is completed when the Traveller has acknowledged that there is no existence save that of God, the journey in God they explain to be a subsequent inquiry into the mysteries of nature

"The term Elevation or ascent (Enc 'uru) is almost synonymous with Progress

VI The Intellectual and Spiritual Development of Man

"Every animal possesses a vegetative spirit, a living spirit, and an instinctive spirit; but man has an additional inheritance, namely the Spirit of Humanity. Now this was breathed by God into man directly from Himself, and is therefore of the same character as the Primal Element 'And when I have fashioned him and breathed My spirit into him' (Cor cap, 15 v 29) The Sufis do not interpret this of the Lafe, but of the Spirit of Humanity, and say that it is frequently not attained until a late period of life, thirty or even eighty years Before man can receive this Spirit of Humanity, he must be furnished with capacity, which is only to be acquired by purifying oneself from all evil and immoral qualities and dispositions, and adorning oneself with the opposite ones Sheikh Muhiy-uddin ibn ul 'Arabí, in his 'Investigations' (نموص), says that the words this preparation, and the rest of the sentence, and breathed My spirit into him, refere to the accession of the Spirit of Humanity.

"Two conditions are therefore imposed upon the Traveller, first, to attain Humanity, second, to acquire capacity.

"There are three developments of character that must be suppressed before man can attain to Humanity, the animal, the brutal and the flendish. He who only ests and sleeps, and gives way to lust, is mere animal, if besides these he gives way to anger and ornelty, he is brutal, and if in addition to all these he is crafty lying, and decentful, he is flendish.

"If the Traveller is moderate in his food, rest, and desires, and strives to attain a knowledge of himself and of God, then is the time for acquiring capacity by freeing himself from all that is evil and base, and adorning himself with the opposite qualities; after that by prayer he may obtain the Spirit of Humanity Some one has truly said that there is none of the perfection, essence, or immortality of man, save only among such as are 'created with a godly disposition.' When the Traveller has once been revivified by the Spirit of Humanity he becomes immortal, and inherits everlasting life. This is why it has been said that 'man has a beginning but no end.'

"If when he has attained this Spirit of Humanity, he is earnest, and does not waste his life in triffing, he soon arrives at the Divine Light itself. For 'God guideth whom He pleaseth unto His Light'. The attainment of this light is the completion of Man's upward progress, but no one can attain to it but those who are pure in spirit and in their lives. Mohammed asserted that he himself had attained it, 'To the light have I reached and in the light I live,' now this light is the Nature of God; wherefore he said, 'who seeth me seeth God' [NUR-I-MURLMMAD.]

"The germ that contains the Primal Element of Man is the lowest of the low, and the Divine Light is the highest of the high, it is between these extremes that the stages of man's upward or downward progress he 'We have created man in the fairest of proportions, and then have thrown him back to be the lowest of the low, save only such a believe and act with righter unness, and verily these shall have their reward' (Cor cap 95, v 4) This reward is said by the Suffs to be defined by the word agrat, 'reward,' itself This word contains three radical letters | g and , | stands for $\lambda \lambda \lambda \cdot return,'

g for da 'paradise,' and , for day, that is 'those who have handed down the faith' Their acting righteensly is their return to the Nature of God, for when they have inished their upward progress and reached this they are in Paradise, and in the presence of their God. He therefore is a man, in the true sense of the word, who being sent down upon earth strives upward towards Heaven. These aspirations are indispensable to man, he might by the Almighty Power of God exist without all beside, even had the Heavens and the elements themselves never been, but these things are the aim and want of all "It has been said that the Primal Elements

"It has been said that the Primal Element or constructive spirit as well as the Spirit of Humanity proceed direct from God. They are therefore identical, and are both mcluded by the Sufis in the one term Concomitant Spirit. Now this Spirit, although distinct and individual, comprehends and governs the entire Universe. The Simple Natures are its administrators and exponents; of these the Seven Sires beget, and the Four Mothers conceive from the incarnation of this spirit in them, and their offspring is the triple kingdom, Mineral, Vegetable, and Animal. And so it is with the Leaser World of Man.

"Now this Spirit hath two functions, external and internal, the external is revealed in the material generation just alluded to, the internal abides in the heart of man. Whosoover purifies his heart from worldly impressions and desires, reveals this internal function of the Spirit within him, and illumines and revivities his soul

"Thus the Spirit at once comprehends the Universe and dwells in the heart of man.

VII Of the Upward Progress or Ascent of

"When Man has become assured of the truth of Revelation, he has reached the stage of Belief, and has the name of Missis, Believer When he further acts in obedience to the will of God, and apportuous the night and day for earnest prayer, he has reached the stage of worship, and is called an 'A'bid, or 'Worshipper' When he has expelled the love of this world from his heart, and occupies himself with a contemplation of the mighty Whole, he reaches the next stage, and becomes a Ldhid, or 'Recluse' When in addition to all this he knows God, and subsequently learns the mysterms of nature, he reaches the stage of Acquaintance, and is called 'A'rif, 'One who knows' The next stage is that in which he attains to the love of God, and is called a Welf, or 'Saint.' When he is moreover gifted with inspiration and the power of working miracles, he becomes a Nebi, 'Prophet'; and when entrusted next with the delivery of God's own message, he is called an 'Apostle,' Rusul. When he is appointed to abrogate a previous dispensation and preach a new one, previous dispensation and preach a new one, he is called Ulu 'PAzm, 'One who has a mission' When this mission is final, he has arrived at the stage called Khatm, or 'the beal' This is the Upward Progress of Man. The first stage is the 'Believer,' the last the 'Seal

"After separation from the body, the soul of Man returns to that Heaven which corresponds to the stage which he has attained, thus the Believer at last dwells in the heaven of lowest Heaven, and the Seal in the Heaven of Heavens, for it will be noticed that the stages of upward progress correspond to the number of degrees in the Heavenly Spheres, namely, seven inferior and two superior

"The metaphysicians say that these stages and degrees do not in reality exist, but that the Heavanly Intelligence which corresponds to the degree of intelligence attained by Man, attracts and absorbs his soul into itself after separation from the hody. Thus every one who has attained intelligence corresponding to that of the highest sphere, his soul returns thereto; and he who has attained intelligence corresponding to the lowest sphere, his soul in like manner returns to that, those who have not attained intelligence corresponding to any of these will be placed in Hell, which is situate below the lowest sphere.

"As each of the Heavenly Spheres is furnished with knowledge and purity in proportion to its position, the rank of Man's soul in the future state will, seconding to this last account, be in proportion to his degree of knowledge and purity of life while upon the certh.

"The Unitarians say that man's Upward Progress has no end, for if he strive for a thousand years, each day will teach him something that he knew not before, masmuch as the knowledge of God has no limit So Mohammed says, ' He who progresses daily is yet of feeble mind.

"The religious account says that the soul of every man returns to an individual place after separation from the body This the metaphysicians deny, for how, say they, can the soul of a man return to a certain place when it has not originally come from a cer tain place? The soul of man is the Primal Spirit, and if a thousand persons live, it is the same spirit that animates them all, and in like manner if a thousand die, the same spirit returns to itself, and is not lessened or dimi-If a myriad persons build houses and make windows therein, the same sun illumines them all, and though every one of them should be destroyed, the sun would not be lessened or diminished The sun is the lord of the sensible world, and the exponent of the attri-butes of the Primal Spirit. The Primal Spirit is the lord of the invisible world and the exponent of the Nature of God.

"When the heart of man has been revivified and illumined by the Primal Spirit, he has arrived at Intelligence, for Intelligence is a light in the heart, distinguishing between truth and vanity Until he has been so reviviled and illumined, it is impossible for him to attain to intelligence at all But having attained to intelligence, then, and not till then, is the time for the attainment of knowledge. for becoming Wise Intelligence is a Primal Element, and knowledge the attribute there-When from knowledge he has successively proceeded to the attainment of the Divine Light, and acquaintance with the mysteries of nature, his last step will be Perfection, with which his Upward Progress con-

"But dive he ever so deeply into the treasury of mysteries and knowledge, unless he examine himself and confess that after all he knows naught, all that he has acquired will slip through his hands, and leave him far poorer than before His treasure of to-day should as much exceed the treasure of yesterday as an ocean exceeds a drop, but this can never be, unless he, leaving all else for contemplation and self-examination, have freedom and leasure to learn how poor he really is, and how much he needs the saving help of God.

"One class of Unitarians expl ward Progress of Man thus. every atom of existent beings is light

Arise and look around, for that has birth

Shines forth a lustrous bea mine all the earth.

but that man walks abroad in blinded by the lusts of life, and want of light that would, were he of it, involve him in the glorion brightest day

Twere well to catch the about our senses play, For all the world is full of bl

the sweets away What they mean is this, that beings are compounded of two t. ness and light, which are indist blended together The light bel Invisible, and the darkness to world, but the two are intimately and the former exercises a par fluence upon the latter The ob. according to them, is to separa from the darkness, that its nature butes may be understood, and in t his Upward Progress

" Although the light and the d never be entirely separated, for th it were the veil of the other, the l made to prevail, so that its attr hecome manifest.

"Now it is possible to separathe light from the darkness in cel in the bodies of men and animi stance, there are certain organi work, whose sole object is this Thus, when food is introduced in much, the liver receives the cree sence of it and transmits it to the heart, in like manner, extracts the this, which is the life, and transm brain, lastly, the brain extractaof this, and transforms it into t life, the real light of all.

"The cluxir evolved by the b matinctive spirit, and is, as it w m a lantern, but it gives forth aft flickering and cloudy light, and n should therefore be to strengthen it by Renunciation and Contemp it give forth the true light which i this he necessarily becomes free fi 18 evil, and is adorned instead good and noble quality.

"The body of man is like a ! Vogetative Spirit 1s the lamp, 1 Spirit is the wick, the Instinctiv oil, and the Spirit of Humanity ti kindles all. 'Verily its oil we shine even though no fire kindles cap 24, v 85.) In other words, tive Spirit should feed and supply of Humanity, as the oil feeds at the flame in a lamp The Trav sim at completing this lamp, heart may be illumined, and things as they really are. When the Spirit of Humanity a 'light upon light' (Cor cap 24, v. 85) has thus kindled the Instinctive Spirit, God 'guideth whom He pleaseth to His own light' (idem), that is, to the divine light of His own nature, reaching which the Traveller's Upward Progress is complete, for 'from Him they spring, and unto Him return.'"

VIII Suf isem adapted to Muhammadanism

A clear and intelligible exposition of the principles of Süfiism, or Oriental Spiritualism, is given by Muhammad al-Misri, a Süfi of the Ilhämiyah school of thought, in the following categorical form (translated by Mr J P Brown, in the Journal of the American Oriental Society) It represents more particularly the way in which this form of mysticism is adapted to the stern and dogmatic teaching of Islam

Question -What is the beginning of at-Tasawwuf?

Answer—Iman, or faith, of which there are six pillars, namely, (1) Belief in God, (2) in His Angela, (8) in His Books, (4) and in His Prophets, (5) in the Last Day, and (6) in His decree of good and evil

Q-What is the result of at-Tasawwuf?

A—It is not only the reciting with the tongue these pillars of faith, but also establishing them in the heart. This was the reply made by the Murchid Junaidu T-Baghdādī, in answer to the same question.

Q.—What is the distinction between a Suff and an ordinary person?

A.—The knowledge of an ordinary person is but Imānu-i-Taqlīdī, or "a counterfeit faith," whereas that of the Ṣūfī is Iman-s-Taḥqīqī, or "true faith"

Q-What do you mean by counterfeit faith?

A -It is that which an ordinary person has derived from his forefathers, or from the teachers and preachers of his own day, without knowing why it is essential that a man should believe in these six articles for his soul's salvation. For example, a person may be walking in the public streets and find a precious jewel which, perhaps, kings had sought for in vain, and rulers who had conquered the whole world had sought for and yet had not found. But in this precious jewel he has found that which is more effulgent than the sun, when it is so bright that it obscures the lesser light of the moon, or even he has found an alchemy which can convert copper into gold And yet, perhaps, the finder knows not the value of the precious jewel, but thinks it a counterfeit jewel, and one which he would give away even for a drink of water if he were thirsty

Q.—What is the establishment of faith?

A.—The establishment of faith consists in a search being made for the true origin of each of these six pillars of faith, until the enquirer arrives at al-Magigal, "the Truth" Many persons pursue the journey for ten, or twenty, or thirty, or even forty years, and, wandering away from the true path, enter upon the path of error, and hence there are known to be seventy-three ways, only one of which is the way of Salvation. [SECTS.] At last, by a perfect subjection to the teaching of the Mursifid, or guide, they find out the value of the lost jewel which they have found, and their faith becomes manifest, and you might say that, with the light of a lamp, they have reached the sun. They then find out that the Tariqah, or journey of the Suff, is consistent with the Shariah, or law of Islam

Q-in matters of faith and worship, to what sect are the Sufis attached?

A—(To this reply the author says, speaking, of course, of his own people, that they are chiefly of the Sunni sect. But he does not notice that mystic doctrines are more prevalent amongst the Shī'ahs.)

Q.—When Bayasid al-Bistami was asked of what nect he was, he replied, "I am of the sect of Allah" What did he mean?

A —The sects of Allah are the four orthodox sects of Islam. [Here our author departs from true Sufi teaching ]

4.—Most of the Suffis, in their poema, use certain words which we hear and understand as showing that they were of the Metempsychosians. They say, "I am sometimes Lot, sometimes a vegetable, sometimes an animal, at other times a man." What does this mean?

A -Brother! the prophet has said . " My people, in the future life, will rise up in companies "-that is, some as monkeys, others as hogs, or in other forms—as is written in a verse of the Qur'an, Sürah kawiin 16 "Ye shall come in troops," which has been commented on by al-Banawi, who cites a tradition to the effect that at the resurrection, men will rise up in the form of those animals whose chief characteristics resemble their own ruling passions in life the greedy, avaricious man as a hog, the angry, pas-sionate man as a camel, the tale-bearer or mischief-maker as a monkey For though these men, while m this life, bore the human form externally, they were internally no-thing different from the animals whose characters are in common with their own. The resemblance is not manifest during the life, but becomes so in the other existence, after the resurrection. Let us avoid such traits, repentance before death will free us from these evils. The Prophet said with regard to this "Sleep is the brother of death. The dying man sees himself in his true character, and so knews whether or not he 18, by repentance, freed from his ruling passion of his. In like manner, he will see himself during his slumbers, still following in the path of his passions" For instance, the money-calculator, in sleep, sees himself engaged in his all-absorbing occupation, and this fact is a warning from God not to allow himself to be absorbed in any animal passion or degrading occupation. It is only by prayerful repentance that anyone can hope to see himself, in his sleep, delivered from his ruling carnal passion, and restored to his proper human, intellectual form If in your slumbers you see a monkey, consider it as a warning to abandon or abstain from the passion of mischief, if a hog, coase to select upon the goods of others, and so on Go and give yourself up to an upright Murshid, or spiritual guide, who will, through his prayers, show you in your slambers the evil parts of your character, until one by one they have passed away, and have been replaced by good ones—all through the power of the name of God, whom he will instruct you to invoke [ZIKR] at length you will only see in your slumbers the forms of hely and pious men, in testimony of that degree of piety to which you will have attained. This is what is meant by that expression of certain poets, referring to one's condition previous to the act of repentance, when the writer says, "I am sometimes an animal, sometimes a vegetable, semetimes a man", and the same may be said by the Suffe, in application to themselves, as of any other part of creation, for man is called the akhiru 'l-maujudat, or "the climax of beings" for in him are comprised all the characteristics of creation Many mystical books have been written on this subject, all showing that man is the larger part, and the world the smaller part, of God's creation The human frame is said to comprise all the other parts of creation and the heart of man is supposed to be even more comprehensive than the rainbow, because, when the eyes are closed the mental capacity can take in the whole of a vast city, though not seen by the eyes, it is seen by the capacious nature of the mind. Among such books is the Hauzu ! Hayat, or the "Well of Life," which says that, if a man closes his eyes, ears, and nostrils, he cannot take cold, that the right nostril is called the sun, and the left the moon, that from the former he breathes heat, and from the latter cold air

Q.—Explain the distinctive opinions of the Sufis in at-Tanasukh, or the Transmigration of Souls

A —O Brother! our teaching regarding al-Barzakh (Qur'an xxiii 102) has nothing whatever to do with at-Tanasukh Of all the erring sects in the world, those who believe in Metempsychosis, or Transmigration of Souls, is the very worst

Q.—The Sufis regard certain things as lawful which are forbidden. For instance, they enjoin the use of wine, wine-shops, the wine-cup, sweethearts, they speak of the eurls of their mistresses, and the moles on their faces, cheeks, &c, and compare the furrowe on their brows to verses of the Qur'an. What does this mean?

A.—The Sufis often exchange the external

A—The Sufis often exchange the external features of all things for the internal, the corporeal for the spiritual, and thus give an imaginary signification to outward forms. They held cheefe of the external forms.

They behold objects of a precious nature in their natural character and for this reason the greater part of their words have a spiritual and figurative meaning. For instance, when, like Haffy, they mention wine, they mean a knowledge of God, which, figuratively considered, is the love of God. Wine, viewed figuratively, is also love love and affection are here the same thing. The wine-shop, with them, means the murshedu 'lkāmel, or spiritual director, for his heart is said to be the depository of the love of God; the wine-cup is the Taloin, or the pronunci-ation of the name of God in a declaration of faith, as "There is no God but Allah!" or it signifies the words which flow from the Murshid's mouth respecting divine know-ledge, and which, when heard by the Sāik, or "one who pursues the true path," intoxicates his soul, and divests his heart of passions, giving him pure spiritual delights. The sweetheart means the excellent preceptor, because, when anyone sees his beloved, he admires her perfect proportions, with a heart full of love; the Salik beholds the secret knowledge of God which fills the heart of his spiritual preceptor, or Murshid, and through it receives a similar inspiration, and acquires a full perception of all that he possesses, just as the pupil learns from his master As the lover delights in the presence of his sweetheart, so the Salik rejoices in the company of his beloved Murshid, or The sweetheart is the object of preceptor a worldly affection, but the preceptor of a spiritual attachment. The ourls or ringlets of the beloved are the grateful praises of the preceptor, tending to bind the affections of the disciple, the moles on her face aignify that when the pupil, at times, beholds the total absence of all worldly wants on the part of the preceptor, he also abandons all the desires of both worlds he perhaps even goes so far as to desire nothing else in life than his preceptor, the furrows on the brow of the beloved one, which they compare to verses of the Quran, mean the light of the heart of the Murshid, they are compared to verses of the Qur'an, because the attributes of God, in accordance with the injunction of the Prophet "Be ye endued with divine qualities," are possessed by the Murshid Q.—The Murshids and their disciples often say "We see God" Is it possible for anyone to see God?

A—It is not possible What they mean by this assertion is that they know God, that they see His power, for it is forbidden to mortal eyes to behold Him, as is declared in the Qur'an, Sürah vi 108 "No sight reaches Him, He reaches the sight—the subtle, the knowing" The Prophet commanded us to "adore God, as thou wouldst didst thou see Him, for, if thou dost not see Him, He sees thee." This permission to adore Him is a divine favour, and they say that they are God's servants by divine favour "All said "Should the veil fall from my eyes, how would God visit me in truth?" This saying proves that no one really sees God, and that even the sainted 'Ali never saw Him.

Q—Can it possibly be erroneous to say that, by seeing the traces of anyone he may be beheld?

A.—One may certainly be thus seen When any person sees the brightness of the sun, he may safely say that he has seen the sun, though, indeed, he has not really seen it. There is another example, namely Should you hold a mirror in your hand, you see a figure in it, and you may, therefore, say that you see your own face, which is really an impossibility, for no one has ever seen his own face, and you have asserted what is not strictly correct.

Q.—Since everyone sees the traces of God, as everyone is able to do, how is it that the Sufis declare that they only see Him?

A.—Those who make this statement do not know what they see, for they have never really seen Him. A person who has eaten of a sweet and savoury dish given to him, but of which he knews not the name, seeks for it again with a longing deere after it, and thus wanders about in search of what has given him so much delight, even though he be ignorant of what it really was. So are these who seek after God, without knowing Him, or what He is

Q—Some Sufis declare "We are neither afraid of Hell, nor do we desire Heaven"—a saying which must be blasphemous. How is this?

A -They do not really mean that they do not fear Hell, and that they do not wish for Heaven. If they really meant this, it would be blasphemous Their meaning is not as they express themselves, probably they wish to say "O Lord, Thou who createdst us, and madest us what we are, Thou hast not made us because we assist Thy workings We are in duty bound to serve Thee all the more devotedly, wholly in obedience to Thy holy will. We have no bargaining with Thee, and we do not adore Thee with the view of gaining thereby either Heaven or Hell ' As it is written in the Qur'an, Surah 1x 112 "Verily, God hath bought of the believers their persons and their wealth, for the Paradise they are to have," which means that His bounty has no bounds, His mercy no end; and thus it is that He benefits His faithful servants. They would say "Thou hast no bargaining with any one, our devotion is from the sincerity of our hearts, and is for love of Thee only Wore there no Heaven, nor any Hell, it would still be our duty to adore Thes. To Thee belongs the perfect right to put us either in Heaven or in Hell, and may Thy commands be executed agreeably to Thy blessed will! If Thon puttest as in Heaven, it is through Thine excellence, not on account of our devotion, if Thou puttest us in Hell, it is from out of Thy great justice, and not from any arbitrary decision on Thy part, so be it for ever and for ever!" This is the true meaning of the Sufis when they say they do not desire Heaven or fear Hell

Q.—Thou saids that there is no conflict between the Sharkah, "law," and the Hagigah, "truth," and nothing in the latter inconsistent with the former, and yet these two are distinguished from one another by "a something" which the Ahlu 'l-Haqiquk, "believers in the truth," conceal. Were there nothing conflicting, why should it be thus hidden?

A—If it be concealed, it is not because there is a contrariety to the law, but only because the thing hidden is contrary to the human mind, its definition is subtle, and not understood by everyone, for which reason the Prophet said "Speak to men according to their mental capacities, for if your speak all things to all men, some cannot understand you, and so fall into error." The Safis therefore, hide some things conformably with this precept

Q—Should anyone not know the science which is known to the Şūfis, and still do what the law plainly commands, and be satisfied therewith, would his faith and Islām be less than that of the Şūfis?

A—No. He would not be inferior to the Suffs, his faith and Islam would be equal even to that of the prophets, because Iman and Islam are a jewel which admits of no division or separation into parts, and can neither be increased nor diminished, just as the portion of the sun enjoyed by a king and by a jaque is the same, or as the limbs of the poor and the rich are equal in number: just as the members of the body of the king and the subject are precisely alike, so is the faith of the Muslim the same in all and common to all, neither greater nor less in any case.

Q.—Some men are prophets, saints, pure ones, and others Fasqs (who know God, but perform none of His commands), what difference is there among them?

A—The difference lies in their mainifeld, or "knowledge of spiritual things", but in the matter of faith they are all equal, just as, in the case of the ruler and the subject, their limbs are all equal, while they differ in their dress, power and office

IX Suf : Poetry

The very essence of Suffiam is postry, and the Eastern Mystics are never tired of expa-tiating on the 'Ishq, or "love to God," which is the one distinguishing feature of Saff mys-The Masnawi, which teaches in the ticiam sweetest strains that all nature abounds with love divine, that causes even the lowest plant to seek the sublime object of its desire. works of the celebrated Jami, so full of ecstatic rapture, the moral lessons of the eloquent Sa'dī, and the lyric edes of Hafis. may be termed the Scriptures of the Safi sect, and yet each of these authors contains passages which are unfit for publication in an English dress, and advocate morals at variance with what Christianity teaches us to be the true reflection of God's Holy Will. Whilst propriety demands the suppression of verses of the character alluded to, we give a few odes as specimens of the higher order of Sali poetry

Jalkin 'd-din ar-Rümi, the author of the Magnawi (A.E. 670), thus writes —

"I am the Gospel, the Psalter, the Qur'an,... I am 'Essa and Lat--(Arabic deities)—Bell and the Dragon

Into three and seventy sects is the world divided,

Yet only one God, the faithful who believe m Him am I Thou knowest what are fire, water, air and earth,

Fire, water, air, and earth, all am I Lies and truth, good, had, hard and soft.

Lies and truth, good, had, hard and soft, Knowledge, solitude, virtue, faith, The deepest ground of hell, the highest torment of the flames, The highest paradise,

The earth and what is therein,

The angels and the devils, Spirit and man, am I.

What is the goal of speech, Otell it Shams Tabrīsī?

The goal of sense? This -- The world Soul am I"

And again ---

"Are we fools? We are God's captivity
Are we wise? We are His promenade.
Are we sleeping? We are drunk with God.

Are we waking? Then we are His heralds.

Are we weeping? Then His clouds of wrath.

Are we laughing? Flashes of His love."

Every night God frees the host of spirits, Frees them every night from fleshly prison Then the soul is neither slave nor master, Nothing knows the bondsman of his bond-

Nothing knows the lord of all his lordship Gone from such a night, is eating sorrow, Gone, the thoughts that question good or syil.

Then without distraction, or division, In this One the spirit sinks and slumbers"

The following is from the mystic poet Mahmad ---

"All sects but multiply the I and Thou,
This I and Thou belong to partial being When I and Thou, and several being vanish,

Then mosque and church shall find Thee nevermore.

Our individual life is but a phantom, Make clear thine eye, and see reality "

The following verses are by Faridu 'd-din Shakrgunj (A.E. 662) —

"Man, what thou art is hidden from thyself,

Knew'st not that morning, mid-day, and the eve

Are all within Thee? The ninth heaven art Thou;

And from the spheres into the roar of time

Didst fall ere-while, Thot: art the brush that painted

The hues of all the world—the light of hie

That ranged its glory in the nothingness " Joy! joy! I triumph now, no more I know

Myself as simply me I burn with love
The centre is within me, and its wonder Lies as a circle everywhere about me.
Jog! joy! No mortal thought can fathom me I am the merchant and the pearl at once.

Le! time and space he crouching at my feet Joy! joy! When I would revel in a rapture, I plunge into myself, and all things know "

Mr Lane, in his Modern Egyptions, gives a translation of a Sufi poem recited by an Egyptian Darwesh ---

"With my love my heart is troubled,
And mine eye-lid hind'reth sleep
My vitals are dissever'd,
While with streaming tears I weep.
My union seema far distant
Will my love e er meet mine eye?
Alas! Did not estrangement
Draw my tears, I would not sigh

By dreary nights I'm wasted
Absence makes my hope expire
My tears, like pearls, are dropping,
And my heart is wrapt in fire
Whose is like my condition?
Scarcely know I remedy
Alas! Did not estrangement
Draw my tears, I woult not sigh,

O turtle-dove! acquaint me
Wherefore thus dost thou lament?
Art thou so stung by absence?
Of thy wings depriv'd and pent?
He saith, 'Our griefs are equal Worn away with love, I lie'
Alas! Did not estrangement
Draw my tears, I would not sigh

O First, and sole Eternal!
Show thy favour yet to me
Thy slave, Ahmad El-Bekree, Hath no Lord excepting Thee.
By Tá-há, the Great Prophet!
Do thou not his wish deny.
Alas! Did not estrangement
Draw my tears, I would not aigh"

Dr Tholuck quotes this verse from a Darwesh Breviary —

"Yesterday I beat the kettle-drum of dominion,

I pitched my tent on the highest throne; I drank, crowned by the Beloved,

The wine of unity from the cup of the Almighty"

One of the mest characteristic Suff poems is the Persian poem by the poet Jāmī, en titled Sulāmān and Absāl. The whole narrative is supposed to represent the joys of Love Divine as compared with the delusive fascinations of a Lafe of Sense. The story is that of a certain King of Ionia, who had a son named Salāmān, who in his infancy was nursed by a young maiden named Absal, who, as he grew up, fell desperately in love with the youth, and in time ensuared him. Balaman and Absal rejoiced together in a life of sense for a full year, and thought their pleasures would never end A certain sage is then sent by the king to reason with the erring couple. Salaman confesses that the sage is right, but pleads the weakness of his own will. Salāmān leaves his native land in company with Absal, and they find themselves on an island of wonderful heauty Salaman, unsatisfied with himself and his love, returns once more to his native country, where he and Absal resolve to destroy themselves. They go to a desert and kindle a pile, and both walk into the fire Absāl is consumed, but Salāmān is preserved in the fire, and lives to lament the fate of his beloved one. In course of time he is introduced by the sage to a celestral beauty called Zuhrah, with whom he becomes completely enamoured, and Absal is forgotten.

Geloshal beauty seen,
He left the earthly, and once come to know

Eternal love, he let the mortal go "

In the epilogue to the poem, the author explains the mystic meaning of the whole story in the following language —

"Under the outward form of any story
An inner meaning hea—this story now Completed, do thou of its mystery (Whereto the wise hath found himself a way)

Have thy desire—no tale of I and Thou, Though I and Thou be its interpreters What signifies the King? and what the Sage?

And what Salāmān not of woman born? And what Absal who drew him to desire?

And what the Kingdom that awaited him

When he had drawn his garment from her hand?

What means that Fiery Pile? and what the Sea?

And what that heavenly Zuhrah who at Clear'd Absal from the murror of his soul?

Learn part by part the mystery from

All ear from head to foot and understanding be.

The incomparable Oreator, when this world

He did create, created first of all
The first intelligence—first of a chain
Of ten intelligences, of which the last Sole Agent is this our Universe, Active intelligence so call'd, the one
Distributor of evil and of good,
Of joy and sorrow. Himself apart from matter,

In essence and in energy—His treasure

Subject to no such talisman—He yet 'Eath fashion'd all that is—material form,

And spiritual sprung from Him-by Directed all, and in Hls bounty drown'd.

Therefore is He that Firman-issuing King

To whom the world was subject. But because

What he distributes to the Universe Humself from still higher power receives, The wise, and all who comprehend aright,

Will recognise that higher in the Sage

His the Prime Spirit that, spontaneously Projected by the tenth intelligence, Was from no womb of matter reproduced A special essence called the Soul—a Child

Fresh sprung from heaven in raiment undefiled

Of sensual taint, and therefore call'd Salāmān.

And who Absal?—The lust-adoring body,

Slave to the blood and sense—through whom the Soul,

Although the body's very life it be, Does yet imbibe the knowledge and desire of things of sense, and these united thus

By such a tie God only can unloose, Body and soul are lovers each of other

What is the Sea on which they sail'd?---

Of animal desire—the sensual abyse, Under whose waters lies a world of being Swept far from God in that submersion.

And wherefore was Abeal in that Isle Deceived in her delight, and that Salaman

Fell short of his desire?—that was to show

How passion tires, and how with time begins

The folding of the carpet of desire.

And what the turning of Salaman's heart

Back to the King, and looking to the throne

Of pomp and glory? What but the return

Of the lost soul to its true parentage, And back from carnal error looking up Repentant to its intellectual throne.

What is the Fire?—Ascetic discipline, That burns away the animal alloy, Till all the dross of matter be consumed, And the essential Soul, its raiment clean

Of mortal taint, be left. But forasmuch

As, any life-long habit so consumed, May well recur a pang for what is lost, Therefore the Sage set in Salaman's

A soothing fantom of the past, but still Told of a better Venus, till his soul She fill'd, and blotted out his mortal Love

For what is Zuhrah?-That divine perfection,

Wherewith the soul inspir'd and all array'd

Its intellectual light is royal blest, And mounts the throne, and wears the crown, and reigns

Lord of the empire of humanity

This is the meaning of this mystery, Which to know wholly ponder in thy heart.

Till all its ancient secret be enlarged Enough—the written summary I close, And set my seal

THE TRUTH GOD ONLY KNOWS"

X The True Character of Suffirm

It will be seen that the great object of the Safi Mystic is to lose his own identity Having effected this, perfection is attained This ideal conception of the Sufi is thus expressed by Jalain 'd dinn 'r-Rumi in his book, the Magnawi (p. 78) It represents Human Leve seeking admission into the Sanctuary of Divinity

"One knocked at the door of the Beloved, and a voice from within inquired, 'Who is there?' Then he answered, 'It is I' And the voice said, 'This house will not hold me and thee' So the door remained shut Then the Lover sped away into the wilderness, and fasted and prayed in soli-tude And after a year he returned, and knocked again at the door, and the voice again demanded, 'Who is there?' And the Lover said, 'It is Thou' Then the door was opened "

The Sufi doctrines are undoubtedly pantheistic, and are almost identical with those of the Brahmans and Buldhists, the Neo-Platomets, the Beghards and Beguns There is the same union of man with God, the same emanation of all things from God, and the same final absorption of all things into the Divine Essence. And these doctrines are held in harmony with a Muhammadan view of predestination, which makes all a necessary evolution of the Divine Essence The creation of the creature, the fall of those who have departed from God, and their final return, are all events pre-ordained by an absolute necessity

Bāyazīdu I-Bistāmī, a mystic of the ninth century, said he was a sea without a bottom. without beginning and without end Being asked, "What is the throne of God!" he answered, "I am the throne of God " " What is the table on which the divine decrees are written?" "I am that table" "What is the pen of God—the word by which God created all things?" "I am the pen. "What is Abraham, Moses, and Jesus?"
"I am Abraham, Moses, and Jesus" "What are the angels Gabriel, Michael, Israfil?" "I am Gabriel, Michael, Israfil, for whatever comes to true being is absorbed into God, and this is God." Again, in another place, al-Bistami cries, "Praise to me, I am truth I am the true God. Praise to me. I must be celebrated by divine praise.

The chief school of Arabian philosophy, that of al-Ghanzali (A.H. 505), passed over to Suffism by the same reasoning which led Plotinus to his mystical theology After long inquiries for some ground on which to base the certainty of our knowledge, al-Ghazzali was led to reject entirely all belief in the senses. He then found it equally difficult to be certified of the accuracy of the conclusions of reason, for there may be, be thought, some faculty higher than reason, which, if we possessed, would show the uncertainty of reason, as reason now shows the uncertainty of the senses. He was left in scepticism, and saw no escape but in the Sufi umon with Deity There alone can man know what is true by becoming the truth itself "I was forced," he said, " to return to the admission of intellectual notions as the bases of all certitude. This, however, was not by systematic reasoning and accumulation of proofs, but by a flash of light which God sent into my soul! For whoever imagines that truth can only be rendered evident by proofs, places narrow limits to the wide compassion of the Oreator"

Suffirm (saya Mr Cowell) has arisen from the bosom of Muhammadanism as a vague protest of the human soul, in its intense longing after a purer creed On certain tenets of the Qur'an the Suiss have erected their own system, professing, indeed, to veverence its authority as a divine revolation, but in reality substituting for it the oral voice of the teacher, or the secret dreams of the Mystic Dissatisfied with the barren letter of the Qur'an, Sufilsm appeals to human consciousness, and from our nature's felt wants, seeks to set before us nobler hopes than a gross Muhammadan

Paradise can fulfil

Whilst there are doubtless many amongst the Sufis who are earnest seekers after truth, it is well known that some of them make their mystical creed a cloak for gross sensual gratification. A sect of Stiffs called the Muhöbiyah, or "Revered," maintain the doctrine of community of property and women, and the sect known as the Mald matiyah, or "reproached," maintain the doctrine of necessity, and compound all virtue with vice. Many such do not hold themselves in the least responsible for sine committed by the body, which they regard only as the miserable robe of humanity which encircles the pure spirit.

Some of the Stiff poetry is most objection-able MacGuckin de Slane, in his Introduction to Ibn Khaliikan's Biographical Dictionary, says—"It often happens that a post describes his matress under the attributes of the other sex, lest he should offend that excessive prudery of Oriental feelings which, since the fourth century of Islamism, scarcely allows an allusion to women, and more particularly in poetry; and this rigidness is still carried so far, that Cairo public singers dars not amuse their auditors with a song in which the beloved is indicated as a female. It cannot, however, be demed that the feelings which inspired poetry of this kind were not always pure, and that polygamy and jealousy have invested the morals of some Eastern nations with the foulest corruption

The story of the Rev Dr 'Imadu 'd-din (the emment native clargyman, a convert from Islam, now residing at Amritan') is a remarkable testimony to the unsatisfying nature of Sufficience exercises to meet the spiritual need of anxious soul. The following extract from the printed autobiography of his life will show this —

"I sought for umon with God from tra-vellers and fagirs, and even from the insane people of the city, according to the tenets of the 5afl mystics. The thought of utterly renouncing the world then came into my mind with so much power, that I left everybody, and went out into the desert, and became a faqir, putting on clothes covered with red other, and wandered here and there, from city to city and from village to village, step by step, alone, for about 2,000, or (2,500 miles) without plan or baggage Faith in the Muhammadan religion will never, indeed, allow true sincerity to be produced in the nature of man; yet I was then, although with many worldly motives, in search only of God. In this state I entered the city of Karuli, where a stream called Obouds flows beneath a mountain, and there I stayed to perform the Hisbu 'l-bahār I had a book with me on the doctrines of mysticism and the practice of devotion, which I had received from my religious guide, and held In my more dear even than the Quran journeys I slept with it at my side at nights, and took comfort in clasping it to my heart whenever my mind was perplexed religious guide had forbidden me to show this book, or to speak of its secrets to anyone, for it contained the sum of everlasting happiness, and so this priceless book is even now lying useless on a shelf in my house I took up the book, and sat dewn on the bank of the stream, to perform the coremonies as they were enjoined according to the following rules -The celebrant must first perform his ablutions on the bank of the flowing stream, and, wearing an unsewn dress, must sit in a particular manner on one knee for twelve days, and repeat the prayer called Jagopar thirty times every day with a loud voice. He must not eat any food with sait, or anything at all, except some barley bread of flowr lawfully carned, which he has made with his own hands, and baked with wood that he has brought himself from the jungles During the day he must fast entirely, after performing his ablutions in the river before daylight and he must remain barefooted, wearing no shoes; nor must be tench any man, nor, except at an appointed time, even speak to anyone object of all this is, that he may meet with God, and from the longing desire to obtain this, I underwent all this pain. In addition to the above, I wrote the name of God on paper 125,000 times, performing a certain portion every day, and I cut out each word separately with scassors, and wrapped them up each in a ball of flour, and fed the fishes of the river with them, in the way the book prescribed. My days were spent in this manner, and during balf the night I slept, and the remaining half I sat up, and wrote the name of God mentally on my heart, and saw Him with the eve of thought. When all this toil was over, and I went thence, I had no atrength left in my body, my face was wan and pale, and I could not even hold myseli up against the wind "

Major Durie Osborn, in his Islam under the Khalifs of Baghdad (p. 112), says "The spread of this Pantheistic spirit has been and is the source of incalculable evil throughout the Muhammadan world. The true function of religion is to vivify and illuminate all the ordinary relations of life with light from a higher world The weakness to which reli gious minds are pecuharly prone is to suppose that this world of working life is an atmosphere too gross and impure for them They crave for better bread than to live in can be made from wheat They attempt to inshion a world for themselves, where nothing shall soil the purity of the soul or disturb the serenity of their thoughts The divorce thus effected between the religious life and the worldry life, is disastrous to both. The ordinary relations of men become empired of They are considered all divine significance as the symbols of bondage to the world or to an evil deity The religious spirit dwindles down to a selfish desire to soquire a felicity from which the children of this world are hopelessly excluded Pre-emmently has this been the result of Mahammadan mysticism It has dug a deep gulf between those who can know God and those who must wander in darkness, feeding upon the hosks of rites and coromonies. It has affirmed with emphasis, that only by a complete renunciation of the world is it possible to attain the true end of man's existence Thus all the best and purest natures—the men who might have put a soul in the decaying Church of Islam—have been drawn off from their proper task to wander about in deserts and solitary places, or expend their lives in idle and profitless passivity disguised under the title of 'apiritual centemplation' [ZIER] But this has only been part of the evil The logical result of Pantheism is the destruction of a moral law If God be all in all, and man's apparent undividuality a delusion of the perceptive faculty, there exists no will which can act, no conscience which can reprove or appland. The individual is but a momentary seeming, he comes and goes like ' the snow-lake on the river a moment seen, then gone for ever' To reproach such an ephemeral creature for being the slaves of its passions, is to chide the thistledewn for yielding to the violence of the wind. Muhammadans have not been slow to discover these consequences. Thouslow to discover these consequences sands of reckless and profligate spirits have entered the orders of the derweshes to enjoy the liesnoe thereby obtained. Their affectation of piety is simply a clock for the practice of sensuality, their emancipation from the ritual of Islam involves a liberation also from its moral restraints And thus a movement, animated at its outset by a high and lofty purpose, has degenerated into a fruitful source of ill. The stream which ought to have expanded into a fertilising river, has become a vest swamp, exhaing vapours charged with disease and death" [FAQIR]

SUICIDE Arabic Qatlu nafsi-hi (قتل نفسة) Stucide is not once referred to in the Quran, but it is forbidden in the Tradiuons, where Muhammad is related to have said "Whosoever shall kill himself shall suffer in the fire of hell" (al-Bukhari, Arabic ed , p 984), and "shall be excluded from heaven for ever" (abid p 182) It is also related that the Prophet refused the funeral rites to a suicide (Abu Da'ud, Arabic ed, vol. ii p 98), but it is usual in Muhammadan countries to perform the funeral service, although forbidden by the custom of the Prophet himself

Surah h. 38 "We sent him (Moses) to Pharach with a manifest power (miracle, or authority)"

SUNNAH (...) Let "A path or way, a manner of life" A term used in the religion of the Muslim to express the custom or manner of life. Hence the tradition which records either the sayings or doings of Muhammad. Consequently all traditional law is divided into (1) Sunnatu 'I-Fi'l, or what Muhammad did, (2) Sunnatu 'I-Qaul, or what Muhammad enjoined, (8) Sunnatu 't-Tuqrur, or that which was done or said in the presence of Muhammad, and which was not forbidden by him,

Those things which the 1 rophet emphatically enjoined on his followers are called Sunnatu 'l-Huda, "Sunna of Guidance," or as-Sunnatu V-Mu'akkadah as, for example, the sounding of the agan before prayers Those things which have not been emphatically enjoined, are called as-Sunnatu 'l-Za'sdah, or "Superogatory Sunnah "

The Honourable Syed Ahmed Khan, C S.L. says in his Essay on the Traditions, that "upon examining the sayings (or the Abadis), and the deeds (or the Sunnah) of the Pro-phet, we find (1) some of them relating to religion, (2) others connected with the pecu-liar circumstances of his life, (8) some bearing upon society in general, and (4) others concerning the art of Government" When Muhammad spoke on the subject of religion, he is held to have been inspired, and also when he performed a religious act he is beheved to have been guided by inspiration, but with regard to other matters, the degree to which he was inspired is held to be a subject for investigation as well as for discrimination. In support of this view, the following tradition is related by Rafi' ibn Khadij: "The Prophet came to al-Madinah when the people were grafting the male bud of a date tree into the female in order to produce greater abundance of fruit, and he said, 'Why do you do this?' They replied, 'It is an ancient custom.' The Prophet said, 'Perhaps it would be better if you did net do it.' And then they left off the custom, and the trees yielded but little fruit. The people complained to the Prophet, and he said, 'I am no more than a man. When I order anything respecting religion, receive at | but when Forder you about the affairs of the world, then I speak only as a man." (Mishkat, book i ch vi pt 1)

'Abdu 'llab ibn Mas'fid says "The Prophot drew a straight line for us, and said, This is the path of God.' Then he drew several other lines on the right and left of it, and said. There are the paths of those who follow the devil. Verily my path (sunnah) is straight and you must follow it."

It is upon the sayings and customs of Muhammad that that traditional law is founded which is handed down in the Hadis, and which is treated of under the article TRADI-

SUNNI (124). Let. "One of the path" A Traditionist A term generally applied to the large sect of Muslims who acknowledge the first four Khalifaha to h ve been the rightful successors of Muhammad, and who receive the Kutubu 's-Sittuh, or ' six authentic" books of tradition, and who belong to one of the four schools of june prudence founded by Imam Abu Hanifah, Imam ash-Shāfi'ī, Imām Mālik, or Imām Ahmad ibn Hambal

The word Sunni is really a Persian form, with its plural Sunniyan, and stands for that which is expressed by the Arabic Allu's-Sunnah, "the People of the Path" The word sussed meaning a "path," but being applied to the example of Muhammad

A Summi is held to be a traditionist, not that any section of Islam rejects the traditions, but merely that the hunnis have arro gated to themselves this title and the rest of the Muslim world has acquiesced in the assumption, hence it comes to pass that although the Shi'shs, even to a greater degree than the Sunnis, rest their claims upon traditional evidence, they have allowed their opponents to claim the title of traditionists, and consequently Mr Sale and many European writers have stated that the Shi'she reject the traditions

The Sunnis embrace by far the greater portion of the Muhammadan world According to Mr Wilfrid Blant's census, they are 145 millions, whilst the Shi'ahs are but some 15 millions.

The principal differences between the Sunnis and the Shi'aks are treated of in the article ser'an.

Supererogation, acts of. [HABL.]

SÜRAH (*,--) Let "A row or series." A term used exclusively for the chapters of the Quran, of which there are one hundred and fourteen in number These chapters are called after some word which, occurs in the text, eg Suratu 'l-Hadid, the "Chapter of Iron" The ancient Jews divided the whole law of Moses into fifty-four siderim, or "sections," which were named after the same manner as the Sürahs of the Qur'an. QUR'AN

(سترة) SUTRAH Let "That wherewith anything is concealed or covered " Something put up before one engaged in prayer facing Makkah, to prevent others from intruding upon his devotions. It may be a stick, or anything a cubit in height and an meh in thickness (Mishkat, book iv. ch. x ) [PRAYER.]

SUWA' (حراج) An idol mentioned in Sürab laxa. 22 Professor Palmer says it was an idol in the form of a woman, and believed to be a relic of satediluvian times (Introduction to the Qur'an, p. Kii )

SWEARING OATH.

Arabic khinzir (عنوير), SWINE pl khanāzir Heb און khazir fiesh is strictly forbidden to Muslims in four different places in the Qur'an, namely, Suraha u 168, v 4, v1 146, xvi. 116, in which places rts use is prohibited with that which dieth of itself and blood

In the Traditions, it is related that Mu-hammad said that "when Jesus the Son of Mary shall descend from the heavens upon your people as a just king, and he will break the cross and will kill all the steme (Mishkāt, book xxm ch v)

TALKING [CONVERSATION.]

TALMUD The traditional law of the Jews From Heb The lawed, "to learn" The learning of the Rabbis. Mr Emanuel Deutsch says

"It seems as if Muhammad had breathed from his childhood almost the air of contemporary Judaiam, as is found by us crystallized in the Talmud, the Targum and the Midrash.

"It is not merely parallelisms, reminiscences, allusions, technical terms, and the like of Judaism, its law and dogma and ceremony, its Halacha and its Haggadah (its law and legend), which we find in the Koran, but we think Islam neither more nor less than Judaism as adapted to Arabia—plus the Apostleship of Jesus and Muhammad"

(Leterary Remains, p 64)

How much Muhammad was indebted to the Jewish Talmid for his doctrines, ethics, and ceremonial, is shown in an essay by the Jewish Rabbi, Abraham Geiger, in answer to the question put by the University at Bonn "Inquirator in fontes Alcorani sen legis Mohammedices eos, qui ex Judeismo derivandi aunt," of which a German translation has appeared, Was hat Mohammed aus dem Juden thume aufgenommen? (Bonn, 1833), and is treated of in the present work in the article on Judaism

The Talmud consists of two parts The Mishna, or the text (what is called in Arabic the Matn), and the Gemara, or Commentary (Arabic Sharh). These two form the Talmud.)

The Mishna (from Shanah, to "repeat') or the oral law of the Jews, was not committed to writing until about the year A.D 190, by Rabbi Judah, although it is said it was first commenced by Rabbi Akibah, A.D 180

The Gernara (it "that which is perfect") are two commentaries on the Mishna The one compiled by Rabbi Jochonam at Jerusalem about the middle of the third century, and the other by Rabbi Ashe at Babylon, about the middle of the sixth

Canon Farrar (Lafe of Christ, vol. is p. 848), says "Anything more utterly unhistorical than the Talmad, cannot be conceived. It is probable that no human writings over confounded names, dates, and facts, with more absolute indifference."

And doubtless it is this unsatisfactory feature in the Talmud of the Jews which, to a great extent, accounts for the equally unhistorical character of the Qur'an.

For information on the Talmud, the English resider can consult the following works. The Talmud, by Joseph Bakklay, IA.D., Bishop of Jerusalem, 1878, A Talmude Miscellany, by Paul Isaac Hershon, 1880, Selections from the Talmud, by H. Polone, The Talmud, an article in the Quarterly Review, October, 1867, by Emanuel Deutsch, The Talmud, a chapter in The Home and Synagogus of the Modern Jew (Religious Tract Society). A complete translation of the Talmud is being undertaken by Mr. P I. Hershon. See Dr Farrar's Preface to the Talmudic Miscellany

TALQIN (coll) Lit. "Instructing" An exhortation or instruction imparted by a religious teacher. It is specially used for the instruction given at the grave of a departed Mushun, at the close of the burial service, when one of the mourners draws near the middle of the grave, addresses the deceased, and says —

"O servant of God and child of a female servant of God.

"O son of such an one, remember the faith you professed en earth to the very last, this is your witness that there is no deity but God, and that dertainly Muhammad is His Apostle, and that Paradise and Hell and the Resurrection from the dead are real, that there will be a Day of Judgment, and say 'I confess that God is my Lord, Islâm my religion, Muhammad (on whom be the mercy and peace of God) my Prophet, the Qur'an my guide, the Ka'bah my Qiblah, and that Mus lims are my brethren' O God, keep him (the deceased) firm in his faith, and widen his grave, and make his examination (by Munkir and Nakir) easy, and exalt him and have mercy on him, O Thou most Mercuful!"

"By the heaven, and by the night-comer!
But what shall teach thee

What the night-comer is?

"Tes the star of piercing radiance"

According to al Wahidi, these words were revealed when Abū Tālib, at the time of the evening meal, was startled by a shooting star. Noideke, however, observes that the three verses seem rather to apply to a planet or a fixed star of particular brightness TARIQAH (طرفة) "A path." A term used by the Sufis for the religious life.

TARWIYAH (1945) Let "Satisfying thirst," or, according to some, "giving attention" The eighth day of the pilgrimage, so called either because the pilgrims give their camels water on this day, or because Abraham gave attention (rawwa) to the vision wherein he was instructed to sacrifice his son Ishmael (?) on this day

TASAWWUF (متون) A word used to express the doctrines of the Sūfis or Muhammadan mystics Sūfism The word does not occur in the celebrated Arabic Dictionary, the Qāmūs, which was compiled A.H. 817, nor in the Sthāh, A.H. 898 [SUFI]

TASBIH (carm) (1) The ejaculation, "Subhāna 'llāh!" (sill gland), "I extol the holiness of God!" or "O Holy God!" A most mentorious ejacvlation which, if recited one hundred times, night and morning, is said by the Prophet to atone for man's sins, however many or great (Mishkāt, book x. ch. 11)

(تطرع) 'UWWAŢAT An act of supererogation. A term which includes both the sunnah and saff actions of the Muslim (q v ).

Surah of the Qur'an, beginning with the

"Wee to those who stint the measure Who when they take by measure from others, exact the full,

But when they mete to them or weigh to them, minish-

Have they no thought that they shall be raised again

For a great day "

We learn from the Itque that some commentators see in this passage allusions to Madinah circumstances, and consequently think that the Sürah, or at least part of it, was revealed in that town. But in connection with such obviously Makkan verses, as 30 and following, where it is said

"The sinners, indeed, laugh the faithful to

And when they pass by them, they wing at one another,

And when they return to their own people, they return jesting,

And when they see them, they say, 'Verily these are the erring ones'"—

it appears evident, that the pride and arregauce of the Makkans, founded on their illgotten wealth, is contrasted with the humble and precatious condition of the followers of Muhammad, to convey at the same time a solemn warning, that the positions will be reversed on the Great Dav of Reckoning

TATHIR ( along) A purifying or cleansing of anything which is ceremonially unclean For example, if a dog drinks from a vessel, it becomes names, or "impure," but it can be purified (tathir) by washing it seven times. A mosque which has been defiled can be cleaned with dry earth or water, and by recitals from the Qur'an If the boots on the feet have been defiled, they can be purified by rubbing them on dry earth

Bara' ibn 'Azib says that Muhammad taught that the micturation of an animal lawful for food does not render clothes coremomally unclean (Mishkat, book in chix) [Purification]

TATTOOING Muhammad forbade the custom of the idolaters of Arabia to prick the hands of their women and to rub the punctures over with wood, indigo, and (Mishkat, book xil. ch. i. other colours pt. 1)

TAUJIH (فحمة) Any pious ejathe Takbir (Misakat, book w ch xii) [PHAYER.]

TAURĂT (الوراة) The title given in the Qur'an (Surah in. 2), and in all Muhammadan works, for the Books of Moses It is the Hebrev [Torak," the Law"

The author of the Kachfu z-Zunun (the bibliographical dictionary of Haji Khalifah),

"The Taurat is the inspired book which God gave to Moses, and of which there are three well-known editions (1) The Tauratu 's-Saba'sa, 'the Turah of the Seventy,' which was translated from the Hebrew into Greek by seventy-two learned Jews. (It is admitted by Christian writers that the Law, is, the Pentatench, alone was translated first) It has since been translated into Syriac and Arabic. (2) The Tauratu'l-Qarra'ın wa Rabbanyin, 'the Taurat of the learned doctors and rabbins (3) The Tauratu's-Samurah, 'The Samaritan Pentatench'"

The same writer says the learned who have examined these editions of the Taurāt, found that although they agreed with each other and taught the unity of God, they do not contain an account of the stated prayers, the fast, the pilgrimage to Jerusalem, and althogoving, nor anything regarding heaven or hell, which is, he adds, a proof of the Taurāt having been altered by the Jews (Kashfu 'z-Zunūn, Flugel's edition, vol 11 p 459)

Although Muhammad professed to establish the Taurat of Moses (see Qur'an, Surahs 1180, in 78 iv 135), it would appear from the Traditions that he did not view with favour the reading of it in his presence.

It is related that 'Umar once brought a copy of the Taurat to the Prophet, and said, "This is a copy of the Taurat" Muhammad was silent, and 'Umar was about to read some portuchs of it Then Abū Bakr said, "Your mother weeps for you. Don't you see the Prophet's face look angry" Then 'Umar looked and he saw the Prophet was argry, and he said, "God protect me from the anger of God and of His Apostle I am satisfied with God as my Lord, Islam as my creed, and Muhammad as my Prophet' Then Muhammad said, "If Moses were alive and found my prophecy, he would follow me" [OLD TESTAMENT]

AT-TAUWAB (
"One who turns frequently, hence," the Relenting "One of the minety-nine names or attributes of God Freesded by the article, as a name of God, it occurs four times in the Süratu "-Baqarah (ii. 35, 51, 122, 155) and twice in the Süratu "t-Taubah (ix. 105, 179) In three of these passages, God's relenting mercy is illustrated by striking instances taken from ancient and contemporaneous history, vis. in the case of Adam, of the Jews after their worshipping the golden calf, and of the three men who did not accompany Muhammad in the expedition to Tabūk, and who, put under interdiction after his return, were not released from it till after fifty days of penance

Surah is 35 "And words of prayer learner Adam from his Lord and God relented to wards him verily. He is the Relenting, the Maronial."

Surah u. 51 "And remember when Moses said to his people 'O my people verily ye have sinned to your own hurt, by your taking to yourself the calf to worship it. Be turned then to your Creator, and slay the guilty among you, this will be best for you with your Creator.' So he relented towards you verily He is the Relenting, the Merciful."

Sürsh iv 119, "He has also turned in

Sürah iv 119, "He has also turned in Mercy unto the the who were left behind, so that the earth, spacious as it is, became too strait for them, and their sculs became so straitened within them, that there was no efuge from God but unto Himself Them was He turned to them that they might turn to Him Verily. God is He that turneth, the Merciful."

In the other places, mentioned above, and in two more (Surahs xxiv 10 and xlix. 12), where the word is used as an adjective without the article, it describes God as ever ready to turn in forgiveness to man in general and to the Muslim in particular, if they turn in repontance unto him.

TAWAF ( ) The ceremony of circumambulating the Kabah seven times, three times in a quick step and four at the ordinary pace. It is enjoined in the Quran, Sūrah xxii 27 Shaikh 'Abdu 'Haqq says it was the custom of the Arabian idelaters to perform the tawaf naked. [HASI]

TA'WIZ (موية). Let "To flee for refuge" An amulet or charm. A gold or silver case, inclosing quotations from the Qur'an or Hadis, and worn upon the breast, arm, neck, or we [AMULET]

TAXATION There are three words used for taxation in Muslim books of law (1) 'Ushr (علم), "the tenth", (2) Kharā (وابد), "land revenue", (3) Jisyah (غيم), "capitation tax"

(1) Landa, the preprietors of which become Muslims, or which the Imam divides among the troops, are 'Ushri, or subject to tithe, because it is necessary that something should be imposed and deducted from the subsistence of Muslims, and a tenth is the proportion most suitable to them, as that admits the construction of an oblation or act of piety, and also, because this is the most equitable method, since in this way the amount of what is levied depends upon the actual product of the lands

, (2) Lands, on the other hand, which the Imain subdues by force of arms and then restores to the people of the conquered territory, are Kharaji, or subject to tribute, because it is necessary that something be imposed and deducted from the subsistence of infidels, and tribute is the most suitable to their situation, as that bears the construction of a punishment, since it is a sort of hardship, the tax upop tribute land being due from the proprietor, although he should not have cultivated it. It is to be remarked, however that Makkah is excepted from this rule, as Muhammad conquered that territory by force of arms, and then restored it to the inhabitants without imposing tribute

It is written in the Janiu 's-Saghir that all land subdued by force of arms, if watered by canals cut by the Gentiles, is subject to tribute, whether the Imam have divided it among the troops, or restored it to the original inhabitants, and if there be no sanals, but the land be watered by springs, which rise within, it is subject to tithe, in either case, because tithe is peculiar to productive land, that is, land capable of cultivation, and which yields increase, and the increase produced from it is occasioned by water. The standard, therefore, by which tribute is due is the land being watered by which tithe is due is the land being watered by which tithe is due is the land being watered by tithe water, namely, springs

If a person cultivate waste lands, the imposition of tithe or tribute upon it (according to Abu Yusuf) is determined by the neighbouring soils, in other words, if the neighbouring lands be subject to tithe, a tithe is to be imposed upon it, or tribute if they be subject to tribute, because the rule respecting anything is determined by what is nearest to it, as in the case of a house, for metance, the rule with respect to it extends to its court-yard, although it be not the owner's immediate property. The tribute established and imposed by 'Umar upon the lands of al-Iraq was adjusted as follows —Upon every jarib of land through which water runs (that is to say, which is capable of cultivation) one sā and one dirham, and upon every farib of pasture-land five dirhams, and upon every paris of gardens and ore ards ten dirhams, provided they contain vines and date-trees

This rule for tribute upon arable and pasture lands, gardens, and orchards, is taken from 'Umar, who fixed it at the lates above-mentioned, none contradicting him, wherefore it is considered as agreed to by all the Companions Upon all land of any other description (such as pleasure-grounds, saffron-fields, and so forth) is imposed a tribute according to ability, since, although 'Umar has not laid down any particular rule with respect to them, yet as he has made ability the standard of tribute upon atable land, so in the same manner, ability is to be regarded in lands of any other description The learned in the law allege that the utmost extent of tribute as one half of the actual product, nor is it allowable to exact more. but the taking of a half is no more than strict justice, and is not tyrannical, because, as it is lawful to take the whole of the persons and property of infidels, and to dis-tribute them among the Mushms, it follows that taking half their incomes is lawful a

(3) Lizgal, or capitation-tax, is of two kinds. The first species is that which is established toluntarily, and by composition, the rate of which is such as may be agreed upon by both parties. The second is that which the links imposes, where he conquers infidels, and then confirms them in their possessions, the common rate of which is fixed by his imposing upon every avowedly rich person a tax of forty-eight dirhams per annum, or four dirhams per month, and upon every person in midding circumstances twenty-four dirhams per annum, or two dirhams per month, and upon the labouring poor twelve dirhams per annum, or one dirham per month.

TAYAMMUM ("Intending or proposing to do a thing" The ceremony of ablution performed with sand instead of water, as in the case of wazë The permission to use sand for this purpose, when water cannot be obtained is granted in the Qur'an, Sürah v 9—

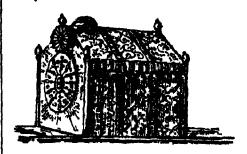

"If ye cannot find water, then take fine surface sand and wipe your faces and your hands therewith. God does not wish to make any hindrance for you."

It is related in the Traditions that Muhammad said. "God has made me greater than all preceeding prophets, inasmuch as my ranks in worship are like the ranks of angels, and the whole earth is fit for my people to worship on, and the very dast of the earth is fit for purification when water cannot be obtained. (Miskkāt, book in ch. xl.)

Tayammum, or 'purification by sand," is allowable under the following circumstances (1) When water cannot be procured except at a distance of about two miles. (2) in case of sickness when the use of water might be injurious. (3) when water cannot be obtained without incurring danger from an enemy, a beast, or a reptile, and (4) when on the occasion of the prayers of a Feast day or at a funeral, the worshipper is late and has ne time to perform the wazu. On ordinary days this substitution of tayammum for wazu is not allowable [WAZU']

TA'ZIAH (Lys) Let "A consolation" A representation or model of the tomb of Hasan and Husain at Karbalā', carried in procession at the Muharram by file Shi'ahs It is usually made of a light frame of wood-work, covered with paper, painted and ornamented, and illuminated within and without. It is sometimes of considerable size and of elaborate execution as cording to the wealth of the owner [MUHAR-RAM]

A TATELAR (A F Hole)

TA'ZIR (495) From 'asr, "to consure or repel" That discretionary correction which is administered for offences, for which Hadd, or "fixed punishment," has not been appointed

According to the Sunni law the following are the leading principles of Ta'zīr —

Ta'zir, in its primitive sense, means "prohibition," and also "instruction", in Law it signifies an infliction undetermined in its degree by the law, on account of the right syther of God, or of the individual, and the occasion of it is any offence for which hadd, or "stated punishment," has not been appointed, whether that offence consist in word or deed

- (1) Chastisement is ordained by the law, the institution of it being established on the authority of the Quran, which enjoins men to chastise their wives, for the purpose of correction and amendment, and the same also occurs in the Traditions It is, moreover, recorded that the Prophet chastised a person who had called another perjured, and all the Companions agree concerning this Reason and analogy, moreover, both evince that chastisement ought to be inflicted for acts of an offensive nature, in such a manner that men may not become habituated to the commission of such acts, for if they were, they might by degrees be led into the perpetration of others more atrocious also written in the Fatawa-1-Timur Tashi of Imam Sirukhsh that in ta'zir, or "chastisement," nothing is fixed or determined but that the degree of it is left to the discretion of the Qazi, because the design of it is correction, and the dispositions of mon with respect to it are different, some being aufficiently corrected by reprimands, whilst others, more obstinate, require confinement, and even blows
- (2) In the Fatāwā-1-Shāfi't it is said that there are four orders or degrees of chastisement -First, the chastisement proper to the most noble of the noble (or, in other words, princes and men of learning), which consists merely in admonition, as if the Qazi were to say to one of them, "I understand that you have done hus, or thus,' so as to make him ashamed Secondly, the chastisement proper to the noble (namely, commanders of armies, and chiefs of districts), which may be performed in two ways, either by admonition (as above), or by jarr, that is, by dragging the offender to the door and exposing hum to Thirdly, the chastisement proper to the middle order (consisting of merchants and shopkeepers), which may be performed by jurr (as above), and also by imprisonment, and Fourthly, the chastisement proper to the lowest order in the community which may be performed by jarr, or by imprisonment, and also by blows
- (3) It is recorded from Abu Yüsuf that the ruler of a country may inflict chastisement by means of property, that is, by the exaction of a small sum in the manner of a fine, proportioned to the offence, but this doctrine is rejected by many of the learned

- (4) Imam Timur Tashi says that chastisement, where it is incurred purely as the right of God, may be inflicted by any person whatever, for Abū Ja far Hindūšnī, being asked whether a man, finding another in the act of adultery with his wife, might slay him, re-plied, "If the husband know that expostulation and beating will be sufficient to deter the adulterer from a future repetition of his offence, he must not slay him, but if he sees reason to suppose that nothing but death will prevent a repetition of the offence, in such case it is allowed to the husband to slay that man and if the woman were consenting to his act, it is allowed to her husband to slay her also "from which it appears that any man is empowered to chastise another by blows, even though there be no magnetrate present He has demonstrated this fully in the Muntafi and the reason of it is that the chastisement in question is of the class of the removal of evil with the hand, and the Prophet has authorized every person to re-move evil with the hand, as he has said "Whosoever among ye see the evil, let him remedy it with his own hands but if he be unable so to do, let him forbid it with his tongue " Chastisement, therefore, is evidently contrary to punishment, since authority to inflict the latter does not appertain to any but a magistrate or a judge. This species of chastisement is also contrary to the chastisement which is incurred on account of the right of the individual (such as in cases of slander, and so forth), since that depends upon the complaint of the injured party, whence no person can inflict it but the magistrate, even under a private arbitration, where the plaintiff and defendant may have referred the decision of the matter to any third person
- (5) Chastisement, in any instance in which it is authorized by the law, is to be inflicted where the Imam sees it advisable
- (6) If a person accuse of whoredom a male or female slave, an ummu 'l-walad, or an infidel, he is to be chastised, because this accusation is an offensive accusation, and punishment for slander is not incurred by it, as the condition, namely, Ihsan (or marriage in the sense which induces punishment for slander), is not attached to the accused chastisement, therefore, is to be inflicted. And in the same manner, if any person accuse a Muslim of any other thing than who redom (that is, abuse him, by calling him a reprobate, or a villain, or an infidel, or a thief), chastisement is incurred, because he injures a Muslim and defames him, and punishment (hadd) cannot be considered as due from analogy, since analogy has no concern with the necessity of punishment chastisement, therefole, is to be inflicted. Where the aggrieved party is a slave, or so forth, the chastisement must be inflicted to the extremity of it but in the case of abuse of a Muslim, the measure of the chastmement is left to the discretion of the magnetrate be it more or less, and whatever he sees proper let him

(7) If a person abuse a Muslim, by calling him an ass, or a hog, in this case chastisement is not incurred, because these expressions are in no respect defamatory of the person towards whom they are used, it being evident that he is neither an ass nor a hog Some allege that, in our time, chastisement is indicted, since, in the modern acceptation, calling a man an ass or a hog is held to be abuse Others, again, allege that it is esteemed such only where the person towards whom such expressions are used happens to be of dignified rank (such as a prince, or a man of letters), in which case chastisement must be inflicted upon the abuser, as by so speaking he exposes that person of rank to contempt, but if he be only a common person, chastisement is not incurred and this is the most approved doctrine

(8) The greatest number of stripes in chastisement is thirty-nine (see 2 Cor xi 24), and the smallest number is three. This is secording to Abu Hamfah and Imam Muhammad Abu Yusuf says that the greatest number of stripes in chastisement is seventy-The restriction to thirty-nine stripes is founded on a saying of the Prophet "The man who shall inflict accurring to the amount of punishment, in a case where punishment is not established, shall be accounted an aggravator" (meaning a wanton aggravator of punishment), from which saying it is to be inferred that the infliction of a number of stripes in chastisement, to the same smoont as in punishment, is aniswful, and this being admitted, Abu Hanifah and Imam Muhammad, in order to determine the utmost extent of chastisement, consider what is the smallest punishment and this is punishment for Alander with respect to a slave, which is forty stripes, they therefore deduct there-from one stripe, and establish thirty-nine as the greatest number to be inflicted in chastisement Aba Yusuf, on the other hand, has regard to the smallest punishment with respect to freemen (as freedom as the original state of man), which is eighty stripes, he therefore deducts five, and establishes seventyfive as the greatest number to be inflicted in chastisement as aforesaid, because the same is recorded of 'Ali, whose example Abû I usuf follows in this instance. It is in one place recorded of Abu I usuf that he deducted only one stripe, and declared the utmost number of stripes in chasti-ement to be seventy-nine Such, also, is the opinion of Zafr, and this is agreeable to analogy. Imam Muhammad, in his book, has determined the smallest number of stripes in chastisement to be three, because in fewer there is no chastisement. The more modern dectors assert that the smallest degree of chastisement must be left to the judgment of the Iman or Qüçï, who is to inflict whatever he may deem sufficient for obastisement, which is different with respect to different men. It is recorded of Abū Ythanf that he has alleged that the degree thereof is in proportion to the degree of the offence, and it is also recorded from him that the chastisement for petty offences should be inflicted to a degree approaching to the punishment allotted for offences of a similar nature, thus the chastisement for libidinous acts (such as kissing and touching), is to be inflicted to a degree approaching to punishment for whoredom; and the chastisement for abusive language to a degree approaching to punishment for slander

(9) If the Qazi deem it fit in chastisement to unite impresonment with acourging, it is, lawful for him to do both, since imprison-ment is of itself capable of constituting chastisement, and has been so employed, for the Prophet once unprisoned a person by way of chastising him But as imprisonment is thus capable of constituting chastisement, in offences where chaspisoment is incurred by their being established impresonment is not lawful before the offence be proved, morely upon suspiciou, since imprisonment is in itself a chastisement contrary to offences which induce punishment, for there the accused may be lawfully imprisoned upon auspicion, as chastisement is short of panish ment (whence the sufficiency of imprisonment alone in chastisement), and such being the case, it is lawful to unite imprisonment with blowe

(10) The severest blows or stripes may be used in chastisement, because, as regard is had to learty with respect to the number of the stripes, lemity is not to be regarded with respect to the nature of them, for otherwise the design would be deleated, and hence, lenity is not shown in chastisement by inflating the blows or stripes upon different parts of members of the body And next to chastisement, the severest blows or stripes are to be inflicted in punishment for whoredom, as that is instituted in the Qur'ac. Whoredom moreover, is a deadly sin, insomuch that lapidation for it has been ordained by the law And next to pumshment for whoredom, the severest blows or stripes are to be inflicted in punishment for wine-drinking, as the occasion of punishment is there fully certified. And nort to punishment for wine-drinking, the severity of the blows or stripes to be attended to in punishment for slauder, because there is a doubt in respect to the occasion of the punishment (namely, the accusation), as an accusation may be either false or true, and also, because severity is here observed, in disqualifying the slanderer from appearing as an evidence wherefore severity is not also to be observed in the nature of the blows or etimpes

(11) If the magistrate inflict either punishment or chastisement upon a person, and the sufferer should die in consequence of such punishment or chastisement, his blood is Nadar, that is to say, nothing whatever is due upon it, because the magistrate is authorized therein, and what he does is done by decree of the law, and an act which is decreed is not restricted to the condition of safety. This is making us to a case of phishotomy, that is to say, if any person deafre

o be let blood, and should die, the operator is in no respect responsible for his death, and so here also It is contrary, however, to the case of a husband inflicting chastisement upon his wife, for his act is restricted to safety, as it is only allowed to a husband to chastise his write; and an act which is only allowed is restricted to the condition of safety, like walking upon the highway Ash-Shāfi'i maintains that, in this case, the fine of blood is due from the public treasury, because, although where chastisement or punishment prove destructive, it is homicide by misadventure (as the intention is not the destruction, but the amendment of the sufferer), yet a fine is due from the public treasury, since the advantage of the act of the magnifrate extends to the public at large, wherefore the atonement is due from their property, namely, from the public treasury. The Hanafi doctors, on the other hand, say that whenever the magistrate inflicts a punishment ordained of God upon any person, and that person dies, it is the same as if he had died by the visitation of God, without any visible cause, wherefore there is no responsibility for it (See the Hidayah, the Durru'l-Mukhtar, the Fatawa: Alamguri, in loco) [PUNISHMENT]

TITHE MOITAXATION

Arabic dukhān (راكان) TOBACCO (smoke) In some parts of Syria tabagh (قيم ) and tutun (نحن), in India and Central Asia, tumaku, corruption of the Persian tambaku (قنباكو) Tobacco was introduced into Turkey, Arabia, and other parts of Asia soon after the beginning of the seventeeth century of the Christian era, and very soon after it had begun to be regularly imported from America into western Europe. Its lawfulness to the Muslim is warmly disputed Wahhabis have always maintained its unlawfulness, and even other Muslims hardly contend for its lawfulness, but it has become generally used in Muslim countries In India, smoking is allowed in mesques, but in Afghanistan and Central Asia, it is generally forbidden. The celebrated Muslim leader, the Akhund of Swat, although an opponent of the Wahhabis, condemned the use of tobacco on account of its exhibitanting effects

TOLERATION, RELIGIOUS Muhammadan writers are unanimous in assering that no religious teleration was extended to the idelaters of Arabia in the time of the Prophet The only choice given them was death or the reception of Islam

But they are not agreed as to how far idolatry should be tolerated amongst peoples not of Arabia. Still, as a matter of fact, Hindus professing idolatry are telerated in all Muslim countries Jews, Christians, and Majusis are telerated upon the payment of a capitation tax [JIZYAH, TREATY] Persons paying this tax are called Zimmis, and enjoy a certain toleration. (Fatāwā-1-'Alamgirī, vol. i. p. 807.) [ZIMML]

According to the Hansfis, the following restrictions are ordained regarding those who do not profess Islam, but enjoy protection on payment of the tax

It behoves the Imam to make a distinction between Muslims and Zimmis, in point both of dress and of equipage. It is, therefore, not allowable for Zummis to ride upon horses, or to use armour, or to use the same saddles and wear the same garments or headdresses as Muslims, and it is written in the Jāmi'u 's-Saghir, that Zimmis must be directed to wear the kistij openly on the outside of their clothes (the kistij is a woollen cord or belt which Zimmis wear round their waists on the outside of their garments), and also that they must be directed, if they ride upon any animal, to provide themselves a saddle like the panniers of an ass

The reason for this distinction in point of clothing and so forth, and the direction to wear the kastij openly, as that Muslims are to be held in honour (whence it is they are not saluted first, it being the duty of the highest m rank to salute first [SALUTATION]), and if there were no outward signs to distinguish Muslims from Zimmis, these might be treated with the same respect, which is not allowed. It is to be observed that the insignia incumbent upon them to wear is a woollen rope or cord tied round the waist, and not a silken belt.

It is requisite that the wives of Zimmis be kept separate from the wives of Muslims, both in the public roads, and also in the baths, and it is also requisite that a mark be set upon their dwellings, in order that beggars who come to their doors may not pray for them The learned have also re-marked that it is fit that Zimmis be not permitted to ride at all, except in cases of absolute necessity, and if a Zimmi be thue, of necessity, allowed to ride, he must alight wherever he sees any Muslims assembled, and, as mentioned before, if there be a necessity for him to use a saddle, it must be made in the manner of the panniers of an ass Zmmis of the higher orders must also be prohibited from wearing rich garments

The construction of churches or synagogues in the Muslim territory is unlawful, this being forbidden in the Traditions, but if places of worship originally belonging to Jews or Christians be destroyed, or fall to decay, they are at liberty to repair them, because buildings cannot endure for ever, and as the imam has left these people to the exercise of their own religion, it is a necessary inference that he has engaged not to prevent them from rebuilding or repairing their churches and synagogues. If, however, they attempt to remove these, and to build them in a place different from their former situation, the Imam must prevent them, since this is an actual construction, and the places which they use as hermitages are held in the same light as their churches, wherefore the construction of those also is unlawful

It is otherwise with respect to such piaces . of prayer as are within their dwellings, which they are not prohibited from constructing, because these are an appurtenance to the What is here said is the rule habitation with respect to cities, but not with respect to villages or hamlets, because, as the tokens of Islam (such as public prayer, festivals, and so forth) appear in cities, Zimmis should not be permitted to celebrate the tokens of infidelity there in the face of them, but is the tokens of Islam do not appear in villages or hamlets, there is no occasion to prevent the construction of synagogues or churches

Some allege that Zummis are to be prohibited from constructing churches or synagogues, not only in cities but also in villages and hamlets, because in the villages various tokens of Islam appear, and what is recorded from Abu Hanifah (that the prohibition against building churches and synagogues is confined to cities, and does not extend to villages and hamlets) relates solely to the villages of al-Kufah, because the greater part of the inhabitants of villages are Z minis, there being few Muslims among them, wherefore the tokens of Islam did not there appear, moreover, in the territory of Arabia Zimmis are prohibited from constructing churches or synagogues, either in cities or villages, because the Prophet has said "Two religions cannot be possessed together in the peninsula of Arabia" (See Fatawa-1-'Alamoiri. Durru 'l Mukhtār, Hidāyah, in loco ) [ZIMMI]

TOMBS The erection of tombs and monuments over the graves of Muslims is forbidden by the strict laws of Islam the teaching of the Traditions on the subject is unmistakable, as will be seen by the follewing Ahadis (Mishkat, Look v ch. vi. pt. 1) ·

Jābir says "The Prophet prohibited building with mortar on graves"

Abū "i-Haiyāj al-Asadī relates that the Khalifah 'Ali said to him "Shall I not give you the orders which the Prophet gave me, namely, to destroy all pictures and images, and not to leave a single lofty temb without lowering it within a span from the ground "

Said ibn Abi Waqqas said, when he was "Make me a grave towards Makkah, and put unburnt bricks upon it, as was done upon the Prophet's "

The Wahhabis consequently forbid the erection of monuments, and when they took possession of al-Madinah, they intended to lestroy the handsome building which covers the grave of the Prophet, but were prevented by accident. (See Burton a Pilgrimage, vol. 1.

p. 854.) [WATHARI]
But notwithstanding the general consensus of orthodox opinion, that the erection of such buildings is unlawful, domed tombs of anbstantial structure, similar to the illustration given en this page, are common to all Mu-hammadan countries, and missonry tembs are always erected over the graves of persons of respectability.

Some have a head-stone, in which there are recesses for small oil lamps, which are lighted every Thursday evening Persons of distinction are generally honoured with tombs constructed with domes The specimens given in the illustrations are common to all parts of the Mushm world.

The most common form of structure is not dissimilar to that which is erected in Christian cemeteries but it is usual to put a head stone to the grave of a male on which is a figure representing the turban as a sign of authority Sometimes there is a cavity in the top of the grave-stone filled with mould, in which flowers are planted

Writing of the grave vards of Damascus, Mr Wellsted says "I know of nothing which displays the Moslem character to more ad vantage than the care they bestow on their burnsl grounds On Friday the Moslom Sunday, those of Damescus afford at once a touching and snimated scena. The ste The site relocted for the remains of those most cherished in life is generally picturesquely situated, in some lower spot, beneath the lofty cypross or quivering poplar Here a headstone of marble, covered with inscriptions and of a male, surmounted with a turban, mingles with costher buildings, of an oblong form, very tastefully and elaborately inscribed with sentences from the Koran The greatest care is observed in preserving those sepulchral monuments A small aperture is left in some portions, which is filled with earth. and in them the females plant myrtle and other flowers, and not infrequently Water them with their tears On the day I have named, they may be perceived in groups, hastening to perform the sad but pleasing office of mourning for the departed '(Tracek to the City of the Cauphs, vol 1 p 848)

Mr Lane (Arabian Nights, vol 1 p 488) says the tomb "1s a hollow, oblong vault, one side of which faces Mekkeh, generally large enough to contain four or more bodies, and having an oblong monument of stone or brick constructed over it with a stella at the head Upon the former of these two and foot stel (which is often inscribed with a text from the Kur-an, and the name of the deceased, with the date of his death), a turban, or other head-dress, as sometimes carved, shewing the rank or class of the person or persons burned beneath, and in many cases, a cupols, supported by four walls, or by columns, &c , 13 constructed over the smaller monument. The body is had on ste right side, or inclined by means of a few crude bricks, so that the face is turned towards Mckkeh, and a person is generally employed to dictate to the deceased the answers which he should give when he is examined by the two angels Munkir and Neksor" [TAIQIN]

The tombs of the imperial family of Turkey are amongst the most interesting sights of the city of Constantinople. They are principally erected in the outer courts of mosques and behind the mihrab One of the finest of these mausoleums is that of Sultan Sulaiman L, who died A.D 1566 It is an octagonal building of divers coloured marbles, with supola and fluted roof, four pillars support the dome, which is elaborately painted in red and disease arabesque. It contains the remains of three Sultans, Sulaiman I, Sulaiman II., and Ahmad II., besides some female members of the family. The biers are decorated with rich embroideries and costly shawls, and with turbans and aigrettes; and that of Sulaman I is surrounded by a railing iniaid with mother-ofpearl.

The mansoleum of the Emperor Jahangur at Shahdarrah, near Lahore, is one of the finest Muhammadan tombs in the world It is situated in a garden 1,500 feet square There is, first, a fine corridor 233 feet long, from which to the central dome is 108 feet The passage to the tomb is paved with beau tifully streaked marble from Jappur and other places. The sercophagus stands on a white marble platform, 18 feet 5 mches long from north to south, and 8 feet 9 inches broad The sarcophagus itself is of white marble, and is 7 feet long On the cast and west aides of it are the ninety-nine names of God [GOD, NAMES OF] most beautifully carved, and on the south side is inscribed "The glorious tomb of His High Majesty, the Asylum of Protectors, Nuru 'd-din Muhanimad, the Emperor Jihangir, A.H. 1037 (AD 1627) On the north end of the tomb is in Arabic, "Allah the Laving God. There is no derty but God over the invisible world and all things. He is the Merciful and the Compassionate." On the top is a short passage from the Qur'an, written in beautiful The central dome of the building Tughra is 27 feet square, and on the four sides there are tine screens of trellis work. Just inside the entrance, and to the right of it, is a staircase with twenty-five steps, which leads up to a magnificent tesselated pavement, at each corner of which is a minaret 35 feet high from the platform. This platform is 211 feet 5 mohes square, and is truly beautiful merble wall ran round the pavement, butant was taken away by the Sikhs, and it has been replaced by a poor substitute of masonry. The minarets are tour storeys high, and are built of magnificent blocks of stone 8 feet by 61 feet, and in them are stops leading to the top of the building, from which there is s fine view of Lahore

The sepulchre of the Taimur, who died A.D. 1406, is at Samarkand in Bukhārah, and is described by M Vambery as a nest little chapel crowned with a splendid dome, and encircled by a wall in which there is an arched gate On both sides are two small domes, minature representations of the large one in the centre. The court-yard between the wall and the chapel is filled with trees; the garden being much neglected. Upon entering the dome, there is a vestibule which loads to the chapel itself. This is octagonal, and about ten short pages in diameter the middle, under the dome, that is to say, in the place of honour, there are two tombs, placed lengthways, with the head in the direction of Makkah. One of these tombs is covered with a very fine stone of a dark group colour, two and a balf spans broad and ten long, and about the thickness of and fingers. It is laid flat in two pieces over the grave of Taimur. The other grave is covered with a black stone. It is the tomb of Mir Syud Bakar, the teacher and spiritual guide of Taimur, and beside whose grave the great Ameer gratefully desired to be buried Round about he other tembetones great and The inscriptions are simple, and are small in Arabic and Persian

It has often been the case that Muhammadan kings have erected their mausoleums during their lifetime, although such acts are strictly contrary to the teachings of their Prophet. A remarkable instance of this is to be seen at Bajapar in India, where the unfinished tomb of 'Ah 'Adl Shab (A.D. 1557) is still to be seen, having never been completed after his burial His successor, Ibrahim (A.D. 1579), warned by the fate of his predecessor's tomb, commenced his own on so small a plan -116 feet square-that, as he was blessed with a long and prosperous reign, it was only by ornament that he could render the place worthy of himself This he accomplished by covering every part with the most exquisite and elaborate carvings. The ornamental carvings on this tomb are so numerous, that it is said the whole Qur'an is engraven on its walls The principal apartment in the tomb is a square of forty feet, covered by a stone roof perfectly flat in the centre, and supported by a cove projecting ten feet from the wall on every side Mr Forgusson says "How the roof is supported is a mystery, which can only be understood by those who are familiar with the use the Indians make of masses of concrete which, with good mortar, seems capable of infinite applications unknown in Europe." (Architecture, vol m p 562.) The temb of Mahmud, Ibrahim's successor (A D 1626), was also built in his lifetime, and remarkable for its simple grandeur and constructive boldness. It is internally 185 feet each way, and its area is consequently 18,225 square feet, while the Pantheon at Rome has only an area of 15 888 feet.

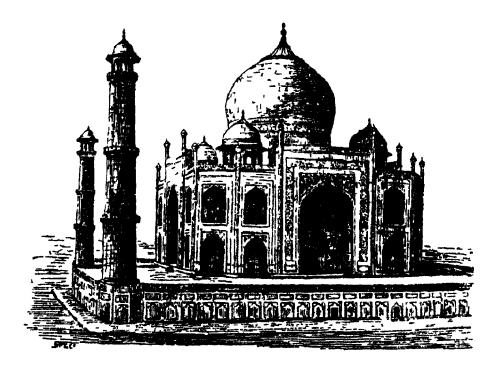

The tomb of linam ash-Shaff'i, the founder of one of the four orthodox sects of the Sunnis, sud who died A H 204, is still to be seen near the city of Caure It is surmeanted h a large dome, with a weathercock in the form of a boat. It is said to have been erected by Yusuf Salahu 'd-Din (Saladın). The interior is cased to a height of eight feet with marble, above which the whole building is coloured in recent and unartistic style The windows contain coloured glass are three nidhes, with a fourth in the form of a mehrab, marking the direction of Makkah. The covering of the tomb of the celebrated Muslim doctor is of simple brocade, embroidered with gold. It is enclosed with a wooden railing, inlaid with mother-of-pearl, the corners being clasped with silver fittings. At the head of the tomb is a large turban, partly covered with a Cashmere shawl Near the head of the tomb is a marble pillar, with sculptured inscriptions, coloured red and gold. From the roof are suspended a few porcelain lamps, and lamps of glass, as well as estrich eggs, hang in profusion from the canopy of the tomb and from light wooden beams The walls and tomb-enclosure are adorned with scrolls Close to the building are four other tombs of the Imam's family

The tomb of Zubaidah, the beloved wife of the celebrated Khalifah Hārūnu 'r-Rashid, the hero of the tales of The Thousand and One Nights, is a simple edifice standing on a sloping eminence, within an extensive cemetery of an extensive the city of Baghdad It is a building of an ootagonal shape, thirty feet in diameter, and surmounted by a spiro In the upper part of the building are two ranges of windows, the upper of which presents the flattened and the lower the pointed arch. The spire is a mere sharpened cone, ornamented without with convex divisions corresponding to concave arches within. The interior is occupied by three oblong buildings of masonry, coated with lime. A modern Pacha and his wife have now the honour of reposing beside the remains of the fair Persian, and an inscription over the porch testifies that their remains were deposited mine centuries after the favourite wife of the renowned Khalifah

A very interesting specimen of tomb architecture is found at Sultaniah in Persia. It is the sepuchre of one Muhammad Khuda-Texter ascribes the building to bandıa Khudabandish, of the Süfi dynasty, A.D. 1577-85, but Fergusson says its style shows that the monument must be two or three hundred years older than that king Ker Porter says it is the work of the Tartar Mu-hammad Khudabandia, who was the successor of Ghazan Khan, the builder of the celebrated mosque at Tabriz, who, being serzed with as much zeal for his Shi ite faith as his predecessor had been for the Sunnite, his intention was to lodge in this mansoleum the remains of 'Ali and his son al-Husain. This intention, however, was not carried into effect, and consequently the bones of the founder repose alone in this splended shrine, and not under the central dome, but in a side chamber The general plan of this building is an octagon, with a small chapel opposite the entrance, in which the body lies. Internally, the dome is 81 feet in diameter by 150 feet in height, the octagon being worked (Mr Fergusson says) into a circle by as elegant a series of brackets as, perhaps, ever were employed for this pur pose The form of the dome is singularly graceful and elegant, and superior to anything of the kind in Persia. The whole is covered with glazed tiles, rivalling in richness those of the celebrated mosque at Tabriz, and with its general beauty of outline, it affords one of the finest specimens of this style of architecture found in any country

The grave of the Persian poet Hāfiz, at Shiraz in Persia, is a single block of beautiful murble from Yezd, of which shout aighteen inches appear above the ground. It is a fine slab, is perfectly fist, and is nine feet long by two feet nine inches in width. Raised in low relief, in the centre of the top of the slab, is one of the poet's odes in the beau-tiful letters of the Porsian alphabet, and round the edges, in a band about five inches deep, is another ode. The tomb which is probably about two hundred years old, is attuated in a square enclosure or garden, and the ground around is thickly beset with tombs, mostly flat like that of the poet.

The finest specimen of monumental architecture is the celebrated Tay at Agra, erected over the grave of Urjummad Banu Begum, called Muntāz-1-Mahall, or the "Exalted One of the Palace," the favourite wife of the Emperor Shāh Jahān, who died about A.D 1629 The designs and estimates for the building are said to have been prepared by a Venetian named Geronimo Verroneo, but the architect died at Lahore before its completion, and the work is supposed to have been handed over to a Byzantine Turk. Mr Keene says that it is certain Austin the French artist, was consulted Mr Fergusson gives the following particulars of this remarkable building

"The enclosure, including garden and outer court, is a parallelogram of 1,860 feet by more than 1,000 feet The outer court, surrounded by arcades and adorned by four gateways, 18 an oblong, occupying in length the whole breadth of the enclosure, and is about 450 feet deep The principal gateway leads from this court to the garden, where the tomb is seen framed in an avenue of dark cypross trees The plinth of white marble is 18 feet high, and is an exact square of 818 feet each way At the four corners stand four columns or towers, each 137 feet high, and crowred with a little pavilion. The mausoleum itself occupies a space of 186 feet square, in the centre of this larger square, and each of the four corners as cut off opposite each of the The central dome is 50 feet m diameter by 80 feet in height. On the platform in front of the jumab, or false mosque, is a tracing of the topmost spine, a gilded spike crowning the central dome to the height of 30 feet. The interior is lighted from marble trellised-ecreen lights above and below "--- Fergusson's History of Archi-tecture, vol in p 698) [EIYARAH]

TRADITION. It is the belief of all Muhammadans, whether Sunni, Shi'ah, or Wahhabi, that in addition to the revelation contained in the Qur'an, the Prophet received the Wahy ghair Matlu (lit. "an unread revelation"), whereby he was enabled to give authoritative declarations on religious questions, either moral, ceremonial, or doctrinal. Muhammad traditions are therefore supposed to be the uninspired record of inspired sayings, and consequently occupy a totally difditions in the Christian Church The Arabic words used for these traditions are Hadig (مديمه), pl Ahādus, "a saymg", and Sunnah (هديه), pl Sunan "a custom" The word Hadis, in its singular form, is now generally used by both Muhammadan and Christian writers for the collections of traditions. They are records of what Muhammad did (Sunnatu 'l-fi'l), what Muhammad enjoined (Sunnatu'l quul), and that which was done in the presence of Muhammad and which he did not forbid (Susnatu 't-tagrir) They also include the authoritative sayings and doings of the Companions of the Prophet

The following quotations from the Traditions as to the sayings of Muhammad on the subject of this oral law, will explain the position which he intended to assign to it.

"That which the Prophet of God hath made unlawful is like that which God himself hath made so."

"I am no more than a man, but when I enjoin anything respecting religion receive it, and when I order anything about the affairs of the world, then I am nothing more than

"Verily the best word is the word of God, and the best rule of life is that delivered by Muhammad '

"I have left you two things, and you will not stray as long as you hold them fast The one is the book of God, and the other the law (sunnah) of His Prophet"

"My sayings do not abrogate the word of God, but the word of God can abrogate my

"Some of my injunctions abrogate others" (Mishkat, book i ch. vl.)

Muhammad gave very special injunctions respecting the faithful transmission of his sayıngs, for, according to at-Tırmizi, Ibn 'Abbas relates that Muhammad said "Convey to other persons none of my words, except those ye know of a surety Verly he who represents my words wrongly shall find a place for himself in the fire."

But notwithstanding the severe warning even by their Prophet, it is admitted by all Muslim scholars that very many spurious tiaditions have been handed down Abū Da'ūd received only four thousand eight hundred traditions out of five hundred thousand, and even in this careful selection, he states, that he has given "those which seem to be authentic and those which are nearly so" (Vide Ibn Khallikān, vol 1 p 590)
Out of forty thousand persons who have been instrumental us handing down traditions, al Bukhārī only acknowledges two thousand as reliable authorities

In consequence of the unrehable character of the Traditions, the following canons have been framed for the reception or rejection (vide Nukhbatu 'l-Fuyr, by Shaikh Shihabn 'd-Din Ahmad, ed by Captain N Lees) —

I With reference to the character of these who have handed down the tradition -

(1) Hadigu 's-Suhih, a genuine tradition, is one which has been handed down by truly pious persons who have been distinguished for their integrity

(2) Horligu l-Hasan, a mediocre tradition, is one the narrators of which do not approach in moral excellence to those of the Sahih class

(3) Hadiga z-Zaif, a weak tradition, is one whose narrators are or questionable authoritv

The disputed claims of narrature to the e three classes have proved a fruitful source of learned discussion, and very numerous and the works written upon the subject.

II With reference to the original relators of the Hadis

(1) Hadisu 'l-Marfir, an exalted tradition is a saying, or an act, related or performed by the Prophet himself and handed down in a tradition

(2) Hadigu 'l-Mauguf, a restricted tradition, is a saying or an act related or performed by one of the ashab, or Companions of the

Prophet

(3) Hadigu 'l- Maqtu', an intersected tradition, is a saying or an act related or per formed by one of the Tabi'un, or those who conversed with the Companions of the Prophet

III With reference to the links in the chain of the narrators of the tradition, a Hadis is either Muttagel, connected, or Munquit', disconnected If the chain of parrators is complete from the time of the first utter ance of the saying or performance of the act recorded to the time that it was written down by the collector of tradit ons, it is Muttaerl. but it the chain of narrators is incomplete, it is Mungati'

IV With reference to the manger in which the tradition has been narrated, and trans mitted down from the first -

(1) Hadigu 'l-Mutawiter, an undoubted tradition, is one which is banded down by very many distinct chams of parrators, and which has been always accepted as authentic and genuine, no doubt even having been raised against it The learned doctors say there are only five such traditions, but the exact mim per 14 disputed

(2) Hudisu 'l-Mashhur, i nell-known tradition is one which has been handed lown by at least three distinct lines of partitors. It is called also Mustafiz, dufused It is also need for a tradition which was at first recorded by one person, or a few a dividual, and afterwards became a popular tradition.

(8) Hadıyu 'l-'Aziz, a rere tradition, is one related by only two lines of narrators,

(4) Hadigu'l-Gharib, a poor tradition, is one related by only one line of narrators.

(5) Khabaru'l-Wahid, a single saying, is a term also used for a tradition related by one person and handed down by one line of narrators. It is a disputed point whether a Khubar Wahid oan form the basis of Muslim dectrine

(6) Hadigu 'l Mursal (lit. " a tradition let loose"), is a tradition which any collector of traditions, such as al-Bukhari and others, records with the assertion, "the Apostic of God sasd."

(7) Rwayah, is a Hadis which commences with the words "it is "lated," without the authority being given.
(8) Hadigu 'l-Mauzu, an envented tradition, is one the untruth of which is beyond dispute.

The following is a specimen of a hadie, as given in the collection of at-Tirmizi, which will exemplify the way in which a tradition 18 recorded -

"Abu Kuraib said to us (haddasa-nā) that Ibiāhīm ibn Yūsuf ibn Abi Ishāq said to us (haddaşu-nū), from (an) his father, from (an) Abu Ishaq, from ('an) Tulata ibn Musarif, that he said, I have heard (same'tu). from 'Abdu 'r Rahman ibn Ausajah, that he said (yaqulu), I have beard (sum: tu) from Bara ibn 'Azib that he said (yaqulu) I have heard (sumifu) that the Prophet said, Whoever shall give in charity a milch cow, or eilver, or a leathern bottle of water, it shall be equal to the freeing of a slave."

The Honourable Syed Ahmed Khan Bahadur, CSI, an adacated Muhammadan gentleman, in an L say on Mohammedan Traditions, gives the following information -

The Style of Composition employed in the imparting of a Tradition

For the purpose of expressing how a tradition had been communicated from one per son to another, certain introductory verbal forms were selected by duly qualified persons, and it was incumbent upon every one about to narrate a tradition, to commence by that particular form appropriated to the said tiadition, and this was done with the view of securing for each tradition the quantum of credit to which it might be justly entitled

These introductory verbal forms are as follow (1) "He said to me" (2) area... "I heard him saying , (3) الله "He told me", (4) لكر لدا "He related to me", (5) المبريا "He informed me", (6) المبريا "He mformed me ', (7) " From."

The first four natroductory forms were to be used only in the case of an original naristor communicating the very words of the tradition to the next one below him. fifth and sixth introductory verbal forms were used when a narrator inquired of the narrator immediately above him whether who or such a fact, or circumstance, was or was not correct. The last form is not suftwently explicit, and the consequence is that it cannot be decided to which of the two pursons the tradition related belongs, so that unless other facts be brought to bear upon it. it cannot be satisfactorily proved whether there be any other persons, one or more than one, intermediary between the two narrators As to any external facts that might prove what was required to be known, the learned are divided in their opinions

First If it be known of a certainty that the narrator is not notorious for fraudulently omitting the names of other parties forming links in the chain of narration, and who also lived at such a time and in such a locality that it was possible, although not proved, that they visited each other, then it might be taken for granted that there were no other narrators intermediary between these

Secondly. Other learned authorities add that it must be proved that they visited each other, at least once in their life-time

Thirdly Others assert that it must be proved that they remained together for such a time as would be sufficient to enable them to learn the tradition, one from the other

Fourthly Some hold that it must be proved that one of them really learned the tradition from the other

Degree of Authenticity of the Narrators us judged by their Acquirements

The associates of the Prophet, and those persons who lived immediately after them, used to relate, with the exception of the Quran, the sense of the Prophet's words m their own language, unless they had to use some phrases containing prayers, or when they had to point out to others the very words of the Prophet It is natural to suppose that deeply learned persons would them selves understand and deliver, to others, the sense of the sayings better than persons of inferior parts, and therefore narrators have been divided into seven grades

First Persons highly conspicuous for their learning and legal acquiroments as well as for their retentive memory Such persons are distinguished by the title of deal A'immatu I-Hadir, that is " Leaders ın Hadiş "

Second Persons who, as to their knowledge, take rank after the first, and who but very rarely committed any mustake

Third Persons who have made alterations in the pure religion of the Prophet, without carrying them to extremes by prejudice, but respecting whose integrity and honesty there is no doubt

Fourth Persons respecting whom nothing 15 known

Fifth Persons who have made alterations in the pure religion of the Prophet, and, actuated by prejudice have carried them to extremes

Sixth Persons who are pertunctionally sceptical, and have not a retentive memory

Seventh Persons who are notorious for inventing spurious traditions Learned divines are of opinion that the traditions related

by persons of the first three classes should be accepted as true, according to their respective ments, and also that traditions related by persons coming under the three last classes should be, at once, entirely rejected; and that the traditions related by persons of the fourth class, should be passed over unnoticed so long as the narrator remained unkacwa

Causes of Difference among Traditions

We should not be justified in concluding that, whenever a difference is met with in traditions, those latter are nothing more than so many mere inventions and fabrica-tions of the narrators, since, besides the fabrication of hadis, there are also other natural causes which might occasion such differences, and we shall now consider these natural causes which produce such variety among hadis

(1) A mounderstanding of the real sense of the saying of the Prophet

(2) Difference of the opinions of two nar-rators in understanding the true sense of the Prophet's saving

(3) Inability to enumerate clearly the sense of the Prophet's saying

(4) Failure of memory on the part of the narrator -- in consequence of which he either left out some portion or portions of the Prophet's saying or mixed up together the meanings of two different hadis

(5) Explanation of any portion of the hadis given by the narrator, with the intention of its being easily understood by the party hearing it, but unfortunately mistaken by the latter for an actual portion of the

hadis steelf

(6) Quotations of certain of the Prophet's words by the narrator, for the purpose of supporting his own narration, while the heurers of the narration erroneously took the whole of it as being the Prophet's own

(7) Traditions borrowed from the Jews erroneously taken to be the words of the Prophet, and the difference existing between such Jewish traditions was thus transferred to those of the Muhammadans. The stories of ancient persons and early prophets, with which our histories and commentaries are filled, are all derived from these sources.

(8) The difference which is naturally caused in the continual transmission of a tradition by oral communication, as it has been in the case of traditions having miracles for their subject matter

(9) The various states and circumstances in which the different narrators saw the

Prophet

Apocryphal Hadis

There exists no doubt respecting the circumstance of certain persons having fabricated some hadis in the Prophet's name Those who perpetrated so impudent a forgery were men of the following descriptions.

(1) Persons desirous of introducing some praiseworthy custom among the public, forged hadis in order to secure success Such fabrication is restricted exclusively to those hadis which treat of the advantages and benefits which reading the Qur'an and praying precure to any one, both in this world and the next, which show how reciting pas-sages from the Qur'an cure overy disease, ets. the real object of such frauds being to lead the public into the habit of reading the Qur'an and of praying According to our religion, the perpetrators of such frauds, or of any others, stand in the list of sinners

(2) Preachers, with a view of collecting large congregations around them, and of amusing their hearers invented many traditions, such traditions being only these which describe the state and condition of paradise and of hell, as well as the state and condition of the soul after death, etc in order to awaken the four of God's wrath and the hope of salvation.

(8) Those persons who made alterations in the religion of the Prophet, and who, urged by their prejudices, carried the same to ex tremes, and who, for the purpose of successfully confronting their controversial antagonists, forged such traditions in order to favour their own interested views

(4) Unbehevers who make cousty comea and circulated spurious hadis Learned men, however, have greatly exerted themselves in order to discover such fabricated traditions. and have written many works upon the subject, laying down rules for ascertaining false raditions and for distinguishing them from

genume ones

The modes of procedure were as follows Such persons examined the very words employed in such traditions, as well as their style of composition, they compared the contents of each hadis with the commands and injunctions contained in the Qur'an, with those religious doctrines and dogmas that have been deduced from the Qur'an, and with those hadis which have been proved to be genuine, they investigated the nature of the import of such traditions, as to whether it was unreasonable, improbable, or impossible

It will therefore, be evident that the hadis considered as genuine by Muhammadans, must indispensably possess the following characters The narrator must have plannly and distinctly mentioned that such and such a thing was either said or done by the Prophet, the chain of narrators from the last link up to the Prophet, must be unbroken, the subject related must have come under the actual ken of its first narrators, every one of the narrators, from the last up to the Prophet, must have been persons conspicuous for their piety, virtue, and honesty, every narrator must have received more than one hadis from the narrator immediately preseding him, every one of the narrators must be conspicuous for his learning, so that he might be safely presumed to be competent both to understand correctly, and faithfully deliver to others the sense of the tradition, the import of the tradition must not be contrary to the injunctions contained in the Qur'an, or to the religious doctrines defined from that Book, or to the traditions proved to be correct, and the nature of the import of the tradition must not be such as persons might hesitate in accepting

Any tradition thus proved genuine can be made the basis of any religious doctrine, but notwithstanding this, another objection may be raised against it which is that this tradition is the statement of one person only, and therefore, cannot, properly, be believed in implicitly For obvicting this, three grades have been again formed of the hadis preced as genuine These three grades are the following Mutawater and Mather, and Labor-1-Ahad

Mutawater is an appellation given to those hadis only that have always been, from the time of the Prophet, ever afterwards recognised and accepted by every associate of the Prophet, and every learned mdividual as authentic and genuine, and to which no one has raised any objection. All learned Muhammadan divines of every period have declared that the Qur an only is the Hadis Mutawatir, but some doctors have declared certain other hadis also to be Mutawatin, the number however, or such hadig not exceeding five Such are the traditions that are implicitly believed and ought to be religiously observed

Mashhūr is a title given to those traditions that, in every age, have been believed to be genuine, by some learned persons. These are the traditions which are found recorded in the best works that treat of them, and, having been generally accepted as genuine, form the nucleus of some of the Muslim doc-

h.habar-1-Ahad (or hadig related by one person), is an appellation given to traditions that do not possess any of the qualities be-longing to the traditions of the first two grades Opimons of the learned are divided whether or not they can form the basis of any religious doctrine

Persons who undertook the task of collecting traditions had neither time nor opportunity for examining and investigating all the above particulars, and some of them collected together whatsoever came under their notice, while others collected only those whose narrators were acknowledged to be trustworthy and honest persons, leaving en tirely upon their readers the task of investigating and examining all the above mentioned particulars, as well as of deciding their comparative merita, their genuineness, and the quantum of credit due to them

There is some difference of opinion as to who first attempted to collect the traditions, and to compile them in a book Some say 'Abdu 'l-Malık ibn Juraij of Makkah, who died Att 150, whilst others assert that the collection, which is still extant, by the Imim Mālik, who died a H 179, was the first collection. The work by Imam Mâlik is still held in very great esteem, and although not generally included among the standard six, it is believed by many to be the source from whence a great portion of their materials are derived

The following are the Shadhu's-Sittah, or "six correct" books, received by Sunni Muslims

- (1) Muhammad Ismā'il al-Bukhāri, A.H.
- (2) Muslem ibnu 1-Hajjāj, A.H. 261 (8) Abū 'Isā Muhammad, at-Tirmizī, A.H. 279
- (4) Abû Da'ûd as-Sajistâni, A.H. 275
- (8) Abū 'Abdı 'r-Rahman an-Nasa'ı, AH. BOR
- (6) Abū 'Abdi 'llāh Muḥammad Ibn Mājah, AH 278

According to the Ithafu 'n-Nubala', there are as many as 1,465 collections of traditions in existence, although the six already re corded are the more generally used amongst

- It is often stated by European writers that the Shi'she reject the Traditions. This is not correct. The Sunnis arrogate to themselves the title of Traditionists, but the Shi'aha, although they do not accept the col lections of traditions as made by the Sunnis. receive fixe collections of Ahadis, upon which their system of law, both civil and religious. is founded
- (1) The Kaji, by Abu Jafar Muhammad ibn Yaqub, AH 329
- (2) The Man-la-yastahzerahu 'l-Faqih, by Shaikh 'Ali, A.E 38!
  (3) The Tahzib, by Shaikh Abu J. far
- Muhammad ibn 'Alı ibn Husain, A H 466
  - (4) The Istibsar, by the same author (5) The Nahju 'l-Balaghah, by Saiyid ar-
- Raží, a H. 406

There are many stories which illustrate the importance the Companions of the Prophot attached to Sunnah. The Khalifah Umar looked towards the black stone at Makkah, and said "By God, I know that thon art only a stone, and canst grant no benefit, canst to no harm. If I had not known that the Prophet kissed thee, I would not have done so, but on account of that I do Abdu 'liah ibn 'Umar was seen riding his camel round and rounc a certain place In answer to an inquiry as to his reason for so doing, he said 'I know not, only I have seen the Prophet do so here." Ahmad ibn Hanbal us said to have been appointed on account of the care with which he observed the Sunnah. One day when sitting in an assembly, he sions of all present observed some formal prophet Gabriel at once appeared and informed him that now, and on account of his act, he was appointed an Imam And on another occasion it is said this great traditionset would not even eat water melons, because, although he knew the Prophet ate them, he could not learn whether he ate them with or without the rind, or whether he broke, but or cut them . and he forbade a woman, who questioned him as to the propriety of the act, to spin by the light c torches passing in the streets by night, be cause the Prophet had not mentioned that 1 was lawful to do so

The modern Wahhabis being, for the mos part, followers of Ibn Hanbal, attach gree importance to the teaching of the Traditions and have therefore caused a revival of the branch of Muslim literature [WAHHABI]

We are indebted to Sir William Muir Introduction to the Life of Makomet, for th following -

"Mahometan tradition consists of the say ings of the friends and followers of the Pro phet handed down by a real or supposed chain of narrators to the period when the were collected, recorded, and classified process of transmission was for the most par oral It may be aketched as follows

'After the death of Mahomet, the man employment of his followers was arms pursuit of pleasure, and the formal round o religious observances, filled up the interstice of active life, but afforded scanty exercise fo the higher faculties of the mind The tedium of long and arksome marches, and the lazi intervals from one campaign to another, fel Listlessly upon a simple and semi-barbarou race These intervals were occupied, and that tedium beguiled, chiefly by calling up the past m familiar conversation or more for mal discourse On what topic, then, would the early Moslems more enthusiastically des cant than on the acts and sayings of that wonderful man who had called them into ex istence as a conquering nation, and hac placed in their hands 'the keys both of this world and of Paradise'?

"Thus the converse of Mahomet's follower would be much about him. The majesty o his character gained greatness by contempla tion, and, as time removed him farther and farther from them, the lineaments of the mys terious mortal who was wont to hold familia intercourse with the messengers of heaven rose in dimmer, but in more gigantic propor The mind was unconsciously led on to think of him as endowed with supernatura power, and ever surrounded by supernatura agency Here was the material out of which Tradition grew luxuriantly Whenever there was at hand no standard of fact whereby these recitals may be tested, the memory was aided by the unchecked efforts of the imagi nation, and as days rolled on, the latter element gained complete ascendancy

"Such is the result which the lapse of time would naturally have upon the minds and the narratives of the As-hab or 'COMPANIONS of Mahomet, more especially of those who were young when he died And then snoths race sprang up who had never seen the Pro phet, who looked up to his contemporarie with a superstitious reverence, and who ha tened to their stories of him as to the tiding of a messenger from the other world 'Is i possible, father of Abdallah! that thou has been with Mahomet?' was the question ad dressed by a pious Moslem to Hodzeifa, in th mosque of Kufa, didst then really see th

Prophet and wert thou on familiar terms with him? - Son of my uncle! it is indeed as thou savest .- And how wert thou wont to behave towards the Prophet?'- 'Verily, we used to labour hard to please him! Well, by the Lord!' exclaimed the ardent listener, had I been but alive in his time, I would not have allowed him to put his blessed foot upon the earth, but would have borne him on my shoulders wherever he listed' (Hishams, p 295) Upon another occasion the youthful Obeida listened to a Companion who was reciting before an assembly how the Prophet's head was shaved at the Pil grimage, and the hair distributed amongst his followers, the eyes of the young man glustened as the speaker proceeded, and he interrupted him with the impatient exclamation,— Would that I had even a single one of those blessed hairs! I would cherish it for ever, and prize it beyond all the gold and silver in the world' (Katib a' Wackidi, p. 279) Such were the natural feelings of fend devotion with which the Prophet came to be regarded by the followers of the ' Comралиола

"As the tale of the Companions was thus taken up by then followers, distance began to invest it with an increasing charm, while the products of living faith and waim imagi nation were being fast debased by supersti-tions credulty This second generation are termed in the language of the patriotic lore of Arabia, Tabian, or 'Successons' Here and there a Companion survived till near the end of the best century, but, for all practical purposes, they had passed off the stage before the commencement of its last quarter first Successors who were in some measure also their contemporaries, flourished in the laster half of the same century, though some of the oldest may have survived for a time in the second

"Meanwhile a now cause was at work, which gave so the tales of Mahomet's companions a fresh and an idventitious impoi-

"The Araba, a simple and unsophisticated race, found in the Coran ample provisions for the regulation of all their affairs, religious, social, and political But the aspect of Islam soon underwent a mighty change Scarcely was the Prophet dead when his followers issued forth from their barren peninsuia, armed with the warrant of the Coren to impose the faith of Mahomet upon all the nations of the earth Within a century they had, as a first step to this universal subjugation, conquered every land that intervened between the banks of the Oxus and the farthest shores of Northern Africa and of Spain , and had enrolled the great majority of their peoples under the standard of the Coran This vast empire differed widely indeed from the Arabia of Mahomet's time; and that which well sufficed for the patriarchal sumplicity and limited social system of the early Arabs, became utterly inadequate for the hourly multiplying wants of their descendants Crowded cities, like Fosta Rufa, and Damascus, required an elaborate compilation of laws for the guidance of their courts of justice new political relations demanded a system of international equity the speculations of a people before whom literature was preparing to throw open her arena, and the controversies of eager factions upon nice points of Mahometan faith, were impatient of the narrow limits which confined them —all called loudly for the enlargement of the scanty and naked dogmas of the Coran, and for the development of its defeative code of othics

"And yet it was the cardinal principle of early Islam, that the standard of Law, of Theology, and of Politics, was the Coran and the Coran alone By it Mahomet himself ruled, to it in his teaching he always referred, from it he professed to derive his opinions, and upon it to ground his decisions. If he, the Messenger of the Lord, and the Founder of the faith, was thus bound by the Coran, much more were the Caliphs, his un-New and unforescen inspired substitutes circumstances were continually arising, for which the Coran contained no provision. It no longer sufficed for its original object. How then were its deficiencies to be supphed r

"The difficulty was resolved by adopting the Custow or 'Sunnar' of Mahemet, that is, his sayings and his practice, as a supplement to the Coran The recitals regarding the life of the Prophet now acquired an unlookedfor value He had never held himself to be infallable, except when directly inspired of God, but this new doctrine assumed that a heavenly and unerring guidance pervaded every word and action of his prophetic life Tradition was thus invested with the force of law, and with some of the authority of inspiration. It was in great measure owing to the ruse of this theory, that, during the first century of Islam, the cumbrous recitals of tradition so far outstripped the dimensions of reality The prerogative now claimed for Tradition sumulated the growth of fabri-cated evidence, and led to the preservation of every kind of story, spurious or real, touching the Prophet Before the close of the century it had imparted an almost incredible impulse to the search for traditions, and had in fact given birth to the new profession of Collectors Man devoted their lives to the business They travelled from city to city. business and from tribe to tribe, over the whole Mahometan world, sought out by personal inquiry every vestige of Mahomet's biography yet lingering among the Companions, the Successors, and their descendants, and committed to writing the tales and reminiscences with which they used to edily their wondering and admiring auditors.

"The work, however, too closely affected the public interests, and the political aspect of the empire, to be left enturely to private and individual zeal. About a bundred years after Mahomet, the Caliph Omar II insued circular orders for the formal collection of all extant traditions [He committed to Abu

Bacr ibn Muhammed the task of compiling all the traditions he could meet with. This traditionist died a.m 120, aged 64. Sprenger a Medammed, p. 67.] The task thus begun continued to be rigorously prosecuted, but we possess no authentic remains of any compilation of an earlier data than the middle or end of the second century. Then, indeed, ample materials had been amassed, and they have been handed down to us both in the shape of Biographies and of general Collections, which bear upon every imaginable point of Mahomet's character, and detail the minutest incidents of his life.

"It thus appears that the traditions we new possess remained generally in an unrecorded form for at least the greater part of a century. It is not indeed demed that some of Mahomet's sayings may possibly have been noted down in writing during his life-time, and from that source copied and propagated afterwards. We say possibly, for the evidence in favour of any such record is meagre, auspicious, and contradictory The few and uncertain statements of this nature may have owed their origin to the authority which a habit of the kind would impart to the name of a Companion, supposed to have practised it. It is hardly possible that, if the cus-tom had prevailed of writing down Mahomet's sayings during his life, we should not have had frequent intimation of the fact, with notices of the writers, and special references to the nature, contents, and peculiar authority of their records But no such references or quotations are anywhere to be found. It cannot be objected that the Arabs trusted so implicitly to their memory that they regarded oral to be as authoritative as recorded narratives, and therefore would take no note of the latter, for we see that Omar was afraid lest even the Coran, believed by him to be divine and itself the subject of heavenly care. should become defective if left to the memory of man. Just as little weight, on the other hand, should be allowed to the tradition that Mahomet prohibited his followers from noting down his words, though it is is not easy to see how that tradition could have gained currency at all, had it been the regular and constant practice of any persons to record his sayings. The truth appears to be that there was in reality no such practice, and that the story of the prohibition, though spu rious, embodies the after-thought of serious Mahametans as to what Mahamet would have said, had he foreseen the loose and fabricated stories that sprang up, and the real danger his people would fall into of allowing

after Mahemet's death

"But even were we to admit all that has been advanced, it would prove no more than that some of the Companions used to been memorands of the Prophet's sayings. Now, unless it be possible to connect such memorands with extant Tradition, the concession would be useless. But it is not, as far as I know

Tracking to supersede the Coran. The evils of Tradition were, in truth, as little thought of as its value was perceived, till many years

demonstrable of any single tradition or class of traditions now in existence, that they were copied from such memoranda, or have been derived in any way from them. To prove, therefore, that some traditions were at first recorded will not help us to a knowledge of whether any of these still exist, or to a discrimination of them from others resting on a purely oral basis. The very most that could be urged from the premises is, that our present collections may contain some tradihanded down in writing, but we are unable to single out any individual tradition and make such affirmation regarding it. entire mass of extant tradition rests in this respect on the same uncertain ground, and the uncertainty of any one portion (apart from internal syndence of probability) attaches equally to the whole We cannot with confidence, or even with the least show of likelihood, affirm of any tradition that it was recorded till nearly the end of the first century of the Hegira.

"We see, then, how entirely tradition, as now possessed by us, lests its authority on the memory of those who handed it down, and how dependent therefore it must have been upon their convictions and their prejudices, For, in addition to the common frailty of human recollection which renders traditional evidence notoriously infirm, and to the errors or exaggerations which always distort a narrative transmitted orally through many witnesses, there exist throughout Mahometan Tradition abundant indications of actual fabrication, and there may everywhere be traced the indirect but not less powerful and dangerous influence of a silently working bias, which insensibly gave its colour and its shape to all the stories of their Prophet treasured up in the memories of the believers

"That the Collectors of Tradition rendered an important service to I-lam and even to history, cannot be doubted. The vast flood of tradition, poured forth from every quarter of the Moslem empire, and daily gathering volume from innumerable tributaries, was composed of the most heterogeneous elements, without the labours of the tradi-tionists it must soon have formed a chaotic see, in which truth and error, fact and fable, would have mingled together in undistinguishable confusion It is a legitimate inference from the foregoing sketch, that Tradition, in the second century, embraced a large element of truth That even respectably derived traditions often contained much that was exaggerated and fabulous, is an equally fair conclusion. It is proved by the testimony of the Collectors themselves, that theusands and tens of thousands were current in their times, which possessed not even a shadow of authority. The mass may be likened to the image in Nebuchadnezer's The mass may be dream, formed by the unustural union of gold, of silver, of the baser metals, and of clay, and here the more valuable parts were

TRANSMIGRATION OF SOULS
[TANAGURE]

TREATY Arabic 'And (see) The observance of treaties is enjoined in the Qur'an (Sūrah viii. 58, ix 4), but if peace be made with aliens for a specified term (e.g. ten years), and afterwards the Muslim leader shall perceive that it is most advantageour for the Muslim interest to break it, he may in that case lawfully renew the war, after giving the enemy due notice (Hidayah, vol ii p 151, Arabic edition, vol ii p 428). The negotiations between John the Chris-

The negotiations between John the Christian prince of Ailah, are an interesting incident in the life of Muhammad, as indicating the spirit of Islām, in its early history, towards Christianity In the first place, Muhammad addressed to John the following letter—

"To John (Yahya) the son or Rubah, and the chiefs of the tribe of Arlah Peace be unto you! Praise be to God, besides whom there is no God. I will not fight against you until I receive an answer to this letter Beheve, or else pay tribute (nzyah) dient unto God and to His Apostle Be obethe embassy of God's Apostle, and honour them, and clothe them with excellent vest ments, and not with inferior raiment Specially benous Haris ibn Zaid, for as long as my messengers are pleased, so am I likewise Ye know the tribute If ye desire security by sea and by land, obey God and His Apostle, and you will be detended from every attack, whether by Arab or by foleigner But if you oppose God and His Apostle, I will not accept a single thing from you until I have fought against you, and have slain your men, and have taken captive your women and children For in truth, I am God's Apostle Believe in God and in His Apostle, as you do in the Messiah the son of Mary; for truly he is the Word of God, and I believe in him as an apostle of God Submit, then, before trouble reaches you. I commend this embassy to you. Give to Harmalah three measures of barley, fer Harmalah hath indeed interceded for you. As for me, if it were not roi the Lord and for this intercession, I would not have sent any embassy to you, until you had been brought face to face with my army But now submit to my embassy, and God will be your protector, as well as Muhammad and all his followers. This embassy doth consist of Shurahbil, and Ubaiy, and Harmalah, and Häris ibn Zaid. Unto you is the protection of God and of his Apostle. If you submit, then pasce be unto you, and convey the people of Maquah back to their land."

Upon receipt of this message, John hastened to Muhammad's camp, where he was received with kindness, and having made submission and having agreed to pay tribute of 800 dinars a year, the following treaty was ratified—

"In the name of God the Merciful, the Gracious. A treaty of Peace from God, and from Muhammad the Apostle of God, granted unto Yahya ibn Rübah and unto the tribe of Ailah For them who stay at home and for those who travel abroad, there is the security of God and the security of Muhammad the Apostle of God, and for all who are with them, whether they belong to Syria, or to al Yaman, or to the sea-coast Whoso breaketh this treaty, his wealth shall not save him, it shall be the fair prize of whosoever shall capture him. It shall not be lawful to hinder the men of Ailah frem going to the springs which they have hitherto used, nor from any journey they may desire to make, whether by land or by sea. This is the writing of Juhaim and Shurahbil by the command of the Apostle of God." [TOLERATION]

TRIBUTE [JIHAD, JIZYAH, TAXA-TION, TREATY]

TRINITY Arabic Tastis (شنيت),
"Holy Trinity," as Sātāsu 'I-Aqdas (التنسي)
The references to the doctrine of the Holy Trinity in the Qur'an occur ir two Surahs, both of them composed by Muhammad towards the close of his career at al-Madīnah

Sursh iv 169 "Believe, therefore, in God and His apostles, and say not 'Three."

and His apostles, and say not 'Three.'" Sürah v 77 "They misbelieve who say,
'Verily God is the third of three.' The Mesmah, the Son of Mary, is only a prophet, and his mother was a confessor, they both ate food."

Sūrah v 116 "And when God shall say, 'O Jesus son of Mary, hast thou said unto mankind Take me and my mother as two Gods besides God!'

Al-Baizāwi, in his remarks on Surah iv 169, says, the Christians made the Trimty consist of Allāh, al-Massh, and Maryam; and Jalālu 'd-din takes the same view Al-Baizāwi, however, refers to a view taken of the Tunity, by some Christians in his day who explained it to be, Ab, Father, or the Essence of God, Ibn, Son, or the Knowledge of God, and Rūku 'l-Quds, the Lafe of God

In a work quoted in the Kashju'z-Zunin, entitled al-Insānu '!-Kāmil (written by the Shaikh 'Abdu '!-Karīm ibn Ibrahīm al Jīli, lived A.H. 767-811) it is said that when the Christians found that there was at the commencement of the Injil the superscription (143) (14), i.e. In the name of the Father and Son,' they took the words in their natural meaning, and [thinking it ought to be Ab, father, Umm, mother, and Jon, son] understood by Ab, the Spirit, by Umm, Mary, and by Ibn, Jesus, and on this account they said, Sātigu Salāgatin, i.e. (God is) the third of three.' (Sūrah v 77) But they did not understand that by Ab is meant God Most High, by Umm, the Māhiyatu 'l-Hayā'iq, or 'Essence of Truth' (Quidditas veritatum'), and by Ibn, the Book of (iod, which is called the Wuyūdu 'l-Mutlag or Absolute Existence, being an emanation of the Essence of Truth as it is implied in the words of the Qur'an

the Nazarenos (Nasara) say there are three aganim, or principles, namely, wuyad (entity), hayai (life), and 'tim (knowledge), and also Ab (Fatuer), Ibn (Son), and Rühu 'l-Quds (Holy Spirit). [RUML, JESUS, SPIRIT]

It is evident neither Muhammad nor his followers (either immediate or remote), ned any true conception of the Catholic doctrine of the Trimty but the elimination of the Holy Spirit from the Trinity is not strange, when we remember that Muhammad was under the impression that the angel Gabriel was the Holy Ghost

As the doctrine of the Holy Trinity is one of several stumbling blocks to the Muslim's reception of Christianity, we cannot refrain from quoting Charles Kingsleys words addressed to Thomas Cooper on the subject (vol i p 311) .

"They will say 'Three in one' is contrary to sense and experience Answer, 'That is your ignorance Every comparative anatomist will tell you the exact contrary, that among the most common, though the most puzzling phenomena, is multiplicity in unity—dryided life in the same individual of every extraordinary variety of case That distinction of persons with unity of individuality (what the old schoolmen properly called substance) is to be met with in some thousand species of animals, eg all the compound only pes, and that the soundest physiologists, like Huxley, are compelled to talk of these animals in metaphysic terms, just as para doxical as, and almost identical with those of the theologian. Ask them then, whether granting one primordial Being who has concerved and made all other beings it is about d to suppose in Him, some law of multiplicity in unity, analogous to that on which He has constructed so many millions of His crea tures.

"But my heart demands the Trinity, as much as my reason. I want to be sure that God cares for us, that God is our Father, that God has interfered, stooped, sacrificed Himself for us I do not merely want to love Christ-a Christ, some creation or emanstion of God's-whose will and character, for aught I know, may be different from God's I want to love and honour the absolute, abysmal God Himself, and none other will satisfy mb and in the doctrine of Christ being co-equal and co-eternal, sent by, sacrifloed by, His Father, that He might do His Father's will, I find it and no puzzling texts, like those you quote, shall rob me of that rest for my heart, that Christ is the exact counterpart of Hrm in whom we live, and move and have our being '

Arabic 'imāmah (i.l.a), Persian dastār (دمعار); Hindustānī naarī (دمعار) The turban, which pagri ( The turban, which consists of a suff round cap, occasionally rising to a considerable height, and a long piece of muslim, often as much as twenty-four yaids in length, wound round it, is amongst all Muhammadan nations a sign of authority and honour, and it is held to be disrespectful to stand in the presence of a person of respectability, or to worship God, with the head uncovered Shaikhe and persons of religious pretensions wear green turbans The Coptio Christians in Egypt wear a blue turban, having been compelled to do so by an edict published in AD 1301 Iz some parts of Islam, it is usual to set apart a Maulawi, or to appoint a chief or ruler, by placing a turban on his head

The mitre, bonnet, hood, and deadem of the Old Testament are but varieties of the head dress known in the East as the turban. Canon Cook, in the Speaker's Commentary, on Exodus Exvill. 4, 87, says the mutenepheth, or "mitre" of the Hebrew Bible, "according to the derivation of the word, and from the statement in verse 89, was a twisted band of hier coiled into a cap, to which the name metre in its original sonso closely answers, but which in modern usage would rather be called a turban."

The term used in the Hebrow Bible for put-bind round," and would therefore indicate that even in the earliest periods of Jewish history the head-dress was similar in character to that now seen amongst the different Mushim tribes of the world

Josephus' account of the high priest's mitre is peculiar, he says (Antiquities, book in. ch vii. p 3) "Its make is such that it seems to be a crown, being made of thick swather, but the contexture is of linen, and it is doubled many times, and sown together; besides which. a piece of fine linen covers the whole cap from the upper part, and reaches down to the forehead and the seams of the swathes, which would otherwise appear indecently, this adheres closely upon the solid part of the head, and is thereto so firmly fixed that it may not fall off during the sacred service about the sacrifices "

The varieties of turban worn in the East are very great, and their peculiarities are best illustrated by the accompanying drawing, giving seventeen different styles of tying up the turban In books written upon the subject in Eastern languages, it is said that their are not fower than a thousand methods of binding the turban. It is in the peculiar method of tying on, and of arranging this head-dress, that not only tribal and religious distinctions are seen, but even peculiarities of disposition. The humility or pride, the virtue or vice, as well as the social standing of the individual, is supposed to be indicated in his method of binding the turban upon his head.
And travellers in the East can at once distinguish the different races by their turbane. DRESS ] centre of emitiation for Arab poets at wa also an annual review of Bedawee virtues It was there that the Arab nation once-a-yea inspected steels, so to sav. and brought fort and criticised its ideals of the noble and th beautiful in life and in poetry. For it was a poetry that the Arab - and for that matte each man all the world over—expressed his highest thoughts, and it was at 'Okádh that these thoughts were measured by the standard of this Bedawee ideal. The Fair not colly maintained the highest standard of postry that the Arabic language has ever reached, it also upheld the noblest idea of life and duty that the Arab nation has yet set forth and obeyed. 'Okádh was the press, the stage, the pulpit, the Parliament, and the Académie Française of the Arab people, and when, in his fear of the infidel poets (whom Imra-el-Kéys was to usher to hell), Mohammad abolished the Fair, he destroyed the Arab nation, even whilst he created his own nation of Muslims, and the Muslims cannot sit in the places of the old pagan Arabs."

'UKUF (هکوف). Let "Remaining behind." A term used to express a life of prayer of one who remains constantly in the mosque.

"ULAMA" (alala), pi of 'alım "One who knows, learned, a scholar" In this plural form the word is used as the title of those bodies of learned doctors in Muhammadan divinity and law, who, headed by their Shaikhu 7-Islam, form the theocratic element of the government in Muslim countries, and who by their fatuas or decisions in questions touching private and public matters of im-portance, regulate the life of the Muhamma-dan community Foremost in influence and authority are naturally reckoned the 'Ulama' of Constantinople, the seat of the Khalifah, and of Makkah, the Holy City of Islam Like the Ashab or Companions of the Prophet under his immediate successors, they correspond in a certain measure to what we would call the representative system of our modern constitutions, in partially limiting and checking the autocratism of an other-wise absolute Oriental ruler

ULUHIYAH (الوهية) " Divinity , godhesd "

"The Possessors of Constancy" A title given to certain prophets in the Qur'an, said by the commentators to have been Noah, Abraham, David, Jacob, Joseph, Job, Mosea, Jesus, and Muhammad. (Vide Ghyāsu 'l-Lughāt) See Sūrah xivi 84 "Then be thou constant, as the Apostles endowed with a purpose were constant, and hasten not on."

UMANA' (al. ), pl. of amen "Faithful Ones" A title given by the Sufis to those pious persons who do not make their religious experiences known. They are known also as the Malamatiyah, or those who are willing to undergo misrepresention rather than boast of their piety

'UMAR (عمر) IBN AL-KHATTAB (Omar) the second Khalifah, who succeeded Abū Bakr, A.H 18 (A D 684), and was assassinated by Firoz, a Persian slave, A H 23 (A D 644), after a prosperous reign of ten years. His conversion to Islâm took place in the sixth year of Muhammad's mission, and the Prophet took 'Umar's daughter Hafsah as his third wife.

'Umar is emment amongst the early Khalifahs for having chiefly contributed to the spread of Islam. Under him the great generals, Abu 'Ubaidah, Khalid ibn al-Walid, Yazīd, drove the Greeks out of Syrıs and Phœmeia, Sa'd ibn Abi Waqqis Qaqa'ah, Nu'man, completed the conquest of the two Traqs and the overthrow of the Persian Empire, 'Amr ibn al-'As (commonly called Amru) subdued Egypt and part of the Libyan coast, after having, as commander in Palestine, prepared by his victories and a severe siege, the surrender of Jernsalem [JERUSALEM] into the Khalifah's own hands 'Umar's name is, moreover, intimately connected with the history of Islam, by the initiatory and important share which he took in the first collection of the Qur'an, under Abū Bakr, by the official introduction of the Muhammadan era of the Hijrah, and by the first organisation of the diwan, or civil list of the Muhammadans The two former subjects have been treated of in this Dictionary in their proper places, the third mattution, which laid the foundation to the marvellous successes of the Muslim arms under this and the succeeding Governments, is ably explained in the following extract from Sir W Muir's Annals of the Early Caliphate

"The Arabian nation was the champion of Islam, and to fight its battles every Arab was jealously reserved. He must be the soldier, and nothing else. He might not soldier, and nothing else settle down in any conquered province as oultivator of the soil, and for merchandise or other labour, a busy warlike life offered but little lesure Neither was there any need The Arabs lived on the fat of the conquered land, and captive natives served them. Of the booty taken in war, four parts were dis-tributed to the army in the field, the fifth was reserved for the State, and even that, after discharging public obligations, was shared among the Arabian people. In the reign of Abu Bakr, this was a simple matter But in the Caliphate of Omar, the spoil of Syria and of Poreia began in evel-increasing volume to pour into the treasury of Medina, where it was distributed almost as soon as received What was easy in small beginnings, by equal sharing or discretionary preference, became now a heavy task. And there began, also, to arise new sources of revenue in the land assessment, and the poll-tax of subject countries, which, after defraying civil and military charges, had to be accounted for to the Central Government, the surplus being, like the royal fifth, the patrimony of the Arab nation.

"At length, in the second or third year of his Caliphate, Omar determined that the distribution should be regulated on a fixed and systematic scale. The income of the commonwealth was to be divided, as heretofore, amongst the Faithful as their heritage, but apon a rule of precedence befitting the miliary and theocratic groundwork of Islam. For this end three points only were considered priority of conversion, affinity to the Prophet, and military service widows of Mahomet, 'Mothers of the Faithful, took the precedence with an annual allowance of 10,000 pieces each, and all his kinsmen were with a corresponding liberality provided for The famous Three Hundred of Bedr had 5,000 each, presence at Hodeibia (Hudaibiyah) and the Pledge of the Tree, gave a claim to 4,000, such as took part in quelling the Rebellion (immediately after Muhammad's death), had 8,000, and those engaged in the great battles of Syria and Irac, as well as sons of the men of Bedr, 2.000, those taking the field after the actions of Oadeniya and the Yermuk, 1,000 Warriors of distinction received an extra grant of 500 And so they graduated downwards to 200 pieces for the latest levies. Nor were the households Women had, as a rule, one tent forgetten. of a man's share Wives, widows, and children had each their proper stipend, and in the register, every infant, as soon as born, had the title to be entered, with a minimum allowance of ten pieces, rising with advancing age to its proper place. Even Arab slaves (so long as any of that race remained) had, strange to say, their portion

"The Arabian aristocracy thus created was recognised by the whole Moslem world. The rank and stipend now assigned descended in the direct line of birth. Even rewards given for special gallantry in the field were heritable. By making thus the revenues of Islam the heritage of the nation militant, their martial genius was maintained, and their employment perpetuated as the standing army of the Caliphate.

"To carry out this vast design, a register and to be drawn and kept up of every man, woman and child, entitled to a stipend from the State-in other words, of the whole Arab race employed in the interests of Islam This was easy enough for the higher grades, but a herculean task for the hundreds and thousands of ordinary fighting men and their families who kept streaming forth from the Peninsula, and who, by the extravagant indulgence of polygamy, were multiplying rapidly. But the task was simplified by the strictly tribal composition and dispo-Men of a tribe, or sition of the ferces branch of a tribe, fought together and the several corps and brigades being thus territorially arranged in clans, the Register assumed the same form. Every soul was sumed the same form Every soul was entered under the stock and tribe and class whose lineage it claimed. And to this exhaustive classification we owe in great measure the elaborate genealogies and tribal traditions of Arabia before Islam

Register itself, as well as the office for its maintenance and for pensionary account was called the Dewan (Discon), or Department of the Exchequer" (Sir W. Muir, Annals of the Early Caliphate, London, 1888, p. 228)

It was fortunate for Islam, that the reign of Abu Bakr, short in duration, but pregnant with decisive issues, should precede that of 'Umar During the omtical period, immediately after Muhammad's death, when three false prophets and a prophetess gathered increasing numbers round their rebellious standards, when in the north, east, and south of the Pennsula, tribe after tribe, apostatused from the newly-adopted creed, and when al-Madinah itself was repeatedly threatened by hostile invasions of the neighbouring clans it needed all the spirit of compromise and conciliation which blended in Abū Bakr's character with penetrating shrewdness and dauntless courage, to steer the bark of the Muslim commonwealth through the dangers which were surrounding it on every side 'Umar's prepressible impetuosity would, at that time, probably have caused more harm than good, while, on the other hand, the unprecedented success which crowned Abū Bakr's wise and temporising politics, taught him to temper his own impulses of bold enterprise with prudence and cautiousness, when, in his turn, the reponsibilities of office rested on his shoulders

The original violent bent of Umar's nature is forcibly illustrated by the history of his conversion as it is told in various traditions. In his youth and early manhood, a zealous and devoted adherent of the religion of his forefathers, he hated and persecuted Muhammad as a dangerous innovator, who had come to lead his people astray, and to sow discord between them Infuriated at some fresh success of the pretended Prophet, he sallied forth one day to kill him, when he met his kinsman, Nu'aim ibn 'Abdi 'llah, who, seeing him armed and fiercely excited, asked him "Whither goest thou, and what is thy intent?" "I seek Muhammad," was Umar's reply, "and I will slay him, he has vilified our gods and dishonoured our ancestors " "Passion blinds thee," retorted Nusaim, "knowest thou not that, if thou killest Muhammad, thou wilt draw the vengeance of the Häshimites and the Banu Muttalib upon thy head? Better far it would be for thee, to heed the welfare of thy own family, and to bring back to the right path those members of it who have forsworn their ancestral religion." "And who are they," asked 'Umar. "Thy brother-in-law, Sa'id ibn Zaid, and Fatimah, thy very own sister." answered Nu'sım

Forthwith the incensed man nurried on to the house of the culprits. Here Khabbab ibn al-Aratt, a devoted disciple of Muhammad, the same who had made them acquamted with his teaching and won them over to Islâm unknown to 'Umar, was reading with them at that moment a new fragment of the Qurun When he heard 'Umar coming, he concealed himself, and Fânmah tried to hide the manuscript in the bosom of her dress. On entering, 'Umar asked." What have you been reading just now? I heard your voices!" "Nothing," she replied, "thou art mistaken" "You have been reading something, and I am told that you belong to the sect of Muhammad" With these words the threw himself upon his brother-in-law, and struck him. Fatimah rushed in between them. Both husband and wife boldly confessed "Yes, we are Mushims, we believe that there is no god but God, and that Muhammad is his sent one, kill us, if thou wilt"

No sconer had 'Umar seen the blood flowing from a wound which he had inflicted on his sister, than shame for his own unmanivact, coupled with admiration of their courageous conduct, brought about a powerful revulsion of his feelings. He asked to be shown the manuscript, and when, after his solemn promise not to destroy it, the fragment was handed over to him, he read—

"Not to sadden thee have We sent down this Qur'an to thee,

But as a warning for him who feareth, A missive from Him who hath made the earth and the lefty heavens,

The God of Mercy who sitteth on Histhrone!

His, whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is in the earth, and whatso over is between them both, and what soever is beneath the humid soil!

And thou needest not raise thy voice in prayer He verily knoweth the secret whisper, and the yet more hidden!
God' there is no God but Him! Most excellent His titles!"

(Quah xx 1-7)

"How nobly said and how sublime!" exclaimed 'Umar, when he had read the pas sage. Thereupon Khabbāb came forth from his place of concealment, and summoned him to testify to the teaching of Muhammad 'Umar asked where Muhammad was, went to him, and made his profession of faith to the Prophet himself.

Henceforth 'Umar remained attached to the person of Muhammad with the most devoted friendship, and embraced the cause of Islam with all the energies of his strong nature We find 'Umar, immediately after Muhammad's death, unable at first to grasp the reality of the fact. When the news was imparted to him, he exclaimed wildly before the assembly of the faithful "The Prophet is not dead, he has only swooned away " And, again, when Mughirah tried to convince him that he was mistaken-" Thou heat!" he cried. "the Prophet of the Lord shall not die, until he have rooted out every hypocrite and unbe-hever. At this point Aba Bakr quoted the verses of the Qur'an, revealed after the defeat at Uhud 'Muhammad is no more than an Apostle, verily the other apostles have gone before him What then! If he were to die or be killed, would you turn back in your heels?" And he added the memorable appeal "Let him then know, whosoever worship peth Muhammad, that Muhammad indeed is dead, but whose werehippeth God let him know that the Lord hysth and doth not die"

Then, and only then, on hearing those words, spoken by the book, as if he had never heard them before, the truth burst upon 'Umar with ernshing force "By the Lord," he would tell in later days, "it was so that when I heard Abû Bakr reciting those verses, I was horror-struck, my limbs trembled, I dropped down, and I know of a certainty that Muhammad indeed was dead

The paramount ascendency which Muhammad, during his lifetime, exercised over 'Umar, could not fail to soften his passionate and vehement nature, and to train him to these habits of self-command, which form one of the most essential elements in the character of a good ruler. If it was an act of wise foresight on the part of Muhammad to designate, at the approach of death, the older and sedate: Abu Bakr as his successor, by appointing him to conduct the public prayers during his last illness he could at the same time feel assured that Uniar, far from contesting the choice of his dying friend, would respect it and make it respected against any defection or rival ambition by his cordial and powerful support. But it was equally natural and wise on the part of Abū Bakr, when the time had come, to fix the choice of his own successor upon Umar is related that, feeling his end to be near, and withing to fortify his own conviction by the sense of others, he first consulted 'Abdu r-Rahman, the son of 'Auf, who praised 'Umar 'as the fittest man, but withal inclined to be severe.' "Which," responded the dying Khalifah, " is because he saw me soft and tenderhearted, when himself the Master, he will forego much of what thou sayest. I have watched him narrowly If I were angry with one, he would intercede in his behalf, if over-lement, then he would be severe ' 'Usman, lement, then he would be severe ''Usman, too, confirmed Abu Bakr's choice "What is hidden of 'Umar," he said, ' is better than that which doth appear. There is not his equal amongst us all."

And so it was at in bodily stature 'Umar towered high above his fellow-men, so he excelled in every quality required in an imposing commander of the Faithful (Amīr al-Mu'minin), this being the title which he adopted in preference to the more cumbersome of "Successor of the Apostle of God" (Khalifatu 'r-Rasūli 'llāh) It lies outside the scope of the present work to give a complete biography of Umar, and we must refer the reader who should wish to make himself acquainted, with it, to the above-quoted attractive volume of Sir W Muir, Anada of the Early Calsphate Our less ambitious object here has merely been to sketch as it were, in a few salient traits culled from it, the picture of a man, who, as a founder of Islām, was second only to Muhammad himself Gifted with a high and penetrating sit lieft, and possessed of a strong sense of justice, he was impartial, skilful, and fortunate in the choice of his military and civil agents, and had learnt to temper severity with clemency and wise forbearance it was he who, in his earlier days, after the battle of Badr, had advised that the priseners should all be put to death, his later resentment against Khalid, with whose name the cruel fate of Malik ibn Nuwairah and the gory tale of the "River of Blood" are huked in history, on the contrary, took rise in Khālid's unscrupulous and savage treatment of a fallen foe And the fanatic intolerance of some of the Muslim captains is favourably contracted with 'Umars treatment of the Christiamsed Arab tribe of the Banti Taghlib They had tendered their submission to Walld ibn 'Uqbah, who, solicitous for the adhesion to Islam of this great and famous race, pressed them with some riganr to abjure their ancient faith 'Umar was much displeased at this - Leave them," he wrote, "in the profession of the Gospel It is only within the bounds of the peninsula, where are the Holy Places, that no pulviheist tribe is permitted to remain." Walid was removed from his command; and t was enjoined on his successor to stipulate only that the usual tribute should be paid, that no member of the tribe should be hindered from embracing Islam, and that the children should not be educated in the Christian faith The last condition can only have been meant as a nominal indication of the supremacy of Islam, for if it had been enforced we should not read of the Bann Tagblib ontinuing in the profession of Christianity under the next two dv The tribe, deeming nasties and even later in its pride the payment of tribute (juzyah) an indignity, sent a deputation to the Khalifah, declaring their willingness to pay the tax if only it were levied under the same name as that taken from the Mushims 'Umar evinced his liberality by allowing the conces sion and so the Binu laghib emoved the singular privilege of bring assessed as Christians at a "double tithe" (ushr), instead of paying jazyah the obnoxious badge of subjugation (Sir W Muir, Annals p 218)

As the original asperity of 'Umar's character had been mellowed in the school of life and in close communion with Muhammad and Abu Bakr, so the same influences, together with the responsibilities of his posiimpetuosity with prudence and cautiousness While his captains in Syria and the 'Iraq were continually urging him to push on his conquests to the north and east, he would not allow any advance to be ventured upon, before the Muslim rule in the occupied provinces was well established and firmly couselidated In like manner he evinced a singular dread of naval enterprise, ever after an expedition sent to Abyssims across the Red Sea in the seventh year of his reign had met with a signal disaster, and he was countenanced in this aversion for the treacherous element by a not less daring general than 'Amr, son of al-'As, who, consulted on the subject, wrote to him

"The sea is a boundless expanse, whereou i great ships look but tiny specks, there is nought saving the heavens above and the waters beneath. Trust it little, fear it much. Man at sea is an insect floating on a splinter, if the splinter break, the insect perisheth."

Wher the wily Amr wished to raise his people in the estimation of the Egyptians, he had a feast prepared of slaughtered camels, after the Bedouin fashion, and the Egyptians looked on with wonder, while the army satisfied themselves with the rude repast. Next day he commanded a sumptions banquet to be set before them; with all the dainties of the Egyptian table, and here "gain the warriors fell to with equal zest. On the third day, there was a grand parade of all the troops in battle array, and parade of all the troops in battle array, and addressed them, saying "The first day's entertainment was to let you see the plain and simple manner of our life at home, the second, to show you that we can not the less enjoy the good things of the lands we enter, and yet retain, as ye see in the spectacle here before you, our martial vigour notwithstand ing."

'Ami gained his end, for the Copts retired, saying one to the other,' See ye not that the Arabs have but to raise their heel upon us, and it is enough!" 'Umar was delighted with his heutenant's device and said of him, "Of a truth it is on wisdom and resolve, as well as on mere force, that the success of warfare doth depend "

But at the same time, 'Umar was much too thoughtful and far seeing himself not to recognise the danger for the future of Islam, which was linking in this sudden acquisition of unesaured riches. On one occasion, when he was about to distribute the fifth of some Persian spoils, he was seen to weep "What," it was said to him, 'a time of joy and thankfulness, and thou sheddest tears" "Yea," replied the simple-minded Khalifah, "it is not for this I weep, but I foresee that the weslith which the Lord hath bestowed upon us will become a spring of worldliness and eavy, and in the end a calamity to my people'

Moreover the luxury and estentation which was thus engendered in the enriched leaders, was utterly repulsive to his own frugal habits and homely nature. On his first visit to Syria. Abu Ubaidan, Yazid, and Khālid, met him in state to welcome him. A brilliant cavallade, robed in Syrian brocade, and mounted on steeds richly caparisoned, they sode forth as he approached. At the sight of all their lineit; Umar's spirit was stirred within him. He stooped down, and, gathering a hindful of gravel, flung it at the asto maked chiefs. "Avaunt!" he cited, "is it thus attired that we come out to meet me, All changed thus in the space of two short years! Verily, had it been after two hundred, ye would have deserved to be degraded."

This primitive simplicity of the Arab chieftain is another grand and highly captivating feature in 'Umar's character. We see in our mind's eye the mighty mover of armites the time when the destines of Islam were mbling in the balance on the battle-field of disiyah, Issuing on feet from the gates of Medinah in the early morning, if perchance might meet some messenger from the ine of combat. At last a counter arrived aids the city, who to 'Umar's question reis shortly, "The Lord has discomfited the "sian host" Unrecognised, 'Umar followed messenger, leading the camel, and with long strides keeping pace with the h-stepping animal, to glean from him the line of the great battle. When they end al-Madinah, the people crowded round Khalifah, saluting him, and heering the ppy news, wished him joy of the triumph a courier, abashed, cried out, "O Commer of the Faithful, why didst thou not me?" but his mind was instantly set at toy the Khalifah's kindly answer. "It is ll, my brother "

h, we may fancy him perambulating wind hand, the streets and markets of al Madin, ready to punish the offenders on the t, may be his own son and his boon comions, who had indulged in the use of wine. I not have defined from the street of the score was sent from Damascus, and ulgence from the strict enforcement of law was claimed for them on the plea of in exalted position and military merits, he is back "Gather an assembly and bring imforth. Then ask, Is wine lawful, or is forbidden? If they say forbidden, lay eight upes upon each of them, if they say law, then behead them every one." The aishment, if inflicted by 'Umar's own hand, a telling, for it became a proverb and.

Or, again, with the groan of repentance of well-chastised offender still ringing in sears, we may watch the same Umar, as irneying in Arabia in the year of famine, comes upon a poor woman, seated with hungry and weeping children round a whereon is an empty pot He hurries to next village, procures bread and meat, the pot, and cooks an ample meal, ving the little ones laughing and at play luch a man was 'Umar, the great Khalit, brave, wise, pious No fitter epitaph ild adorn his tombstone, than his dving rds — "It had gone hard with my soul, if ad not been a Muslim." He is known amongst Muslims as Zu Nürain, "The Possessor of the Two Lights," because he married two of the Prophet's daughters, Ruqaiyah and Ummu Kulaum. His chief merit with regard to the cause of Islam was the second and final revision of the sacred book, which he caused to be made, and of which an exhaustive account has been given in our article on the Quran.

Although Muhammadan historians distinguish the reigns f the first four Khalifahs as founded on faith (dins), from these of the later ones, as based on the world and its passions and vanities (dunyani), it must be admitted that worldly motives entered al ready largely into the politics of 'Usman and 'All, as contrasted with Abū Bakr and 'Umar' 'Usmān, by his weakness and nepotism, 'Alī by holding aloof with culpable indifference, during the protracted death-struggle of his predecessor, by abetting his murderer in the open field, and by his vacillating spirit, where firmness of purpose was needed, gave rise to those fierce diasensions between rival religious and political parties, which led for the time being, to the establishment of the Umanyah dynasty, and eventually caused the division of Islâm into the two great sects of the Sunnis and Shi'ghe

USUL (احول), pl of asl Lit "Roots" The roots or fundamentals of the Muhammadan religion, as opposed to furū' (عروة) "branches," a term used for Muham madan law, civil, ceremonisl and religious The usūl of Islām are universally held to be four (1) The Qur'ān, (2) The Hadis, (3) Ipma, and (4) Viyās, terms which will be found explained under their respective titles

'Almu L-Usul is the science of interpreta tion of exegests of these four fundamentals

USURY Arabic riba' (45) A word which, has the Hebrew 722 neshek

includes all gain upon leans, whether from the lean of money or goods or property of any kind. In the Mosaic law, conditions of gain for the lean of meney or goods, were rigorously prohibited. If then lead money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not be to him as an usurer neither shalt then lay upon him usury. (Exodus xxii 25) "If thy brother be waxen poor—take no usury of him of increase but fear thy God that thy brother may hive with thee. Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury nor lead him thy victuals for increase. (Le viticus xxii 35-37)

(1) The teaching of the Qui an on the subject is given in Suiah in 276, "They who swallow down usury, shall arise in the Last Day only as he ariseth, whom Satan has infected by his touch. This for that they say, 'Selling is only the line of usury,' and yet God hath allowed selling and forbidden usury, and whoseever receiveth the admonit on from his Lord, and abstaineth from it, shall have pardon for the just and his lot shall be with God. But they who return to usury, shall be given over to the Fire.—therem to abide for ever

(2) in the Tradition, Muhaninad is related to have said —

"Cursed be the taker of usury, the giver of usury, the writer of usury, and the witness of usury, for they are all equal"

"Verily the wealth that is gained in usury, although it be great, is of small advantag (Sakihu Mushim, Babu 'r Riba')

(S) Reba', in the language of the law, signification excess according to a legal standard of measurement or weight, in one of two homogeneous articles (of weight or measurement of capacity) opposed to each other in a contract of exchange, and in which such excess is stipulated as an obligatory condition on one of the parties, without anything being opposed to it. The sale, therefore, of two loads of barley, for instance, in exchange for one load of wheat does not constitute usury, since these articles are not homogeneous, and, on the other hand, the sale of ten yards of cloth in exchange for five yards of cloth, is not usury, since al though these articles be homogeneous, still they are not estimable by weight or measurement of capacity

Usury, then, as an illegal transaction, is occasioned (according to most Muhammadan doctors) by rate, united with species, where, however it must be observed, that rate, amongst the Musalmans, applies only to articles of weight or measurement of capacity, and not to articles of longitudinal measurement, such as cloth, &c , or of tale, such as eggs, dates, walnuts, &c when exchanged from hand to hand Ash Shafi'l maintams that usury takes place only m things of an esculent nature, or in money, and according to him, therefore, articles of the last-men tioned description would give occasion to usury It is, furthermore, to be observed that superiority or inferiority in the quality has no effect in the establishment of the usury, and hence it is lawful to sell a quantity of the better sort of any a-ticle in exchange for an equal quantity of an interior sort. Nor does usury exist where the qualities of an article of weight or measurement by capacity are not ascertained by some known standard of measurement. Thus it is lawful to sell one handful of wheat n ex change for two handfuls, or two handfuls for four, because, in such case, the measurement not having been made according to a logal standard, the superiority of measurement, establishing naury, has not taken place, and, since the law has fixed no standard of measure beneath half a see, any quantity less than such is considered equivalent to a kandful

Where the quality of being weighable or measureable by capacity, and correspondence of species (being the causes of usury) both exist, the supulation of inequality or of sus pension of payment to a future period, are both usurious. Thus it is usurious to sell either one measure of wheat m exchange for two measures,-or one measure of wheat for one measure deliverable at a future period If on the contrary, neither of these circum stances exist (as in the sale of wheat for money, it is lawful, either to stipulate a superiority of rate, or the payment at a future period. If, on the other hand, one of these circumstances only exist (as in the sale of wheat for barley, or the sale of one slave to: another), then a superiority in the rate may legally be stipulated, out not a suspen-sion in the payment. Thus one measure of wheat may lawfully be sold for two measures of harley or one slave for two slaves but it is not lawful to sell one measure of wheat for one measure of barley, payable at a future period, nor one siave for another, deliverable

at a future period

According to the majority of doctors, everything in which the usuriousness of an excess has been established by the Prophet on the ground of measu ement of capacity (such as wheat, barley, lates and sait), or on the ground of weight (I ke golder silver), is for ever to be considered a of that nature, although mankind should forsake this mode of estimation, because the custom of mankind, which regulates the measurement, is of inferior force to the declaration of the Prophet, and a superior court cannot yield to an inferior Abu Yüsuf, however, is of opinion that in all things practice or custom ought to prevail, although in opposition to the ordinances of the Prophet, for the ordinance of the Prophet was founded on usage and practice of his own time In ordinances, therefore, the prevalent customs among mankind are to be regarded, and as these are liable to alter, they must be attended to rather than the letter of an ordinance

Usury cannot take place between a master and his slave, because whatever is in the possession of the slave is the property of the master, so that no sale can possibly take place between them, and hence the possibility of usury is excluded a fortion. Nor can it take place cetween a Muslim and a hostile mildel in a hostile country, in accordance with the saying of the Prophet "There is no usury between a Muslim and a hostile infidel in a foreign land," and on the further ground, that the property of a hostile infidel being free to the Muslim, it follows that it is lawful to take it by whatever mode may be possible, provided there be no decent used It is otherwise with respect to a zimmi, or protected alien, as his property is not of a neutral nature, because of the protection that has been accorded to him, and, therefore, usury is as unlawful to his case as in that of a Muelim Abū Yusuf and ash Shafi i conceive an analogy between the case of a hostile infidel, in a hostile country and that of a z:mm; and hence they hold contrary to the other Muslim dectors, that ustry can take piace also between a Muslim and a hostile infidel :n a foreign land

The testimony of a person who receives usury 14 madmissible in a court of law it is recorded in the Mabeüt, however, that the evidence of a usurer is madmissible only in case of his being so in a notorious degree, because mankind often make invalid contracts, and these are in some degree usurious. (Hidāyah, Grady's edition, p 862)

USWAH, also ISWAH (8,-1). "An example." The word occurs in the Qur'an, Sürah xxxii 21. "Ye had in the Apostle of God a good example" (uswatum hasanatun) Ar-Rāghib says it is the condition in which a man is in respect of another's imitating him.

UTERINE BELATIONS Arabic zawū 'l-arhām (دور الارهام), called by the English lawyers "distant kindred."

They are divided into four classes —
(1) Persons descended from the deceased, how low seever, at the children of daughters on of son's daughters.

(2) Those from whom the deceased is descended, how high soever, i.e. False grand-parents, in contradistinction from the True, a true grandfather being one between whom and the deceased no female intervenes, a true grandmother, one between whom and the deceased no false grandfather intervenes (3) Those descended from the parents of the

(3) Those descended from the parents of the deceased, how low soever, se the daughters of full-brothers and of half brothers (by the same father only) the children of half-brothers (by the same mother only), and the children of maters

(4) The children of the two grandfathers and two grandmothers of the deceased, as father's half-brothers and sistors by the same mother only and their children, the deceased's paternal aunts and their children, maternal uncles and aunts and their children, the daughters of full paternal uncles and half-paternal uncles by the same father only.

This classification, however, does not exhaust the distant kindred, which, in the language of the law, are defined as those relations of a deceased person who are neither sharers nor residuaries [INHERITANCE]. Thus, cousins who are children of residuaries, but are not residuaries themselves (e.g. paternal uncles' daughters) are distant kindred, though not members of any of the torogong classes, or related through any member of such a class

When the distant kindred succeed, in coine quence of the absence of sharers and residuaries, they are admitted according to the order of their classes Within the limits of each perticular class it is a goperal rule that a person nearer in degree succeeds in preference to one more remote, and in all classes, if there be several of an equal legree, the property goes equally among them if they are of the same sex There is, however, some disagreemen as to cases in which persons through whom they are related to the deceased are of different sexes or of different blood, and it is maintained by Muhammad, against Abū Yusuf that regard must be had partly to the "roots" or intermediate rela ilons and not only to the "branches," o actual claimants. Thus all are agreed that it a man leave a daughter's son and a daughter's daughter, the male with have a double portion, for there is no difference of sex in the intermediate relations, but if there be a daughter's son's daughter and a daughter's daughter's son, it is said by Abu Yusuf that the male will have a double portion, on account of his sex, but by Muhammad, that the female, instead of the male, will take the double portion, by reason of her father's sex. And on the other hand, all are agreed that if there be two daughters of different brothers, they will take equally between them; but if there be a daugnter of a brother and a daughter of a half-brother by the father only, Muhammad rules that the latter will take nothing , for naving regard to the circumstances that a brother excludes a haif-brother by the father only, he considers tnat there is nothing to be handed down to the descendant of the latter, and that the whole will go to the descendant of the former

This rule of Muhammad, which in its application to the different classes of the distant kindred, leads to curious results of a complex character, seems to deserve a particular notice, as resting to a large extent on the principle of representation, which otherwise is all but foreign to the Muhammadan law of inheritance. (A Rumse), Mochummudan Law of Inheritance, p. 56, Syed Ameer Ali, Personal Law, p. 52, Durru'l-Mukhtär, p. 878)

VEILS [DRESS]

VESSELS In the early days of Islam there were four kinds of drinking-vessels forbidden to Muhammadans on account of their being used for wine, namely, bantam (علم), a green vessel, dubba (اعلم), a large goard hollowed out, naqir (علم), a cup made from the hollowed root of a tree muzaffat (عرف ), a vessel covered with a kind of black pitch, or the glutineus substance with which the bottom of h ats are payed (Mishkāt, book 1 ch 1 pt 1) But, according to Muslim law, the vessels used by Christians and Jewa, and even by idolators, are lawful, but they must be tree from the taste or smell of wine

VIGIL Arabic 'arafah (3,2) The only Muhammadan festival which has a vigil a the 'Idu 'l-Azhā, (1 "Feast of Sacrifica" '1DU 'L-AZHA]

VISITING THE SICK Arabic tyādah (& Jes). An incumbent religious duty enjoined by Muhammad on his ollowers. The following traditions illustrate us teaching on the subject (Mishkūt, book r ch 1)—

"When a Muslim visits a sick brother, he rathers the fruits of Paradise from the time is leaves his home until he returns"

"If a Muslim visit a sick person and say even times, 'I ask the Almighty God, who is lord of the great throne, to give thee health' he prayer shall be granted, unless the apcounted time of his death nath surely come?"

"Verily God will say at the Day of Resurection, 'O sens of Adam! I was sick and ye lid not visit me.' And the sens of Adam will say, 'O our Defender' how could we visit thee, for Thou art the Lord of the universe and art free from sickness?' And God will say, 'O men! did you not know that such a one of my servants was sick, and you did not visit him? Do you not know that had you visited that servant you would have met me there?''

"Ayshau hays" "When any one of us was sick, the Prophet used to rub his hands upon the rick person's body, after which he would say, 'O Lord of man! take away this pain and give health for Thou art the giver of health, there is no health but thine, that health which leaveth no sickness"

"When any person complained of being out of order, or having a wound or sole, the Prophet would say, when passing his finger over the part affected, 'In the name of God, the earth of our ground mixed with the spittle of our mouth we have done this in order to restore the sick to health, by permission of our Lord'"

WAHHĀBĪ (وهابي) A sect of Mushm revivalets founded by Muhammad, son of 'Abdu 'l-Wahhab, but as their oppo-nents could not call them Muhammadans, they have been distinguished by the name of the father of the founder of their sect, and are called Wahhābīs

Muhammad ibn 'Abdu l-Wahhāb was born at Avinah in Najd in AD 1691 Carefully instructed by his father in the tenets of the Muslim faith, according to the Hanbali sect, the strictest of the four great schools of inter-pretation the son of 'Abdu 'l-Wahhāb determined to increase his knowledge by visiting the schools of Makkah, al-Basrah and Bagh dad The libraries of these celebrated centres of Muhammadanism placed within the reach of the zealous student those ponderous folios of tradition known as the "six correct books, and also gave him access to numerous manuseript volumes of Muslim law Having performed in pilgrimage to Makkah with his father, and visited the Prophet's tomb at al-Madinah, he remained at the latter place to eit at the feet of Sharkh 'Abdu 'llah ibn Ibrahim, by whom he was carefully metructed in all the intracacies of the exegetical rules laid down for the exposition of ethics and jurisprudence.

For some years he resided with his father at Horemelah, a place which, according to Palgrave, claims the honour of his birth, but after his father's death he returned to his native village, Ayinah, where he assumed the position of a religious leader

In his various travels, Muhammad ibn 'Abdu 'l-Wahhāb had observed the laxities and superstitions of those who, whilst they professed to accept the stern unbending precepts of the Prophet of Arabia, had succeeded in stretching the rigid lines of Islam almost to breaking Omens and augu-nes, sacred shrines and richly ornamented tombs, the use of intoxicating drugs, the silks and satins of the wealthy, all seemed to the earnest reformer lamentable departures from the first principles of Islam, and unwarrantable concessions to the luxury, idolatry, and superstitions of the age Having carefully studied the teachings of the Quran and the pacred traditions, he thought he had learned to distinguish between the essential elements of lulam and its recent admixtures, and now once more in the home of his childhood, he determined to teach and to propagate nothing but the pure faith" as laid down by the precepts and practice of the Prophet himself. The Muslim world had departed from the worship or the Unity, and had yielded a blind allegiance to Walis, Pirs, and Saints, and all because the teachings of the sacred traditions had been neglected for that of learned but ambitious teachers

To accept any docume other than that of those "Companions" who received their instructions from the Prophet's lips was simply the blind leading the blind, and, therefore, the Reformer, refusing to join his faith to the uncertain leading-strings of even the four orthodox doctors, determined to establish the right of private judgment in the inter-pretation of those two great foundations of Islanı—the Quran and the Ahadis

His teaching met with acceptance, but his increasing influence excited the opposition of the ruler of his district, and he was compelled to seek an asylum at Daraiah, under the pro tection of Muhammad ibn Sa'ud, a chief of considerable influence The protection of the religious teacher was made a pretext fer more ambitious designs, and that which the zealous cleric had failed to accomplish by his persuasive eloquence, the warrior chief now sought to attain by the power of the swerd, and he thus established in his own person that Wahhabi dynasty which, after a chequeled existence of more than a hundred years, still exercises so powerful an influence not only in Central and Eastern Arabia, but wherever the Muhammadan creed is pro-feesed Like other great men before him, the Chief of Deraiah strengthened his position by a matrimonial alliance, which united the interests of his own family with that of the reformer He matried the daughter of Muhammad ibn 'Abdu'l-Wahhāb, and she became the mother of the celebrated Wahhabi ehief 'Abdu ?-'Aziz, who upon the death of his fatuer (A.D 1765), led the Wahhabi army to victory, and sacceeded in pushing his conquests to the remotest corners of Arabis

'Abdu l-'Azız was not only a brave warmor, rut a pious Muslim, and t is said that he fell a victum to the scrapulous regularity with which he performed his devotions in public A Persian fanatic plunged his sharp Khurasan dagger into his side, just as he was prostrating himself in praver in the

mosque of Deraiah (A D 1803)

But the great military champion of the reformed doctrines was Sa'ud, the eldest son of 'Abdu | Aziz, who during the lifetime of his father led the Wahhabi armies to victory, and threatened even the conquest of the whole Turkish empire He is said to have been a remarkably handsome man, praised for his wisdom in counsel and skill in war Having wielded the sword from his youth (for he fought his first battle when a lad of swelve), he was regarded by the wild Arabs of the desert as a fit instrument to effect the conversion of the world, and men from all parts of Arabia flocked round his standard

Sa'ud gamed several domaive victories over Sulaman Pasha, and afterwards, with an army of 20,000 men marchod against Kar-bala, the famed city of the East which con tains the tombs of the Shi'sh Khalifahs The city was entered with the Wahhabi cry. "Kill and strangle all infidels which give companions to God," and every vestige of supposed idolatry, from the bright golden dome of al Husains tomb to the smallest tobacco pipe, was ground to the cery dust whilst the offerings of the numerous devotees, which formed the rich treasure of the sacred shrines, served to replenish the impoverished exchequer of the Wahhabi chief

The following year the fanatical army effected the conquest of Makkah, and, on the 27th April 1803, Sa'ud made his formal entry into the sacred city of the Kabah The sanctity of the place subdued the barbarous spirit of the conquerors and not the slightest excesses were committed against the people The stern principles of the reformed doc trues were, however, strictly enforced Piles of green huqqas and Persian pipes were collected, resames and amulets were forcibly taken from the devotees, silk and satin dresses were demanded from the wealthy and worldly, and the whole, collected into the one heterogeneous mass was burnt by the infuriated reformers So strong was the feeling against the pipes, and so necessary did a public example seem to be, that a respectable lady, whose delinquency had well nigh escaped the vigilant eye of the Muhtasib, was seazed and placed on an ass, with a green pupe suspended from her neck, and paraded through the public streets—a terrible warning to all of her sex who may be inclined to indulge in forbidden luxuries When the usual hours of prayer arrived, the myrmidons of the law sallied forth, and with leathern whips drove all slothful Muslims to their devotions The mosques were filled. Never since the days of the Prophet had the sacred city witnessed so much picty and devotion Net one pipe, not a single tobacco-stopper, was to be seen in the streets or found in the houses, and the whole population of Makkah prostrated themselves at least five times a day in solemn adoration. Having carried out his mission with fidelity, Sa'ud hastened to convey the news of his success to the Sultan of Tarkey in the following characteristic letter

"Sa'ud to Salim -- I entered Makkah on the fourth day of Muharram in the 1218th vear of the Hijiah I kept peace towards the inhabitants, I destroyed all things that were idelatiously worshipped labelished all taxes except those required by the law. I confirmed the Qazī whom you had appointed agreeably to the commands of the Prophet of God I desire that you will give orders to the rulers of Damascus and Cairo not to come up to the sacred city with the Viahmal and with trumpets and drums. Religion is not profited by these things May the poace and blessing of God be with you." MAHMAI ]

was added to the Wahhati conquests, and so thoroughly did Sa'ud carry out the work of reform, that even the Hujrah, containing the tomb of the Prophet, did not escape. Its richly ornamented dome was destroyed, and the curtain which covered the Prophet's grave would have been removed, had not the Leader of the Faithful been warned in his dreams not to commit so monstrous a sacri-

lege [HUJRAH.]
For nine years did the Wahhabi rule exist at Makkah, and so strong was the position occupied by the Wahhabi army, and so rapidly did Wahhabi opinions spread amongst the people, that the Sultan of Turkey began to entertain the worst fears for the safety of his empire 'Ali Pasha was therefore ordered by the Sultan of Turkey to collect a strong army to suppress the Wahhabi movement, and eventually, Makkah and al-Madinah were taken from the faustics Upon the death of Sa'nd (A D 1814), his son, 'Abdu 'lish, became the Leader of the Faithful He was even more distinguished than his father for personal bravery, but he lacked that knowledge of men which was so necessary for one called upon to lead the undisciplined nomadic tribes of the Alabian deserts 'Abdu 'llah and him army met with a series of reverses, and he was at last taken prisoner by Ibrahim Pashah and sent to Constantiuople. He was executed in the public square of 5t Sophia, December 19th, 1818 Turkī, the son of 'Abdu Tlāh, abandoned all hope of regaining the position, and fled to Riyaz, where he was afterwards assassinated Fazzul succeeded his father AD 1880, and established the Wahhabi rule in Kastern Arabia, making Rives the capital of his kingdom It was this chief who entertained the traveller Palgrave in 1863, and received Lieutenant-Colonel (new Sir Lewis Pelly), as Her Majesty's representative, in 1865 Faizul died in 1866, soon after Six Lowis Pelly s visit, and was succeeded by his son 'Abdu 'Hāh

But although the great political and military power of the Wahhubis had been well nigh crushed, and the rule of the dynasty of Sa'ud circumscribed within the limits of the province of Najd, the principles laid down by Muhammad ibn 'Abdu 'l-Wahhāb were still zeslously maintained by certain religious teachers within the sacred mosque itself And so it came to pass that when a restless spirit from India was endeavouring to redeem a lawless life by performing the pilgrimage to Makkah, he fell in with teachers who had smbibed Walshabi doctrines and were secretly disseminating them amongst the pilgrims. Saiyid Ahmad, the freebooter and bandit of Rai Bareli, having performed the racted rites of the Pilgrimage, returned from Makkah (A.D 1822), resolved to reclaim the whole of North India to the Faith of Islim Bing a direct descendant from the Prophet, he possessed (unlike the Wahlishi of Najd) the necessary qualification for a Leader of the Faithful, and the Muslims of India at once hailed him as the true Khalifah or al Mahdi Unbeeded by the British Govern ment, he traversed our provinces with a numerous retinue of devoted disciplos, and converted the populare to his reformed doc trines by thousands He appointed deputies at Patna, and the proceeded to Della, where he met with a ready between in Muhammad Isma'll, who became his most devoted disciple, and recorded the sayings of the new Khalifah in the well known Wahhābi book, entitled the Siratu'l Mustayim

On the 21st December 1826, Saivid Ahmad. the Leader of the Faitnful, declared a religious war, or Ithad, against the Sikhs, and, hoping to unite the hosts of Islam in Central Asia under his banner, he commenced an insurrection on the Peshawai frontier. A fanatical war of varied successes followed, and lasted for four years but the Wainhabs array was soon reduced in strength, and its disisters culminated in the death of its chief, who was siam by Sher Smgh in an engagement at Balakot in Hazarah, May 1831 The remnant of the Salvids army fled across the horder and settled at Sait ma, where in 1857, their numbers were augmented by nutineers, who joined their camp They were even-tually displaced by the British Government in the Umbayla War of 1863, but there are still some three hundred of them residing at Palon on the banks of the Indus, where they are ruled by Shaikh 'Abdu 'liah, an old mutineer of 1857, who has recently married his daughter to a former Imam of the Peshawar, Sadar Bazar, in order to combine the Wahhabi influences of Peshawar with those of the Paloss settlement.

But as in the case of the Wahhabis of Najd, so with the Wahhabis of India. The religious tenets of the reformers did not die with their political leader What Sa'ud of Najd and Akmad of Bareli failed to accomplish with the sword, the cheapness of lithographic printing has enabled less daring leaders to accomplish with the pen The reformed doctrines, as embodied in the Stratu 'l-Mustagim and the Tagwiyate 'l-Inan, still exercise a powerful influence upon Muhammadan thought in India

Wahhabiism has sometimes been designated the Protestantism of Islam, and so it really is, although with this remarkable duterence, that whilst Christian Protestantism is the assertion of the paramount authority of sacred scripture to the rejection of traditional teachings, Wahhabiism is the assertion of the paramount authority of the Qur'an with the Traditions But both systems contend for first principles, and if there appears to be any incongruity in applying the term Protestant to a sect which receives, instead of rejects, tradition, it arises from the very important fact that what is called "tradition" in Islam occupies a totally different place in the Muhammaden system from that which it does in the Christian, Tradition in Islam being nothing less than the supposed inspired sayings of the Prophet, recorded and handed down by uninspired writers, and being absolutely neceswary to complete the structure of the faith The daily prayer, the customs of the pilgrimage, and numerous other duties and dogmas nela to be of Divine institution, being found net m the Qur'an but in the Ahadis, or Tradi-tions Hence it is that the Wahhabis of Najd and India call themselves Ahl-1-Hadis, or the people of Tradition, and promote in every way they can the study of those records TRADITION

The Walhabis speak of themselves as Muscalhid, or 'Unitarians," and call all others Mushrik, or those who associate another with God, and the following are some of their distinctive religious tenets

1 They do not receive the decisions of the four orthodox sects, but say that any man who can read and understand the Qur'an and the sacred Hadis can judge for himself in matters of doctrine. They, therefore, reject lima after the death of the Companions of the Prophet

2 That no one but God can know the secrets of men, and that prayers should not be offered to any prophet, wall, pir, or saint, but that God may be asked to grant a peti-tion for the sake of a saint

3 That at the Last Day, Muhammad will obtain permission (izn) of God to intercede for his people. The bunnis believe that permission has already been given.

4 That it is unlawful to illuminate the shrines of departed saints, or to prostrate hefore them, or to perambulate (tawaf) round them, they do not even perform any act of reverence at the Prophet's tomb at al-Madınah

5 That women should not be allowed to visit the graves of the dead, on account of their mmoderate weeping

6 That only four lestivals ought to be observed, namely, 'Idu 7-Fifr, 'Idu 7-Ashā, 'Āshūrā, and al-Lailatu 7-Mubārakah

7 They do not observe the ceremonies of Maulid, which are celebrated on the anniversary of Muhammad's birth.

S finey do not present offerings (Nazı) at any shrine

3. They count the ninety-nine names of God on their fingers and not on a resary

10 They understand the terms "sitting of God" (Arabic Istiwa), and "hand of God" (Yadu 'llēh), which occur in the Qur'an, in their literal (Haqīqi) sense, and not figuratively (Majāzī), but, at the same time, they sav it is not revealed how God sits, or in what sense he has a hand, &c, and on this account the Christian doctrines of the Trinity and the Sonship of Christ do not present the same difficulties to the mind of a Wahhābī which they do to that of a Sunni

Mr Wilfrid Blunt, in his Future of Islam,

SAVS -

"I believe it is hardly now recognised by Mohammedans how near Abd el Wahhab was to complete success Before the close of the eighteenth century, the chiefs of the Ibn Saouds, champions of Unitarian Islam, had established their authority over all Northern Arabia as far as the Euphrates and in 1808 they took Mecca and Medina In the mean while, the Wahhabite doctrines were gaining ground still further afield. India was at one time very near conversion, and in Egypt, and North Africa, and even in Turkey, many secretly subscribed to the new doctrines Two things, however, maired the plan of general reform and prevented its full accomplishment In the first place, the retorm was too completely reactive. It took no account whatever of the progress of modern thought, and directly it attempted to leave Arabia it found itself face to face with difficulties which only political as well as religious success could overcome It was impossible, except by force of arms, to Arabianise the world again, and nothing less than this was in contemplation. Its second mistake, and that was one that a little of the Prophet's prudence which always went hand in hand with his zeal might have avoided was a too rigid in sistance upon trities Abd el Wahhab condemned minarets and tombstones because neither were in use during the first years of Islam The minarets, therefore, were everywhere thrown down, and when the holy places of Hejaz fell into the hands of his followers, the tombs of saints which had for centuries been revered as objects of pilgrimage were levelled to the ground. Even the Prophet's tomb at Medina was laid waste and the treasures it contained distributed among the soldiers of Ibn Saoud roused the indignation of all Islam, and turned the tide of the Wahhabite fortunes Respectable feeling which had bitherto been on their side now declared itself against them, and they never after regained their position as moral and social reformers Politically, too. it was the cause of their inin The cutside

Mussiman world, looking upon them as sacrilegious barbarians, was airaid to visit Mecca, and the pilgrimage declined so rapidly that the Hejasi became alarmed. The source of their revenue they found out off, and it seemed on the point of ceasing altogether. Then they appealed to Constantinople, urging the Sultan to vindicate his claim to be protector of the holy places. What followed is well known. After the peace of Paris, Sultan Mahmud commissioned Mehemet Alt to deliver Mecca and Medina from the Wahhabite heretics and this he in time effected. The war was carried into Nejd, Deriyeh, their capital, was sacked, and Ibn Saoud himself taken prisoner and decapitated in front of St Sophia at Constantinople. The movement of reform in Islam was thus put back for, perhaps, another hundred years.

"Still, the seed cast by Abd el Wahhabhas not been entirely without fruit Wahhabism, as a political regeneration of the world, has failed, but the spirit of reform has remained. Indeed, the present unquiet attitude of expectation in Islam has been its indirect result. Just as the Lutheran reformation in Europe, though it failed to convert the Christian Church, caused its real reform, so Wahhabbism has produced a real desire for reform if not yet reform itself in Mussulmans Islam is no longor seleep, and were another and a wiser Abd el Wahhab to appear, not as a heretic, but in the body of the orthodox sect, he might play the part of Loyols or

Borromeo with success

"The present condition of the Wahhabites as a sect is one of decline. In India, and I believe in other parts of Southern Asia, their missionaries still make converts and their preachers are held in high coteen. But at home in Alabia, ther real has waxed cold, giving place to liberal ideas which in truth are far more congenial to the Arabian mind The Ibn Saoud dynasty no longer holds the first position in Nejd, and Ibn Rashid who has taken their place, though nominally a Wahhabite, has little of the Wahhabite fanaticism He is in fact a popular and national rather than a religious leader, and though still designated at Constantinople as a pestilent heretic is counted as their ally by the more liberal Sunites It is probable that he would not withhold his allegiance from a Caliph of the legitimate house of Koreysh."

WALKING DEPORTMENT ]

(رتف) WAQF "Standing, Lst stopping, halting", (1) A term which in the language of the law signifies the appropriation er dedication of property to charitable uses and the service of God. An endowment The object of such an endowment or appropriation must be of a perpetual nature, and such property or land cannot be sold or transferred if a person build a mosque his right of property is extinguished as soon as prayers have been recited in the building

According to the Imam Abu Yusuf, if the place in which a mosque is situated should become deserted or uninhabited, masmuch as there is no further use for the mosque, no person coming to worship therein, still the r operty does not revert to the original owner and founder But Imam Muhammad alleges that in such a case the land and the material (bricks, &c ) again become the property of the founder or his heir

If a person construct a reservoir or well for public use, or a caravansera, for travellers, or a hostel on an infidel frontier for the accommodation of Muslim warriors, or dedicate ground as a burying-place, his right is not extinguished until the magistrate, at his request, issues a decree to that effect. This is the opinion of Imam Abu Hanifah, but Imam Abû Yûsuf maintains that the person's right of property ceases on the metant of his saying "I have made over this for such and such purposes" Whilst Imam Muhammad asserts that as soon as the property is used for the purpose to which it is dedicated, it ceases to be the property of the original owner (See Hamilton's Hedayah, vol 11 p 384)

WASWASAH (L., ) Let "Inspiring," or "suggesting" A suggestion from the devil. The machinations of the devil, to the consideration of which a chapter is devoted in the Traditions. (Mishkat, book is chill)

Muhammad said, "There is not a single child of man except Mary and her son, who is not touched by the devil at the time of his birth, and hence the child makes a loud cry when he is born, nor is there one human being who has not a devil appointed to attend him. The devil sticks close to the sons of Adam, and also an angel, the business of the devil is to do evil, and that of the angel to guide them unto trath"

WATER Arabic mai' (a), pl miyah, amwah Heb my mayim, waters In the Qur'an, Sürah xxi 31, it is said, "We clave them (the heavens and the earth) asunder, and by means of water, We gave life to everything" Which, as Sprenger (vol 1 p. 30n) remarks, is one of the principles of the Ebionite doctrine Al-Bairawi says it means either that God made all animals from water, or that the chief element in animal life is water, or that animal life is supported chiefly by water

Muhammadan writers say there are seven kirds of water which are lawful for the purposes of purification and dinking—

Ma's 'l-matar, rain-water Mā's 'l-'ain, apring-water Mā's 'l-bī'r, well-water Mā's 'l-barad hail-water Mā's 'a sal' snow-water Mā's 'l-bahr sea-water Mā's 'n-nahr, river water

Water which is considered lawful for ablution is also lawful for drinking, and vice versa. Ibn 'Umar relates that Muhammad was asked about the water of the plains in which animals go to drink, &c, and he said.' When the water is equal to two quilahs, it is not impure "'Abdu 'l-Haqq says two quilahs are equal to 250 mans. (Mishkat, Matthew's ed., vol. : p 107) [WELLS.]

Mr Sell, in his Kath of Islam, says —

Mr Sell, in his Faith of Islam, says—
"Minute regulations are laid down with regard to the water which may be used for purification. The following kinds of water are lawful—rain, sea, river, fountain, well, snow, and ice-water—lee is not lawful—The first kind is authorised by the Qurán. 'He sent you down water from heaven that He might thereby cleanse you, and cause the pollution of Satan to pass from you—(Sura viii 11) The use of the others is sanctioned by the Traditions—I give one illustration—A min one day came to the Prophet and said—I am going on a voyage and shall only have a small supply of fresh water, if I use it for ablutions I shall have none wherewith to quench my thirst, may I use ses-water?'

The Prophet replied 'The water of the sea is pure Tirmizi states that this is a Hadis-Great difference of opinion exists i-Sahih with regard to what constitutes impurity in water, and so renders it unfit for ablutions It would be wearsome to the reader to enter into all details but I may briefly say that, amongst the orthodox, it is generally held that if a dead body or any unclean thing falls into flowing water, or into a reservoir more than 15 feet square, it can be used, provided always that the colour, smell, and taste are not It is for this reason that the pool changed near a mosque is never less than ten cubits square If of that size, it is called a dak dar dah (literally 10×10) It may be, and commonly is, larger than this It should be about one foot deep

Rights regarding water According to Muhammadan law, water is of four kinds —

(1) The water of the ocean, to which every person has a perfect and equal right, for the enjoyment of the ocean is common to everyone, in the same manner as the light of the sun or the air we breathe

(2) The waters of large rivers such as the Euphrates, the Tigris, the Indus, or the Oxus, from which every person has an absolute right to drink, and also a conditional right to use it for the purpose of irrigating his lands. For example, if a person desire to cultivate waste land, and dig a watercourse or canal for the purpose of conveying water to it from the liver, he may lawfully do so, provided the act be in no sense detrimental to the people. The same law applies to the crection of a water-mill on the banks of a river.

(3) Water in which several have a share; in which case also the right of drinking is common to all, whilst there are certain restrictions regarding its use for the purposes of irrigation, which will be hereafter treated of

(4) Water which is kept in vessels, which is regarded as property, except in times of scereity, when it is even lawful to selze it for common use

The law regarding the division of water for the purposes of irrigation, known as shirth (خرب), or 'a right to water," is most important in the East, where so much of the cultivation of land depends not upon the fall of rain but upon irrigation. In Afghamstan, there are more disputes and more murders committed over the division of water than with regard to any other question. claim of shirb, or "right of water," is valid, independent of any property in the ground, for a person may become endowed with it, exclusive of the ground, either by inheritance or bequest, and it sometimes happens that whom a person sells his lands, he reserves to himself the right of shirb. No person can alter or obstruct the course of water running through his ground, and in the case of disputes regarding a rivulet held jointly by several, it is the duty of the judge to make a distribution of the water according to the extent of land which they severally possess, for, as the object of right to water is to moisten the lands, it is but fit that each should receive a just proportion A rivulet ment not be dammed up for the convenience of one partner without the consent of the others, nor can he dig a trench or erect a a mill upon a rivulet used for ingation, withont the general consent of all persons con-cerned The same restriction applies, also, to a water-engine of a bridge One partner cannot alter the mode of partition without the others' consent, nor increase the number of sluices or openings through which he recerves his share, nor convey his share into lands not entitled to receive it, nor even to lands which are entitled to receive it, nor can he shut up any of the sluices or exchange the manner of division in any way, as for example, by taking the water in rotation instead of division by sluices. A right to water cannot be consigned as a dower, nor given as a consideration in Khuli, when a wife bargains for her divorce [KEUL'], nor in composition for a claim, nor sold to discharge the debts of a defunct owner. It is also noted that if a person, by irrigating his lands, should by that means overflow those of his neighbour, he is not liable to make compensation, as he was not guilty of any transgression

WA'Z (12) A sermon [KHUT-BAH, WAI'Z]

WAZIFAH (dash), from wazf, "a daily ration of food" (1) A term used for a daily lesson, or portion from the Qurān which is read by devout Muslims. The Qurān is divided into thirty upārahs as the daily wazifuh to be read during the month of Ramazān.

(2) A pension or stipend granted to pious persons

(8) Revenue collected at a stipulated rate

WAZIR (153) A Vezeer The principal minister in a Muhammadan country. There are three opinions respecting the etymology of the word. Some derive it from weze "a burden," because the wazer bears the burden of state, others from wazer, "a refuge," because the ruler has recourse to the counsels of the wazer, others from azer, "the back, or strength," because the ruler is strengthened by his wazer as the human frame is by the back.

Mr Lane (Arabian Nights, Intro, p 28), says "The post of wezeer was the highest that was held by an officer of the pen, and the person who occupied it was properly the next to the Sultan, but the Turkish Sultans of Egypt made the office of nāth, or "viceroy," to have the pro-eminence Under them, the post of wezeer was sometimes occupied by an officer of the pen, and sometimes by an officer of the sword, and in both cases the wezeer was called 'the Saheb'"

Khalil az-Zāhir relates that Muhammad said, "Whoseever is in authority over Muslims, if God prosper him, shall be given a virtuous waxir. The wasir shall remind him when he forgetteth his duty, and shall assist him when he doth remember it. But to a bad ruler God giveth an evil-minded wazir, who, when the ruler forgetteth his duty, does not remind him of it, and when he remembereth his duty, doth not assist him to perform it."

WEDDING [MARRIAGE]

WEEK. Arabic usbü' (Eyel), subü' (Eyel), Heb yılı shāvūa'. The Muhammadan week (as the Jewish and Christian) begins with Sunday and ends with Saturday In the Qur'an, Sūrah vii 52, it is said "God created the heavens and the earth in six days" In Sūrah xvi 125, it is said, "the Sabbath was only made for those who dispute thereon," which *l-Baigāwī says means that the Sabbath was established for the Jews who disputed with Moses regarding it, but there is ne injunction in the Qur'an for the due observance of the Sabbath [DAY, FRIDAY]

WEEPING [BUKA']

WELLS Arabic bi'r (32), pl abār Heb Be'ēr If a person dig a well for public use, it is held by Imām Muhammad that his right to the well ceases as soon as the people drink of the well, but Imām Abu Ḥanīfah is of opinion that it does not become common property until the magistrates issue a decree to that effect (Hidāyah, vol in p 357)

If a person dig a well in a high read (where no person is entitled to dig a well) he is liable to a fine for any accident which may happen by people falling into it. (Hidāyah, voj n p 719)

If any animal, or impurity of any kind, fall into a well, all the water must be drawn out before the well can be lawfully used and if it be impossible to draw the whole of the water, then not less than 800 bucketfuls must be drawn out. If the animal has in any way become putrified in the well, then the water must not be used for three whole days, but in any other case the water can be used after the lapse of a whole day. (Shurku'l-Wiqā-yuh, p. 10)

WHISTLING Arabic mukā' (also) Mentioned in the Qur'ān, Sūrab viii 35 "Their (the Quraish) prayer at the House was naught but whistling and clapping hands! Taste, then, the torment, for that ye misbelieve." From which it is understood that whistling was one of the idelatrous colemonies in the days of ignorance in the Makkau temple. Whistling is therefore generally held to be unlawful for pious Muslims

Heb almanah Mourning is incumbent upon a widow for a period of four months and ten days after the death of her husband (Hamilton's Hidayon.

vol. i p. 870) After this period she may lawfully take another husband, provided she be not pregnant of her first husband A widow's share of her late husband's property is one-sighth when there is a child, or a son's child, how low soever, and a fourth when there is no child Though a man may have as many as four wives, the provision for two or more is the same as that for one the fourth or eighth, as the case may, being divisible among them equally (Baillie's Law of Inheritance, p 59)

If a Muslim, whose wife was once a Christian should die, and his widow appear before a Qazi and declare that she is Muslim, and that she embraced the faith prior to the death of her husband, and the heirs assert the contrary, the assertion of the heirs is to be credited to the exclusion of the rights of the widow And if a Christian die, and his widow appear before the Qisi as a Muslim, and the heirs declare the contrary, the assertion of the heirs is to be credited to the exclusion of (Grady's Hidayah, p 847) the widow

Arabic wasiyah (وصية), pi wasaya, which term is held by Muslim legists to mean "an endowment with the property of anything after death, as if onc person should say to another, Give this article of mine, after my death, to a particular person'"

The testator is called musi, fem. mūsīyah The legatee is termed musa la-hu The legacy, musa bi-hi The person appointed to carry out the will, or the executor, is called the wasiy, pl ansiya.

It is not necessary that the will of a Mushm should be executed in writing, but it must be certified to by two male witnesses, or one male and two females

The following are some of the chief points in Muslim law, regarding the making and the execution of wills

Wills are lawful and valid to the extent of a third of the testator's property, but not to any further extent unless un consent of the heirs, and it is laudable to avoid making bequests when the heirs are poor

A bequest to an heir is not valid unless confirmed by the other heirs, and a bequest to a person from whom the testator has received a mortal wound is not valid, and if a legatee slay his testator, the bequest in his favour is void.

A bequest to a part of the hears is not valid Bequests are valid between Muslims and Zimmis, that 18, between Muhammadans and Jews or Christians under protection [ZIMML]

The acceptance or rejection of bequests is not determined until after the death of the

The legatee becomes proprietor of the legacy by his acceptance of it, which may be either expressed or implied

A bequest by an insolvent person is void, as also that of an infant, or a mukātab (a slave who has ransomed himself). A bequest favour of a factus in the womb is also invalid, but ash-Shati'i saya it is valid

A female slave may be bequeathed, with the exception of her progeny To beques the offspring of a female slave is unlawful To bequeath

A bequest is rescanded by the express declaration of the testator, or by any act on his part implying his retractation, or which extinguiahes his property in the legacy But the testator's denying his bequest is not a retractation of it, nor his declaring it unlawful or usurious, nor his desiring the execution of it to be deferred. A bequest to one person is annulled by a subsequent bequest of the same article to another, unless that other be not then ahve

A legacy after being divided off by the magistrate, descends to the legatee's heirs in case of his decease

Concerning the Bequest of a Third of the Estates

If a person leave a third of his property to one man and a third to another, and the heirs refuse their consent to the execution of the whole, it is then restricted to one third

If a person bequeath the third of his estate to one, and then a sixth of it to another, and the heirs refuse their consent, in that case one-third of his estate is divided into three shares, of which two are given to the legatee of the thid and one to the legates of the sixth.

A bequest of a son's portion of inheritance is void, but not the bequest of an equivalent to it. For example, if a person say, "I bequeath my son's portion," such a bequest is null, but the bequest will be valid if he say, "I bequeath an equivalent to my son's portion."

A bequest of a "portion" of the estate is executed to the extent of the smallest portion inherited from it, and a haquest of "part of the estate," undefined, may be construed to apply to any part

A person bequeathing a third of any particular property, if two-thirds of it be lost. and the remainder come within a third of the testators estate, the legatee is entitled to the whole of such remainder, and a bequest of "the third of " an article, part of which is afterwards destroyed, holds with respect to a third of the remainder

A legacy of money must be paid in full with the property in hand, although all the rest of the estate should be expanded in debts

A legacy left to two persons, one of them being at that time dead, goes entire to the living legates

A legacy being bequeathed to two persons indefinitely, if one of them die, a moiety of it only goes to the other

A bequest made by a poor man is of force

if he afterwards become rich

A bequest of any article, not existing in the possession or disposal of the testator at his decease, is null, unless it was referred to his property, in which case it must be discharged by a payment of the value

An acknowledgment of debt, upon a deathbed, is efficient to the extent of a third of the estate.

Any accident occasioning uncertainty with respect to the legates, annuls the bequest.

An hear, after partition of the estate, acknowledging a bequest in favour of another, must pay the acknowledged legates his proportion of such bequest

The Persod of Making Wills

As has already been remarked Muhammadan wills are not as a rule written documents, and therefore the institutions of the law are entirely made for verbal rather than written bequests

Gratuitous acts, of immediate operation, if executed upon a death-bed, take offect to the extent of one-third of the property only

An acknowledgment on a death-bed is valid in favour of the person who afterwards becomes an heir, but not a bequest or gift neither is an acknowledgment so made valid, if the principle of inheritance had existed in the person provious to the deed

Such acknowledgment gift, or bequest, in 'avour of a son, being a slave, who afterwards becomes free, previous to the father's decease, is nevertheless void.

Rules for Ascertaining a Death bed Ilhiess

The following curious paragraph occurs in the Hidayah on this subject -

"Paralytic, gonty, or consumptive persons, where their disorder has continued for a length of time, and who are in no immediate danger of death, do not fall under the description of marie or 'sick,' whence deeds of gift, executed by such, take effect to the exlong time has elapsed, the patient has become familiarised to his disease, which is not The length of then accounted as sickness time requisite by its lapse, to do away with the idea of sickness in those cases, is determined at one year, and if, after that time, the invalid should become bed 11dden, he is then accounted as one recently sick If, therefore, any of the sick persons thus described make a gift in the beginning of their illness, or after they are bedridden, such gift takes effect from the third of their property, because at such time there is apprehension of death (whence medicine is given to them) and therefore the disorder is then coundered as a death-bed iliness ' (Hidhyah Grady's ed , p 685)

Emancipation of Slaves upon a Death-bed

Emancipation and deeds of gift on a deathbed, take effect to the extent of a third of the property, and emancipation precedes in their execution the actual bequests

The appropriation of a sum by bequest to the emancipation of a slave is annulled by the subsequent loss or failure of any part of it, but not the appropriation of a sum to the performance of a pilgrimage.

performance of a pilgrimage
A slave, exceeding one-third of the property emancipated on death-bed, is exempted from emancipatory labour by the heirs as senting to his freedom.

A bequest of emancipation in favour of a slave is annulled by his being made over in compensation for an offence committed by him

Where the heir and the legatec agree concerning a slave having been emancipated by the testator, the allegation of the heir is credited with respect to the date of the deed.

Bequests for Pious Purposes

In the execution of bequests to certain pious purposes, the duties ordained by the command of God precede those which are voluntary, and are then benevolent acts towards mankind.

If a person will that 'the pilgrimage which was incumbent upon him be performed on his behalf after his death," the heirs must depute a person for this purpose and pay all his expenses to Makkah.

But when all the purposes mentioned be of equal importance, the arrangement of the testator must be followed

A legacy, appropriated to pilgrunage, if lost, must be repaired to the extent of a third of the estate

Wills made by Jews and Christians

Zimmis, or Jews and Christians paying tribute for protection, can make bepresent and they are held good in Muslim law and are subject to the same restrictions with those of Muslims

A church or synagogue founded during health descends to the founder's heirs, but the bequest of a house to the purpose of an infidel place of worship, is appropriated, whether any particular legatees be mentioned or other wise

Abu Hamfah says the bequests of Zimmis are of four kinds .--

(1) Those made for purposes held sacred in their belief, but not in that of Muslims, such as the building of a church or synagogue, which according to Hanifab is valid under certain restrictions

(2) Those made for purposes held pious by Muslims and not by Zimmis, such as the building of a mosque, in which case the bequest is invalid

(3) Those made for a purpose held sacred by both Muslims and Zimmis, such as an offering to the Temple at Jerusalem, which are valid.

(4) Those made for purposes held to be wrong by both Zimmis and Muslims, such as the support of singers and dissolute women, which are invalid as being sinful

The will of a sensualist or innovator is the same as of an orthodox Mussulman, unless he proceed to avowed apostasy. The will of a female apostate is valid, but not that of a male apostate

A Zimmi may bequest the whole of his property but if he bequest a part only, the residue is crausing ted to his heirs.

Au emancipation granted by him on his death-bed, takes effect in toto.

Any bequest in favour of a Zimmi us valid, and he may make a bequest in favour of an unbeliever of a different sect not being a hostile infidel

Usufructuary Wells

An article bequeathed in usufruct must be consigned to the legatee, but if it constitute the sole estate being a slave, he is possessed by the heirs and legatee alternately, or, being a house, it is held among them in their due proportions, nor are the heirs in the latter instance allowed to sell their slaves. The bequest becomes void on the death of the legatee

A bequest of the produce of an article does not entitle the legatee to the personal use of the article, nor does a bequest of the use entitle him to let it to hire. A bequest of the use of a slave does not entitle the legatee to carry him out of the place, unless his family reside elsewhere. A bequest of a year's product, if the article exceed a third of the estate, does not entitle the legatee to a consignment of it.

In a bequest of the use of an article to one, and the substance of it to another, the legatee of usufruct is exclusively entitled to the use during his term. A bequest of an article to one, and its contents to another, if connectedly expressed, entitles the second legatee to nothing.

A bequest of the fruit of a garden implies the present fruit only, unless it be expressed in perpetuity, and a bequest of the produce of an animal implies the existent produce only in every instance

The Executors

An executor having accepted his appointment in presence of the testator, is not afterwards at liberty to reject it, but his silence leaves him an option of rejection, but any act indicative of his acceptance binds him to the execution of the office.

Having rejected the appointment after the testator's decease, he may still accept of it, unless the magistrate appoint an executor in the interim.

Where a slave a reprobate, or an infidel are appointed, the magistrate must nominate a proper substitute

The appointment of the testator's slave is invalid if any of the heirs have attained to maturity, but not otherwise.

In case of the executor's meapacity, the magnetrate must give him an assistant, but he must not do so on the executor plending incapacity without due examination, and if he appear perfectly equal to the office, he cannot be removed, not oven on the complaint of the heirs, unless his culpability be ascertained.

One of two joint executors cannot act without the concurrence of the other, except in such matters as require immediate execution, or which are of an incumbent nature, or in which the interest or advantage of the estate are concerned.

In case of the death of a joint executor, the magnetrate must appoint a substitute, unless the deceased have himself nominated his successor. The executor of an executor is his substitute in office.

An executor is entitled to possess himself of the portions of infant and absent adult heirs on their behalf, but not of the legacies of infant or absent legatees

An executor may sell a slave of the estate, for the discharge of the debts upon it, in absence of the creditors, unless the slave be involved in debt.

An executor having sold and received the price of an article which afterwards proves to be the property of another, is accountable to the purchaser for the price he had acreceived, but if this has been lost he may reimburse himself from the person to whom the article had fallen by inheritance

An executor may accept a transfer for a debt due to his infant ward, or sell or purchase movables on his account. He may also sell movables on account of an absent adult heir, but he cannot trade with his ward's portion. He may sell movable property or account of the infant or absent adult brother of the testator

The power of a father's executor precedes that of the grandfather if there be no executor, the grandfather is the father's representative

Evidence with respect to Wills.

The evidence of two executors to the appointment of a third is not valid, unless he claim or admit it, and the evidence of orphans to the appointment of an executor is not admitted if he deny it

The testimony of executors with respect to property on behalf of an infant or of an absent adult is not admitted.

The mutual evidence of parties on behalf of each other to debts due to each from an estate is valid, but not their evidence to legacies, unless each legacy respectively consists of a slave.

A mutual evidence of this nature is void where it involves a right of participation in the witnesses

WINDS. Arabic riyāh (th), pl of rik Heb [77] risākh. There are four special winds mentioned in the Qur'ān Sarşar, a violent hurricane (Sūrah kix. 6), 'aqun, a barren wind (Sūrah ki 42), 'awāgāk, fertilizing winds (Sūrah xv 22); mubask shrāt, harbingers of ram (Sūrah xxx. 47) And it is related that the Prophet said he was assisted by an east wind at the battle of the Ditch, and that the tribe of 'Ad was destroyed by a west wind A special chapter is devoted to the Prophet sayings with regard to the wind, as it appears that he had a supermitten of it Ari shah and, that when the clouds appeared, the Prophet used to change colour, and come out of his house and walk to and fro, nor would his alarm cease until the storm had passed away. When she expressed her surprise at his excitement, he said, "O 'Ayıshah, peradventure these winds be like those which destroyed the tribe of 'Ad"

WINE Heb The khemer, Is 1 22, "old wine" Wine under the term khamr () which is generally held to imply all things which intoxicate, is forbidden in the Qur'an in the following verses—

Sürah ii. 216 "They will ask thee concerning wine and games of chance Say In both is great sin, and advantage also, to men, but their sin is greater than their advantage"

Sürah v 92 "O believers! surely wine and games of chance, and statues, and the divising arrows, are an abomination of Satan's work! Avoid them, that ye may prosper Only would Satan sow hatred and strife among you, by wine, and games of chance, and turn you ande from the remembrance of God, and from prayer will ye not, therefore, abstain from them? Obev God and obey the Apostle, and he on your guard but if ye turn back, know that our Apostle is only bound to deliver a plain announcement"

Al-Jalalan, the commentators, on these verses, say, 'Only that wine is forbidden which intoxicates the brain and affects the steadness of the body" But all Muslim loctors hold that wine of any kind is forbidden

Imam Abu Hanifah savs "This doctrine is founded upon a precept of the Prophet, who said, 'Whoever drinks wine, let him suffer correction by scourging as often as he drinks thereof" (Hamilton's Hidayah, vol 11 53)

If a Musalman drinks wine, and is seized whilst his breath yet smells of wine, or be brought before the Qazi whilst he is yet intexticated, and two witnesses give evidence hat he has drunk wine, scourging is to be inflicted. The punishment is eighty lashes for a free man and forty lashes for a slave.

Mr Lane says "Several stories have been iold as to the occasion of Muhammad's prohibiting the drinking of wine. Busbequins says 'Muhammad, making a journey to a triend at noon, entered into his house, where there was a marriage feast, and, sitting down with the guests, he observed them to be very nerry and jovial, kissing and embracing one mother, which was attributed to the cheerulness of their spirits raised by the wine, so hat he blessed it as a sacred thing in being hus an matrument of much love among men But, returning to the same house the next lay, he beheld another face of things, as goreplood on the ground a hand out off, an arm, oot, and other hmbs dismembered, which he was told was the effect of the brawls and ightings occasioned by the wine, which made them mad, and inflamed them into a furv, hus to destroy one another Whereon he changed his mind, and turned his former blessing into a curse, and forbade wine ever after to all his disciples' Epist. 8. This prohibition of wine hindered many of the Prophet's contemporaries from embracing his religion Yet several of the most respectable of the pagan Arabs like certain of the Jews and early Christians, abstained totally from wine, from a feeling of its injurious effects upon moral, and, in their elimate, upon health, or, more especially, from the fear of being led by it into the commission of foolish and degrading actions Thus Keys (Qais), the son of Asım, being one night overcome with wine, attempted to grasp the moon, and swore that he would not quit the spot where he stood until he had laid hold of it After leaping several times with the view of doing so, he fell flat upon his face, and when he recovered his senses, and was acquainted with the cause of his face being bruised, he made a solemn vow to abstain from wine ever after"—Lane's Arabian Nights, vol i pp 217, 218

WITNESS Arabic shakid ( dash), dual shahidan, pl zhuhada, or shuhud.

Terms which are used for witness in legal cases, an account of which is given in the article on EVIDENCE, and also for those who die as martyrs for the Muslim faith, or meet with sudden death from any accidental circumstance [MARTYR.]

WITR (59) Lit "An odd number" Weter rak'ahs are an odd number of rak'ahs, 3, 5, or 7, which may be said after the last prayer at night, and before the dawn of day Usually they are added to the Salatu "l-'Ishā. Imām Abū Hamiah says they are wājib, that is, ordered by God, although they are not authorised by any teat in the Qur'an. But they are instituted by traditions, each of which is generally received as a Hadia Sabih, and so weter rak'ahs are regarded as being of divine authority Imām Shāfa'ī, however, considers them to be san nah only

The Traditions referred to are -

The Prophet said "God has added to your prayers one prayer more know that it is wife, say it between the Şalátu I-Isha and the dawn"

On the authority of Buzār, it is recorded that the Prophet said "Witr is wānb upon Mushims," and in order to anforce the practice he added "Witr is right, he who does not observe it is not my follower"

The Prophet, the Companions, the Tābi'an and the Taba'u 't-Tābi'in, all observed it

The word witr literally means "odd number," and a tradition says "God is odd, He loves the odd"

Musalmans pay the greatest respect to an odd number. It is considered unlucky to begin any work, or to commence a journey on a day, the date of which is an even number.

The number of lines in a page of a book is nearly always an odd number (SALATU L-WITE)

WIVES Arabic sawy (53), plasway, also zawat. pl sawat. Although Muhammad himself claimed the special indulgence of eleven lawful wives, he limited his followers to four, allowing at the same time as many female concubines or demestic elaves as the master's right hand possessed See Qur'an, Sürah iv 8 "Marry what seems good to you of women, by twos, or threes, or fours, or what your right hand possesses" [MARRIAGE]

According to the Shī'ahs, he also sanctioned temporary marriages, an account of which will be found in the article on mur'ah.

Regarding the treatment of wives, the following verse in the Qur'an (Surah iv 38) allows the husband absolute power to correct them "Chide those whose refractoriness you have cause to fear Remove them into sleeping chambers apart, and beat them But if they are obedient to you, then seek not occasion against them"

(For other injunctions in the Qur'an on the subject, see the article WOMEA)

The following is Muhammad's teaching as given in the Traditions (see Mishlat, Arabic edition, Bābu 'n-Nikāh') —

"That is the most perfect Muslim whose disposition is the bost, and the best of you is he who behaves best to his wives"

"When a man has two wives and does not treat them equally, he will come on the Day of Resurrection with half his body fallen off"

"When a man calls his wife, she must come, although she he at an oven"

"The Prophet used to divide his time equally amongst his wives, and he would say, 'O God I divide impartially that which thou hast put in my power'"

"Admonish your wives with kindness, because women were created from a crooked hone of the side, therefore, if you wish to straighten it, you will break it, and if you let it slone, it will always be crooked

"Not one of you must whip his wife like whipping a slave '

• A Muslim must not hate his wife, for if he be displeased with one bad quality in her, then let him be pleased with another that in good "

"A Muslim cannot obtain anything efter than an amiable and beautiful wife, such a wife who, when ordered by her husband to do a thing, will obey, and if her husband looks at her will be happy, and if her husband awears by her, she will make him a swears of truth, and if he be absent from her, she will honour him with her own person and property"

It is related that on one occasion the Prophet said "Beat not your wives" Then I mar came to the Prophet and said, "Our wives have got the upper hand of their nusbands from hearing this" Then the Prophet permitted beating of wives Then an immense number of women collected round the Prophet's family, and complained of their husbands beating them. And the Prophet said, "Verily a great number of women are assembled in my home complaining of their husbands, and those men who beat their wives do not behave well. He is not of my way who teaches a woman to go astray and who entices a slave from his master"

The legal position of a wife under Sunni, and with some slight differences, under Shī'ah law also, may be generally stated as fol-

Jows -

Her consent to a marriage is necessary, She cannot legally object to be one of four wives Nor can she object to an unlimited number of hand-maids. She is entitled to a marriage settlement or dower, which must be paid to her in case of divorce or separation. She may, however, remit either whole or part of the dower She may refuse to join her has nand until the dower is paid. She may be at any time, with or without cause, divorced by her husband She may seek or claim divorce (khul') from her husband with her husband's consent She may be chastised by her husband She cannot give evidence in a court of law against her husband. According to the Sunnis, her evidence in favour of her husband is not admissible, but the Shi'ahs maintain the opposite view Her husband can demand her seclusion from public If she becomes a widow, she must observe hidad, or mourning, for the space of four months and ten days In the event of her husband's death, she is entitled to a portion of her husband's estate, in addition to her claim of dower, the claim of dower taking precedence of all other claims on the estate.

There are apecial arrangements made by Muslim law for the partition of the husband's time amongst his wives in case he may have two or more wives For it is related that Muhammad said, " The man who has two or more wives, and who, in partition of his time, inclines particularly to one of them, shall in the Day of Judgment incline to one side by being paralytic." And Ayishah relates that the Prophet said, "O God, I make an equal partition amongst my wives as to what is in my power, do not, therefore, bring me to account for that which is not in my power, namely, the affections" It is therefore ruled that the wife of a prior marriage and of a recent one, are all alike in the matter of the partition of time spent with them. The husband can, however, arrange and determine the measure of the partition of his time as to whether it be one day or more at a time. But if a man marry two wives, the one a free woman and the other a bond-maid, he must divide his time into three portions, giving two portions to the free woman and one to the bond-maid When the husband is on a journey, his wives can make no claim to accompany him on the journey, and it is entirely at his option to carry along with him whomscever he pleases, but it is preferable for him to cast lots and take with him on the journey her upon whom the lot may happen to fall The time of the journey is not to be counted against a husband, and she is therefore not obliged to make up for the partition lost within that time. It is also ellowed by the law, of one wife to give up her right as re ards partition of time to any other of her basband's wives But if a woman give up her right, she is not at liberty to resume it Durru'l-Mukhtar, in loco)

The position of a wife as regards the law of divorce, is treated under the article

DIVORCE.

We are indebted to Moulvi Syed Ameer Ali, M.A., LL B., a Muhammadan Barristerat-Law, and Presidency Magistrate of Caloutta, for the following able exposition of the position of wives under the Mushm law -

"Prior to the Islamic legislation, and especially among the pagen Arabs women had no locus stands in the eye of the law The pre-Islamic Arab customs as well as the Rabbinical law, dealt most harshly with them. (3 Caussin de Percevai, Hist des

Arabes p 387,
"The Koran created a thorough revelution in the condition of women For the first time in the history of Oriental legislation, the principle of equality between the sexes was recognised and practically carried into effect. The women, says the Koran, ought to behave towards their husbands in like manner as their husbands should behave towards them, according to what is just' (Koran, chap u , v 228) And Mohammed in his discourse on Jabl-1-Arafat, emphasised the precept by declaring in eloquent terms, 'Ye men, we have rights over your wives, and your wives have rights over you (Ibn Hishum) In accordance with these precepts the Mahommedan law declares equality between the married parties to be the regulating principle of all domestic relationship. Fidelity to the marriage bed is inculcated on both sides, and unfaithfulness leads to the same consequences, whether the delinquent be the hushand or the wife. Chastity is required equally from man and woman

"The husband is legally bound to maintain his wife and her domestic servants, whether she and her servants belong to the Moslem faith or not This obligation of the husband comes into operation when the contract itself comes mto operation, and the wife is subjected thereby to the marital control It continues in force during the conjugal union, and in certain cases even after it is dissolved.

"The maintenance (nafkah) of a wife in cludes everything connected with her support and comfort, such as food, raiment, lodging, &c , and must be provided in accordance with the social position occupied (1 Futâwa-i-Alamgiri p 187, 1 Fatâwa-i-Kâzi Khân Jâma-ush-Shattât, Fusul-Imâdiyah Mafâtsh, 1 Hed., Eng Trans, p 892.)

"The wife is not entitled merely to maintenance in the English sense of the word, but has a right to claim a habitation for her own exclusive use, to be provided consistently with the husband's means

"If the wife, however, is a minor, so that the matriage cannot be consummated, according to the Hanafi and the Shiah doctrines, there is no legal obligation on the husband's part to maintain her (1 Rathma-i-Alumairi. p 778; Kanz-ud-Dakhik; 1 Hed., Eng. Traus, p 394, Jáma-ush-Shattát.)

"With the Shafers it makes no difference, in the obligation of the husband to maintain his wife, whether the wife be a minor or not. (Kitâb-wi-Anwâr, 1 Hed, Eng Trans., p. Š94)

"Not is a husband, under the Hanafi and the Shiah law, entitled to the custody of the person of a miner wife whom he is not bound to maintain (In re Khatija Bibi, 5 Bengal Law Reports, O O J 567)

"If the husband be a minor and the wife on adult, and the incapacity to complete or consummate the contract be solely on his part, she is entitled to maintenance. (1 Hed., Eng Trans p 895, Fusil-1-Imadiyah, 1 Falawa-f-Kazi Khân, p 480, Jâna ush-Shattet )

It makes no difference in the husband's liability to maintain the wife whether he be in health or suffering from illness, whether he be a prisoner of war or undergoing pumshment, 'justly or unjustly,' for some crime, whether he be absent from home on pleasure or business, or gone on a pilgrimage (1 Fattiwa-1-Alamgus, p 788) In fact, as long as the status of marriage subsists, and as long as the wife is subject to the marital power, so long she is entitled to maintenance from him. Nor does she lose her right by being afflicted with any disease (1 Fatawaı-Alamgire p. 734 , Juma-uzh-Shattât )

"When the husband has left the place of the conjugal domicil without making any ar rangement for his wife's support, the Kazi is authorised by lan to make an order that her maintenance shall be paid out of any fund or property which the husband may have left in deposit or in trust, or invested in any trade or business. (1 Fathwa-i-Alamgeri, p 750)

"A wife may contract debts for her support during the husband's absence, and if such debts are legitimate, contracted bond fide for her support, the creditors have a "right of recovery" against the husband. (Nast-ul Marâm) In the same way, if the husband he unable for the time being to maintain his wife, 'it would not form a cause for separation,' says the Hedayak, 'but the magistrate may direct the woman to pledge her husband's credit and procure necessaries for herself, the husband remaining hable for (1 Hed., Eng Trans., p 297) the debts '

"When the husband is absent and has left real property either in the possession of his wife or of some other person on her behalf, the wife is not entitled to sell it for her support, though she may raise a temporary loan on it, which the hasband will be bound to discharge, provided the mortgage was created bond fide for her or her children's support, and did not go beyond the actual necessity of the case. Under such circumstances the mortgages is bound to satisfy himself that the money advanced is applied legitimately to the support of the family of the absent husband (1 Fatawa-s-Alumgiri, p. 787.)

"When the woman abandons the conjugal domicil without any valid reason, she is not entitled to maintenance (1 Faidwa-1-Alum-girl, p. 788; Fusil-1-Inddyah, Jâma-ush-Shattist) Simple refractoriness, as has been popularly supposed, does not lead to a for-feiture of her right. If she live in the house but do not obey the husband's wishes, she would not lose her right to her proper mamtenance If she leave the house against his will without any valid reason, she would lose her right, but would recover it on her return to the conjugal domicil. (Fatdwa-:-Alamgiri, Jama-ush-Shattat, Kitab-min la-Euhazzar al-Fakih)

"What is a valid and sufficient reason for the abandonment of the conjugal domicil is a matter for the discretion of the Kazi or judge As a general principle and one which has been adopted and enforced by the Kazis' makkamas in Algeria, a wife who leaves her husband's house on account of his or his relations' continued ill-treatment of her,-does not come within the category of nashizah and continues entitled to her maintenance

"A woman who is imprisoned for some offence, or is undergoing measuremention in the civil jail for non-payment of a debt, or who goes on a voyage or pilgramage without her husband's consent, has no right to claim any maintenance during her absence (1 Fatawa-1-Alamgiri, p. 784)

"Among the Shiahs, if she goes on an obligatory pilgrimage, even without her husband's consent, she is nevertheless entitled to maintenance.

"The husband's liability to support the wafe contames during the whole period of probation, if the separation has been caused by any conduct of his, or has taken place in exercise of a right possessed by her The husband would not, however, be hable to support the wife during the iddat, if the separa tion is caused by her misconduct (Fatawa-1-Alametrs, p 746, Jama ush-Shuttat 1 Fa-tawa-1-Kazi Khan, p 481

"If any is pregnant at the time of sepaistion her right remains intact until she is confined of the child.

"The Heddya seems to imply that a woman is not entitled to maintenance during the period of probation she observes on the death of her kusband (1 Hed p 407) As the Koran, however, distinctly says, Such of you as shall die and leave wives ought to bequeath to them a year's maintenance, several jurists have held that a widow has a right to be maintained from the estate of her husband for a year, independently of any share she may obtain in the property left by him. This right would appertain to her whether she be a Moslemah or non-Moslemah.

"In the case of probation (iddat) observed by a woman on the death of her husband, the Sunns calculate the period from the actual date of his decease, the Shiahs from the day on which the wife receives the news of the death

"According to the Sunnis, the hability of the husband to maintain a pregnant wife from whom he has separated ceases at her confinement (1 Hed. p 360) The Shiahs, on the other hand, hold that the hability lasts for the same period after confinement as if the woman was not encernts. (Jâma-ueh-Shatfât)

"If the husband be meane, the wife is entitled, according to the Shafer doctrines and the views of the compilers of the Fatawa-i-Alamgiri, to maintenance for the period of one year, which is fixed by the Kazı m order to discover whether the insanity is curable or The Mankis, with whom the author of the Hedaya seems to agree, deny to the wife the right of asking for a dissolution of the marriage tie on the ground of the husband's Among them the wife, therefore insamty setains the right of maintenance during the insanity of her husband, however long con-With the Shighs the wife is entitled to a cancellation of the marriage contract if the husband's insamity be incurable. Should she exercise this right and dissolve the marriage her right to maintenance ceases

The Mahommedan law lays down dis tinctly (1) that a wife is bound to live with har husband, and to follow him wherever he desires to go, (2) and that on her refusing to do so without sufficient or valid reason, the courts of justice, on a sur for restitution of conjugal rights by the husband would order her to live with her husband.

"The wife cannot refuse to live with her husband on pretexts like the following

'(1) That she wishes to bye with her parenta

"(2) That the domicil chosen by the husband is distant from the home of her

"(3) That she does not wish to remain away from the place of her birth.

"(4) That the climate of the place where the husband has established his domicil is likely to be injurious to her health

"(5) That she detests her husband "(6) That the husband ill-treats her frequently (unless such ill-treatment is actually proved, which would justify the Kazi ta grant a separation)

"The obligation of the woman, however, to live with her husband is not absolute. The law recognises circumstances which justify her refusal to live with him. For instance, if he has habitually ill-treated her, if he has deserted her for a long time, or if he has directed her to leave his house or even connived at her doing so, he cannot require her to re-enter the conjugal domicil or ask the assistance of a court of justice to compel her The bad conduct or gross to hve with him neglect of the husband is, under the Mussulman law, a good defence to a suit brought by him for restitution of conjugal rights

"In the absence of any conduct on the husband's part justifying an apprehension that, if the wife accompanied him to the place chosen by him for his residence, she would be at his mercy and exposed to his violence, she is bound by law to accompany him wherever he goes At the same time the law recognises the validity of express stipulations, entered into at the time of marriage, respecting the conjugal demicil. If it be agreed that the husband shall allow his wife to live always with her parents, he cannot afterwards force per to leave her father's house for his own. Such supulation in order to be practically carried into effect, must be entered in the deed of marriage, a mere vertal understanding is not sufficient in the eve of the law

"If the wife, however, once consent to leave the place of residence agreed upon at the time of marriage, she would be presumed to have waived the right acquired under express stipulation, and to have adopted the domicil chosen by the husband. If a special place be indicated in the deed of marriage as the place where the husband should allow the wife to hve, and it appear subsequently that it is not suited for the abode of a respect able woman, or that injury is likely to bappen to the wife if she remain there, or that the wife's parents were not of good character the husband may compel the wife to remove from such place or from the house of such parents

"The husband may also insist upon hus wife accompanying him from one place to another, if the change is occasioned by the requirements of his duty

"Every case in which the question of conjugal domicil is involved will depend, says De Ménerville, upon us cwn special features, the general principle of the Mussulmen law on the subject being the same as in other systems of law, viz. that the wife is bound to reside with her husband, unless there is any valid reason to justify her refusal to do so The sufficiency or validity of the reasons is a matter for the consideration of the Kazi or judge, with special regard to the position in life of the parties and the usages and customs of the particular country in which they reside "

Faqii Jam Muhammad As'ad, the author of the Akhlag-r-Jalati gives the following sage advice which expresses very much the ordinary Oriental view of the question -

As regards the Selection of a Wife

The best of wives would be such an one as is graced with intellect, honour, chastity, good sense, modesty, tenderness of heart, good manners, submission to her, husband, and gravity of demeanour Barren she should not be, but prolific.

A free woman is preferable to a bond woman, masmuch as thus supposes the accession of new friends and connections, and the pacification of enemies and the furtherance of temporal interests Low birth is likewise objectionable on the same account A young maiden is to be preferred, because she may be expected more readily to attend to her husband's guidance and injunctions, and if she be further graced with the three quali ties of family, property, and beauty, she would be the come of perfection To these three qualities, however, sundry dangers may attach, and of these we should accordingly beware. For family engenders sondert, and whereas women are noted for weskness of mind, she will probably be all the clower to submit to the husband's conrol, nay, at times she will view him in the light of a servant, which must needs prove a perversion of interest, an inversion of rela-tion, and an injury in this world and the next As to property and beauty, they are liable to the same inconvenience; while in beauty there is this further and peculiar evil. that a beauty is coveted of many, and since women possess less of that judgment which restrains from orime, it may thus lead to muschief without and

As regards the Management of a Wife.

There are three things to be maintained and three things to be avoided

Of the three things to be maintained —

1 Dignity —The knaband should constantly preserve a digmined bearing towards her, that she may forbear to slight his commands and prohibitions This is the primary means of government, and it may be effected by the display of his merits and the concealment of his defects.

2. Complaisance -- He is to comply with his wife as iar as to assure her of his affection and confidence otherwise, in the idea of having lost it, she will proceed to set herself in opposition to his will And this withal, he is to be particular in veiling and secluding her from all persons not of the harim, in con-versing with her in conclustory terms, and consulting her at the outset of matters in ruch a manner as to ensure her consent (Observe the seclusion and veiling is here put as à compliment rather than a restraint.)

8 Towards her friends and connections he is to follow the course of deference, politeness, cordiality, and fair dealing, and never, except on proof of her depravity, to take any wife besides her, however superior in family, preperty and person. For that jealousy and acrimony which, as well as weakness of judgment, is implanted in the nature of women, mestes them to misconduct and vice Excepting, indeed, in the case of kings, who marry to multiply offspring, and to whom the wife has no alternative but obedience, plurality of wives is not defensible. Even in the case of kings, it would be better to be cautious, for husband and wife are like heart and body, and like as one heart cannot supply life to two bodies, one man cannot properly provide for two wives or divide his affection equally between them

The wife should be empowered to dispose of previsions as occasion may require, and to prescribe to the domestics the duties they are to perform. In order that idleness may not lead her into wrong, her mind should be kept constantly engaged in the transaction of domestic affairs and the superintendence of family interests.

As to the three things to be avoided in a husband towards his wife .

1. Axcess of affection, for this gives bor the predominance and leads to a state of perversion When the power is overnowered and the commander commanded, all regularity must infallibly be destroyed. If troubled with redundance of affection, let him at least conceal it from her

2. Let him not consult her on matters of paramount importance, let him not make her acquainted with his secrets, nor let her know the amount of his property, or the stores he cessesses, beyond those in present consumption, or her weekness of judgment will infellibly set things wrong

3. Let him allow her no musical matruments, no visiting out of doors, no hetening to men's stories, nor intercourse with women noted for such practices, especially where eny previous suspicion has been raised.

The particulars which wives should abide by are five

1 To adhere to chastity

2. To wear contented demeanous

8. To consider their husband's dignity and treat them with respect,

4. To submit to their husband's directions

5. To humour their husbands in their moments of merriment and not to disturb them by captious remarks

'The Rafuge of Revelation (Muhammad) acclared that if the worship of one created thing could be permitted to another, he would have enjoined the worship of husbands Philo sophers have said, 'A good wife is as a mother for affection and tenderness, as a clave-girl for content and attention, as a friend for concord and sincerity Whilet, on the other hand, a bad wife is as a nebel for unruliness and contumacy; as a fee for contemptuousness and reproach, and as a thief for treacherous designs at on her husband's purse "

The Arab philosophers also say there are five sorts of wives to be avoided the yearners, the favourers, the deplorers, the backbiters, and the toadstools. The yearner is a widow who has had a child by a former husband, and who will induige her child out of the property of her present one favourer is a woman of property who makes a favour of bestowing it upon her husband. The deploter is one who is the widow of a former husband whom she will ever aver to be better than her present one. The back-biter is one invested with the robe of continence, and who will ever and moon in his absence brand his blind side by speaking of his faults. The toadstool is an unprincipled beauty, who is like vegetation springing up to corruption. (See Akhieq-:-Jaieli, Thomp sen's ed., p. 263.)

Mr Lane, in his Modern Egyptians, re-

marka -

"Polygamy, waich is also attended with very mjurious effects upon the morals of the husband and the wives, and only to be defended because it serves to prevent a greater immorahty than it occasions, is more rare among the higher and middle classes than it is among the lower orders, and it is not very common among the latter A poor man may indulys himself with two or more wives, each of whom may be able, by some art or cooupation, nearly to provide her own subsistence, but most persons of the middle and higher orders are deterred from dulag so by the con sideration of the expense and discomfort which they would mour. A man baving a wile who has the misfortune to be barren, and being too much attached to her to divorce her, is sometimes induced to take a second wife, merely in the hope of obtaining off spring, and from the same motive, he may lake a third, and a fourth, but fickle passion is the most evident and common motive both to polygamy and repeated diverces. They are comparatively very few who gratify this passion by the former practice. I believe that not more than one husband among twenty has two wives

"When there are two or more wives belonging to one man, the first (that is, the one first married) generally enjoys the highest rank, and is called the great lady' Hence it often happens that, when a man who has already one wife wishes to marry another girl or woman, the father of the latter, or the female herself who is sought in marriage, will not consent to the union unless the first wife be previously divorced The women, of course, do not approve of a man's marrying more than one wife Most men of wealth, or of moderate circumstances, and even many men of the lower orders, if they have two or more wives, have, for each, a separate house "

Mrs Meer Hassau Ali, an Englishwoman who spent twelve years in a Mchammadan zananah at Lucknow, and who in 1832 published her Observations on the Musalmans of

India, says

"Although he (the Muslim) may be the husband of many wives in the course of time, and some of them prove greater favourates, yot the first wife takes precedence in all matters were dignity is to be preserved. And when several wives meet (each have separate habitations if possible), all the rest pay to the first wife that deference which superiority exacts from inferiors; not only do the secondary wives pay this respect to the first, but the whole circle of relations and friends make the same distinction, as a matter of course, for the first wife takes precedence in every way

· The latitude allowed by the law preserves the many-wived Musalman from the world's censure, and his conscience rests un accused when he adds to his numbers, if he cannot repreach bimself with having neglected or unkindly treated any of the number bound to him, or their children. But the privilege ir not always indulged in by the Musalmans; much depends upon encumetances, and more on the man's disposition. If it be the happy lot of a kind hearted, good mun to be married to a woman of assumilating mind, possessing the needful requirements to render home agreeable, and a prospect of an increasing family, then the husband has no motive to draw him men further engagements, and he is satisfied with one wife. Many such men I have known in Hudastan, particularly among the Say-yads and religious characters, who deem a plurality of wives a plague to the possessors in proportion to their numbers"

There is a curious work published in Persian cutitled Ketabi Kelain Nanch, in which are given the maxims regarding wives as they are supposed to exist in Persis. It pretends to be a grave work, compiled under the direction of seven matron law givers, but is really a specimen of Persian humour, a jeu d'esprit, founded upon female customs and superstitions. The work is of little worth as regards its legal value, but shows the popular views of Persian women regarding their own and the opposite sex. The chapter relating to "The Conduct of the Wife to her Husband, Mother-in-Law, and other Relations," is a fair specimen of its character. "That man is to be praised who confines.

"That man's to be pressed who confines himself to one wife, for if he takes two it is wrong, and he will certainly repent of his folly. Thus say the seven wise women—

Be that man's life immersed in gloom
Who weds more wives than one,
With one his cheeks retain their bloom
His voice a cheerful tone,
These speak his honest heart at rest,
And he and she are always bleat
But when with two he seeks for joy.
Together they his soul annov
With two no sun beam of delight
Can make his day of misory bright

That man, too, must possess an excellent disposition who never fails to comply with his wife's wishes, since the hearts of women are gentle and tender, and harshness to them would be cruel If he be angry with her so great is her sensibility, that she loses her health and becomes weak and delicate wife, indeed, is the mirror of her husband, and reflects his character, her joyous and agreeable looks being the best proofs of his temper and goodness of heart. She never of herself departs from the right path, and the colour of her cheeks as like the full blown rose but if her husband is continually angry with her, her colour fades, and her complexion becomes yellow as saffron should give her money without limit God forbid that she should die of sorrow and disappointment! in which case her blood would be upon the head of her husband

The learned conclave are unanimous in declaring that many instances have occurred of women dying from the harbarous cruelev of their husbands in this respect, and if the husband he even a day-labourer, and he does not give his wages to his wife, she will claim them on the Day of Judgment. It is incumbent on the husband to bestow on the wife a daily allowance in cash and he must also allow her every expense of feasting, and of excursions and the bath, and every othe. kind of recreation If he has not generosity and pride enough to do this, he will assure lly be punished for all his sing and omissions on the Day of Resurrection And whenever he goes to the market, he must buy fruit and other utile things, and put them in his handkerchief, and take them to his wife, to show his affection for her, and to please her neart And if she wishes to undertake a little journey, to go to the house of her friends for a month, to attend the baths, or enjoy any other pastime, it is not fit for the husband to deny those wishes, and distress her mind by refusal And when she resolves upon giving an entortainment, it is wailb that he should anticipate what she wants, and bring to her all kinds of presents, and food, and wine, required on the festive occasion. And in Sutertaining her guests, and mixing among them, and doing all that keepitality and cordiaz friendship demand, she is not to be interrupted or interfered with by her husband saying, What have you done? where have you been?' And if her female guests choose to remain all night, they must be allowed to sleep in the woman's room, while the hus-hand sleeps apart and alone. The learned conclave unanimously declare that the woman who possesses such a husband—a man so accommodating and obedient, is truly fortunate, but if he happens to be of an opposite character, morose, disobliging, and irritable, then indeed must she be the most wretched of womankind In that case she must of necessity sue for a divorce, or make him faithfully promise future obedience and readi ness to devote himself wholly to her will and pleasure If a divorce is denied, she must then pray devoutly to be unburthened of her husband, and that she may soon become a widow By artifice and manœuvring the spouse may thus be at length induced to say 'Do, love, whatever you please, for I am your dutiful slave Bibi Ján Afroz says, 'A woman is like a nosegay, always retaining its moisture so as never to wither not, therefore, proper that such a lovely object should be refused the comfort and felicity of taking pleasant walks in gardens with her friends, and manifesting her hospi tality to her guests, nor is it reasonable that she should be prevented from playing on the dyra, and frequently visiting her acquain tance

"Should her husband, however, maheleusly and vexatiously refuse these rights, she can not remain longer in his house. An old or ugly woman does not be under the same obligation, she may submit to any privation without infringing the rules of decorum The conclave also declare that the husband mother, and other relations, are invariably mimical to the wife it is therefore wajib that she should maintain her authority when thwarted in her views, by at least ence a day using her fists, her teeth and kicking and pulling their hair, till tears come into their eyes, and fear prevents further inter ference with her plans, Kulsum Nanch says that she must continue this indomitable spirit of independence until she has fully established her power, and on all occasions she must ring in her husbands ears the threat of a divorce. If he still resiste, she must redouble all the verations which she knows from experience irritate his mind, and day and night add to the bitterness and misery of his condition. She must never, whether by day or by night, for a moment relax. For instance, if he condessends to hand her the loaf she must throw it from her, or at him, with indignation and con-tempt. She must make his shoe too tight for him, and his pillew a pillew of atone so that at last he becomes weary of hie, and is other hand, should these resources fail, the wife may privately convey from her huahand's house everything valuable that she can lay her hands upon, and then go to the Kasi, and complain that her hasband has beaten her with his shoe, and pretend to show the bruises on her skin. She must state such facts in favour of her case as she knows cannot be refuted by evidence, and pursue every possible plan to escape from the thraidom she endures. For that purpose, every effort of every description is perfectly justifiable, and according to law

"And the seven learned expounders of the oustoms regarding the conduct and demeanour of women in Persia declare, that among the forbidden things is that of allowing their features to be seen by men not wearing turbans, unless indeed they are handsome, and have soft and captivating manners, in that case their vells may be drawn aside without the apprehension of incurring blame, or in any degree exceeding the discretionary power with which they are traditionally invested But they must scrupulously and religiously abstain from all such liberties with Millahs and Jews, since, respecting them, the prohibition is unperative. It is not necessary, however, to be very particular in the presence of common people, there is nothing oriminal in being seen by singers, musicians, bammam-servants, and such persons as go about the streets to sell then wares and trinkets." (Atkinson's Customs and Manners of the Women of Persia, p. 54)

WOMEN. Arabic nua' ( ).

1 - The Condition of Women before the time of Muhammad

Although the condition of women unaer Muslim law is most unsaturactory, it must be admitted that Muhammad effected a vast and marked improvement in the condition of the female population of Arabia

Amongst the Arabs who inhabited the was extremely degraded, for amongst the pagan Arabs a woman was a mere chattel. She formed the integral part of the estate of her husband or father, and the widows of a man descended to his son or sone by right of inheritance, as any other portion of patri, mony. Hence the frequent unions between stop-sons and mothers-in-law, which were and the second state of the second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second second se ander the name of Nikahu'l-Maqt, or "odious marriages."

The pre-Islamic Arabs also carried their aversion to women so far as to destroy, by burying alive, many of their female children. This fearful onstom was sommon amongst the tribes of Quraish and Kurdab For although they used to call the angels "daughters of God," they objected (as do the Badāwī to this day) to female offspring, and used to bury their infant daughters alive. This horrible custom is referred to in the Qur'an, where it is said, Sürah vi. 188. "Thus have their associates made seemly to many of the idolaters the killing of their children to destroy them " And, again, Sürah xvi. 60,61 "When any one of them has tidings of a female child, his face is overclouded and black, and he has to keep back his wrath. He skulks away from the public for the evil tidings he has heard;—is he to keep it in disgrace, or to bury it in the dust?"

It is said the only time on which Usman shed a tear, was in the days of igno-rance, when his little daughter, whom he was burying alive, wiped the dust of the grave-

earth from his beard

The ancient Arabic proverbs illustrate the ideas of pre-Islamic Arabia ds to the position of women, e.g.

"A man can bear anything but the mention of his wives,

"Women are the whips of Satsn."

" frust neither a king, a horse, nor a woman "

"Our mother forbids us to err and runs into error'

· What has a woman to do with the councils of a nation?"

"Obedience to a woman will have to be repented of "

II - The Teaching of the Qur'an.

It has often been asserted by European writers that the Qur'an teaches that women have no sculs Such, however, is not the What that book does teach on the subject of women will be gathered from the following selections -

Sarah axxii 85 --

" Verily the resigned men and the resigned women.

The believing men and the believing women,

The devout men and the devout women The truthful men and the truthful women,

The patient men and the patient women, The humble men and the humble women The charitable men and the charitable women,

The fasting men and the fasting women, The chaste men and the chaste women, And the men and women who oft remember God.

For them hath God prepared forgiveness and a mighty recompense

Sürah xxiv. 81 -

"Speak to the believing women that they refram their eyes, and observe continence, and that they display not their ornaments, except those which are external, and that they throw then veils over their bosoms, and display not their ornaments except to their husbands or their fathers, or their husbands fathers, or their sons, or their husbands' sons, or their brothers, or their brothers' sons, or their sisters' sons, or their women, or their slaves, or male domestics who have no natural force, or to children who note not wemen's nakedness And let them not strike their feet together, so as to discover their hidden ornaments. (See Isalah III 16) And be ye all turned to God, O ve Behevers' that it may be well with you"

Strah ix 10-12 -

"O Behevers! when behaving women come over to you as refugees (Muhājirs), then make trial of them God best knoweth their faith, but if ye have also ascertained their faith, let them not go back to the mi-fidels, they are not lawful for them, nor are the unbelievers lawful for these women But give them back what they have spent for their dowers. No crime shall it be in you to marry them, provided we give them their dowers. Do not retain any right in the in fidel women, but demand back what you have spent for their dowers and let the unbelevers demand back what they have spent for then wives This is the ordinance of God which He ordainsth among you and God 14 Knowing, Wies.

'And if an, of your wives escupe from you to the Infidels from whom we afterwards take any spoil, then give to those whose wives shall have fled away, the like of what they shall have spent for their doucis and

"O Prophet! when believing women come to thee, and pledge themselves that they will not assoc ate aught with God, and that they will not steal or commit adultery, nor kill their children, nor bring scandalous charges, nor disobey thee in what is right, then plight thou thy faith to them, and ask pardon for them of God for God is Indulgent Merciful i "

Sürah iv 1 -

"O Mon! fear your Lord, who hath created you of one man (nats, soul), and of him created his wife, and from these twain hath spread abroad so many men and women And fear ye God, in whose name we ask mutual favours-and reverence the wombs that bare you. Verily is God watching , BOA

"And entrust not to the meapable the substance which God hath placed with you as a means of support but maintain them therewith, and clothe them, and speak to them with kindly speech "

Men are supermr to women on account of the guanties with which God had gifted the one above the other, and ou account of the outlay they make from their substance for them. Virtuous women are obedient, careful during the husbands absence, occause God hath of them been careful But chide those for whose reiractormess ye have cause to fear, remove them into sleeping-chambers apart, and scourge them, but if they are obedient to you, then seek not occasion against them, verily God is High, Great!

" And if a wife fear ill-neage or aversion on the part of her husband, then shall it be no fault in them if they can agree with mutual agreement, for agreement is best. Men's souls are prone to avarioe, but if ye act kindly and prously, then, verily, your actions are not unchiced by God!

"And ye may not have it at all m your power to treat your wives with equal justice even though you fam would do so, but yield not wholly to disinclination, so that ye leave one of them as it were in suspense, if ye come to an understanding and act in the fear of God, then verily, God is Forgiving, Merciful!

· But if they separate God can compensate both out of His abundance, for God le Vast,

Sürah EXIV 4-9 -

"They who defame virtuous women, and bring not four witnesses, scourge them with fourscore stripes, and receive ye not their testimenv for ever for these are pervetee per-RODR-

"Save those who afterwards repent and live virtuously, for truly God is Lemient,

' And they who shall accuse their wives, and have no witnesses but themselves, the testimeny of each of them shall be a tostimony by God four times repeated, that he m indeed of them that speak the truth.

And the fifth time that the malleon of God be upon him, if be be of them that

"But it shall avert the chastisement from her if she testify a testimony four times repeated, by God, that he is of them that

"And a fifth time to call down the wrath of God on her, if he have spoken the trutb

III -The Teaching of Muhammud, at given in the Traditions,

will be gathered from the following quetations

'I have not left any calamity more detrimental to mankind than women.

"A bad omen is found in a woman, a house, or a borse

"The best women are these that ride on camels, and the virtuous women of the Quraish are these who are affectionate to young children and who are most careful of their husband's property "

"The world and all things in it are valu able but-more valuable-than all is a virtuous

"Look to your actions and abstain from the world and from women, for verily the first ain which the children of Israel committed was on account of women.

"God will reward the Muslim who, having beheld the beauties of a woman, shuts his a Do not visit the houses of men when they are absent from their homes, for the devil circulates within you like the blood in your veins It was said, O Prophet, in your veins also?' He replied, 'My veins also But God has given me power over the devil and I am free from wickedness '"

"Two women must not eit together, because the one may describe the other to her husband, so that you might say the husband had seen her himself."

* De not follow up one look at a woman with another, for verily the first look is exonsable, but the next is unlawful

III .- Muhammadan law secures the following Rights to Women

An adult woman may contract herself in marriage without her guardian's consent and an sdulk virgin cannot be married against ber will. When divorced or a widow, she is at liberty to marry a second husband She must be treated with respect and it is not lawful for a judge to see more than her face and the paims of her hands. She should go abroad veiled. She is not required to sugage in war, although she may be taken by her husband on a military expedition, but she can have no share in the plunder She is not to be sisin in war

The fine for a woman is half that of a man, and in evidence the testimour of two women is but equal to that of one man except in the case of a birth, where the evidence of one woman is to be accepted. Her evidence is not accepted in the case of retaliation. [QISAR] In the event of a person being found slain in the house or village belonging to a woman, the outh (in the matter of evidence) is administered to her fifty times re peatedly before the fine is imposed. If she apeatatise from the faith of Islam, she is not to be put to death, but to be impresent until she return to the faith for although Imani ash-Shafi'i maintains that she is to be put to death, Imam Abu Hanifeb holds that the Prophet has forbidden the slaving of women, without making any distinction between those who are a postates or those who are original infidels. But, according to an express injunction, they are to be stoned to death for adultary, and beaten for formestion. Women who have no means of subsistence are to be supported by the state.

(The law of divarce is treated under the article mivorous.)

It is a curious arrangement of Muslum law, that (according to the Hadayah, Grady's ed. p. 340) a woman may execute the effice of a chari or judge, except in the cases hadd and ques, in conforming with the rule that her evidence is accepted in every legal case except in that of hadd and quees, or "retalistion" There is, in fact, no distinct prohibition against a woman assuming the government of a state The rulers of the Muhammadan State of Bhopal in Central India have been women for several generations

IV —The Position of Women in Muhammadan Countries

has been the subject of severe enticism as well as of some controversy Mr Stanley Lane-Poole says -

"The fatul blot in Islam is the degradation Yot it would be hard to lay of women the blame altogether on Mohammad. The real roots of the degradation of women he much deeper When Islam was matituted, polygamy was almost necessitated by the number of womes and their need of support, and the facility of divorce was quite necessitated by the separation of the sexes, and the consequence that a man could not know or even see the woman he was about to marry before the marriage ceremony was accomplished It is not Mohammad whom we must blame for these great evils, polygamy and divorce, it is the state of society which demanded the separation of the sexes, and m which it was not safe to allow men and women freely to associate, in other words, it was the sensual constitution of the Arab that lay at the root of the matter Mohammad might have done better He might boldly have swept away the traditions of Arab society, unveiled the women intermingled the sexes, and punished by the most severe measures any license which such association might at first encourage With his boundmight at first encourage less influence it is possible that he might have done thus, and, the new system once fairly settled, and the people accustomed to it, the good effects of the change would have bugun to show themselves But such an idea could never have occurred to him We must always remember that we are dealing with a social system of the seventh century, not of Mohammad's ideas about the ninetoenth women were like those of the rest of his con temporaries He looked upon them as charming snares to the believer, ornamental articles of furniture difficult to keep in order, pretty playthings, but that a woman should be the soursellor and companion of a man does not seem to have occurred to him. It is to be wondered that the feeling of respect he always entertained for his first wife Khadesjeh, (which, however is partly accounted for by the fact that she was old enough to have been his mother ) found no counterpart in his general opinion of womenkind Woman was made from a crooked rib, and if you try to bend it straight it will break, therefore treat your wives kindly Mohammad was not the man to make a social reform affecting women, nor was Arabia the country in which such a change should be made, nor Arab ladies per haps the best subjects for the experiment

Still he did something towards bettering the condition of women he limited the number of wives to four, laid his hand with the utmost severity on the incestuous marriages that were then rife in Arabia, compelled husbands to support their divorced wives during their four months of probation made urevocable divorce less common by adding the rough, but deterring, condition that a woman triply divorced could not return to her husband without first being married to some one else-a condition exceedingly disagreeable to the first husband, and required four witnesses to prove a charge of adultery against a wife—a merciful provision, difficult to be fulfilled The evil permitted by Mohammad in leaving the number of wives four instead of insisting on monogamy was not great. Without considering the sacrifice of family peace which the possession of a large harem entails, the expense of keeping several wives, each of whom must have a separate suite of apartments or a separate house, is se great, that not more than one in twenty can afford it It is not so much in the matter of wives as in that of concubines that Mohammad made an irretrievable mistake. The condition of the female slave in the East is indeed deplorable She is at the entire mercy of her master, who can do what he pleases with her and her companions, for the Muslim is not restricted in the number of his concubines, as he is in that of his wives. The female white slave se kept solely for the masters sensual gratification, and is sold when he is tired of her, and so she passes from master to master, a very wreck of womanhood Her condition is a little improved if she bear a son to her tyrant, but even then he is at liberty to refuse to acknowledge the child as his own though it must be owned he selden does this Kind as the Prophet was himself towards bondswomen, one cannot forget the unutterable brutshines which he suffered his followers to inflict upon conquered nations in the taking of slaves The Muslim soldier was allowed to do as he pleased with any infidel' woman he might meet with on his vic-torious march. When one thinks of the thousands of women, mothers and daughters. who must have suffered untold shame and dishonour by this license, he canno' find words to express his horror. And this cruel indulgence has left its mark on the Muslim character, nay, on the whole character of Eastern life" (Selections from the Kur-an 2nd ed , Preface.)

The strict legislation regarding women as expressed in Muhammadan law, does not affect their position amongst wild and uncivilized tribes. Amongst them she is as free as the wild goats on the mountain tops. Amongst the Afreedees in the Afgban hills, for example, women roam without protection from hill to hill, and are engaged in tending cattle and other agricultural pursuits. If ill-treated by their husbands, they either demand divorce or run away to some neighbouring tribe. Not a few of the tribal fends arise from such creamatances.

Amongst the Bedoums' (Badiwis), Mr. Palgrave tells us, their armies are led by a maiden of good family, who, mounted amid the fore ranks on a camel, shames the timid and excites the brave by satirical or encomustic recitations (Arabia, vol. ii. p. 71) and excites the brave by satirical or encomastic recitations (Arabia, vol. ii. p 71)

The influence which Afghan women have exercised upon Central, Asian politics has been very great, and, as we have aiready remarked, the Muhammadan State of Bhopal in Central India has for several generations past been governed by female soveraigna. [CONCUBINES DIVORCE MARRIAGE, WIVES]

Ammah, a wound extending to the mem brane which encloses the brain.

According to the injunctions of the Prophet, a twentieth of the complete fine murder is due for musikah, a tenth to hashimah three-twentieths for musikapillah, and a third for animah. All other fines are left to the discretion of the judge

WRITING Arabic 'Ilmu 'I-Khaff (عام النعا) Sir William Muir, in the Introduction of his Lafe of Makomet, writes on this subject as follows.

"De Sacy and Cansein de Perceval concur in fixing the date of the introduction of Arabic writing into Mecca at AD. 560 (Mém. de l'Acad, vol. 1 p. 306, C de Perc, vol. 1 p. 294) The chief authority is contained in a tradition given by Ibn Khallicân, that the Arabic-system was invented by Morâmir at Anbar, whence it apread to Hirs. It was thence, shortly after its invention, introduced into Mecca by Harb, father of Abû Sofian, the great apponent of Mahomet. (Jim Khallicân, by Slane, vol. in p. 284) Other readitions give a later date, but M. C. de Perceval reconciles the discrepancy by referency them rather to the subsequent arrival some regions and successful teacher than the first introduction of the art (vol. i 205). I would observe that either the ove traditions are erroneous, or that some rt of writing other than Arabic must have on known long before the date specified, . A.D. 560 Abd al Muttalib is described writing from Mecca to his maternal relaces at Medina for help, in his younger ys, s.e about AD 520. And still farther ck, in the middle of the fifth century, issee (Quescy) addressed a scritter demand a similar tenor to his brother in Arabia true (Kâtib al Wâchidi, 11½, Tabara, 28.)

"The Himyar or Mushad writing is said by in Khallican to have been confined to mien, but the verses quoted by C de irsevel (vol. i. p. 295) would seem to imply at it had at one period been known and ed by the Meccans, and was in fact supmited by the Arabic. The Syriac and brew were also known and probably extensive used in Medina and the northern parts. Arabia from a remote period.

"In fine, whatever the system employed sy have been, it is evident that writing of me sort was known and practised at Mecca ag before A.D 560 At all events, the frement notices of written papers leave no om to doubt that Arabic writing was well sown, and not uncommonly practised, there

The intimate connection of the Arabic phabet, "as it is now in use, with the abrew, or rather Phomician sliphabet, is own not only by the form of the letters emissives, but by their more ancient numeral arrangement, known by the name of bjad, and described under that head on ge 3 of the present work. This arrangement; it will be remembered, is contained in a six meaningless words.

The first six of these words correspond to a Hebrew alphabet, the last two consist of a letters peculiar to Arabio, and it will be on that the words abjud, huwwax, and the case of transliteration), express the nine sites, together with ten, kalamen and saifas, a tens from twenty to ninety, and garashat, high, and rapage, the hundreds together the one thousand.

The present arrangement of the Arabic alphabet, in the form which the letters take as finals, is the following —

On examining these characters, as repre sented in the above synopsis, it will at once be seen that, with the exception of the first and the seven last ones, each character stands for two or three sounds, their only distinction consisting in from one to three dots, which are added at the top or bottom of the letter, and that thereby the number of characters is reduced from twenty-eight to seventeen. It will, moreover, be noticed that several of these characters have an appendix or tail, which is well adapted to mark the end of a word, but which would prevent the letter from being readily joined to a following one, and therefore is dispensed with if the letter be mittal or connected with others. pressing those dots and cutting off these tails, and arranging the characters in their reduced order, and m that form which fits them to appear as initials or medials, we obtain the following simplified schedule —

A further examination of this reduced list shows, that the characters, 1, 4, 5 and 16, 1, 2, 3 and 3, do not admit of the horizontal prolongation towards the left which serves to connect a letter with a following one, or, in other words, that they can only be joined to a preceding letter, and that the characters 14 and 17, viz. and in their initial and medial form, differ from the character b only by the superadded dots, and may therefore count for one with it, finally limiting the number of characters to fifteen. Thus the whole Arabic alphabet resolves itself into the four signs which can be joined to a preceding letter, but must, even in the middle of a word remain separate from a following one, and the eleven signs

حسمطععكلية

which can be connected either way

These, then, are the graphical elements, in their simplest expression, by means of which Arabic, etymologically perhaps the richest language in existence, was originally written, and which were expected to transmit the sacred text of the inspired book to the coming generations. The first in the above series of connectible characters (s) represents five different sounds, b, t, g, n, and y, the second (a) three sounds, h, t, and kh, the next five (m, a, b, a, s), together with and, two sounds each, s and sh, s and s, t and s, ' and s,' and gh, f and q, d and z, r and z, respectively, and only five out of the whole number of fifteen (g, a, l, s, l) are single signs for a single consonantal sound each. As for the vowels, only the long ones, $\vec{a}_i \vec{a}_i$, and $\vec{i}_i$, were in this system of writing graphically expressed, being represented by the so-called weak consonants, $\vec{i}_j$, and $\vec{a}_i$, which, in this case, act as letters of prolongation Yet the corresponding short vowels, $\vec{a}_i$, $\vec{a}_i$, and $\vec{i}_i$, were of the utmost importance for the correct reading of a text, for the whole system of Arabic inflection is based upon them, and their faulty employment in the recital of the Qur'an would frequently lead to grave mistakes, or, at all events, grievously shock the pious and the learned.

So it will be easily understood that the want of additional signs was soon felt, to obviate this double insufficiency of the original alphabet, that is to say, on the one hand to distinguish between letters of the same form but of different sound, and on the other hand to show with what vowel a letter was to be encureed in accordance with the rules of the Prab or grammatical inflection.

rules of the Irab or grammatical inflection.

Accounts differ as to when and by whom these signs were invented and introduced into the sacred as well as the secular writing We must here at once remark that the form in which they now appear is by no means their oldest form, as we have also, with regard to the characters of the alphabet themselves, to distinguish between two styles of writing, the one called Cufic, used in inscriptions on monuments and coins, in copies of the Qur'an, and documents of importance, the other of a more cursive character, better adapted to the exigencies of daily life. This latter style it is true, seems to have existed, like the former, long before Muhammad, and resembles in a document of the second century of the Hijrah, which has come down to us already very much the so-called Naskhi character now in use. But the two kept from the first quite apart, and developed independently from each other up to the middle of the fourth century of the Muhammadan era when the more popular system began to supplant the older one, which it finally superseded even in the transcriptions of the sacred book

In tracing the origin of the vowel-marks and the discritical signs, as we may now call them, in the first instance of the Oulic alphabet, wa will follow Ibn Khallıkan, whose information on the subject seems the most intelligible and self-consistent that has reached us In his celebrated biographical dictionary, he relates that Ziyad, a natural brother of the first Umaiyah Khalifah Mu'awiyah, and then Governor of the two 'Iraqs, directed Abū Aswad ad-Du'ili, one of the most eminent of the Tabi'un, to compose something to serve as a guide to the public, and enable them to understand "the book of God," meaning thereby a treatise on Grammar, the elements of which Abu Aswad was said to have learned from 'Ali, the son-in-law of the Prophet himself He at first asked to be excused, but when he heard a man, on reciting the passage (Sürah ix 8) Anna 'läha barı'en mına 'lmushrikina wa rasiiluku, pronounce the last word resultate, which changes the meaning of the passage from "That God is clear of the idolaters, and His Apostle also," into "That God is clear of the idolators and of His Apostle," he exclaimed, "I never thought that things would have come to such a pass." He then went to Ziyad and said, "I skall do what you ordered, find me an intelligent scribe who will follow my directions" On this a scribe belonging to the tribe of 'Abdu 1-Qais was brought to him, but did not give him satisfaction another then came, and 'Abdu 'l-Aswad said to him "When you see me open (fata) my mouth in pronouncing a letter, place a point over it, when I close (samm) my mouth, place a point before the letter, and when I pucker up (kasar) my mouth, place a point under the letter" Noldeke, the learned author of Geschichte des Korans, rejects this part of the story as a fable, and it is certainly not to be taken in the literal sense, that each time a letter was pronounced, the scribe was supposed to watch the action of the dictater's lips But it seems reasonable enough to assume that in cases where much depended on the correct vocalisation of a word, and where the reciter would naturally put a particular emphasis on it, Abu Aswad should instruct his amanuensis not to rely upon his ears only in fixing upon the sound, but also call the testimony of his eyes to his aid. At any rate, Fathah, the name of the vowel-points Fathah, "opening," for a, zammah, "contraction," for u, and kasrah, "fracture" (as the puckering up of the mouth may fitly be called), is well explained, and the notation itself for fathah, . for zammah and for kasrah, is that which we still find in some of the old Cufic manuscripts of the Qur'an marked in red ink or pigment We refer the reader to the first specimen of Cufic writing given below (p 687), which he is requested to compare with the transcript in the modern Arabic character and with our Roman transiteration, when i will readily perceive that the points or dots in the Cufic fragment conrespond to the short vowels of the transliteration, while, in the Arabic transcript, they serve to distinguish the consonants for instance, the point above the second iciter of the third word, and it will at once be seen that in the Cufic form it expresses the a after the n of tanazzalat, for it recurs again arter the I in the last syllable, and that in the Naskhi character it distinguishes the # (1) steelf from the preceding double pointed to the both which letters remain without a distinctive sign in the Cuffc

To return to Ibn Khallikan he relates in another place, after Abū Ahmad al-'Aekarī, that in the days of 'Abdu l-Malik ibn Marwān, the fifth Khalifah of the Umaiyah dynasty, the erroneous readings of the Qur'ān had become numerous and are ead through 'Trāq This obliged the governor, al-Hajīsj ibn Yūsut, to have recourse to his kētībs, for the purpose of putting distinctive marks on the words of uncertain pronunciation, and it is said that Nasr ibn 'Asim undertook that duty and imagined single and double points (nugat, pl of nugtah, "drop," "dot"), which he placed in different manners. The people then passed some time without making any copies of the Qur'an but with points, the usage of which did not, however, prevent some false readings from taking place, and for this reason they invented the I'jam (signs serving to distinguish the letters of the same form from one another), and they thus placed the tham posteriorly to the nugat

Prima facie, this seems to contradict the passage quoted previously, according to which Abu Aswad would be the inventor of the nuque or vowel-points, and the same remark applies to another account of the same author, which we shall adduce presently Pending our attempt to reconcile the diffe rent statements, we notice here two fresh par-For the first ticulars of some importance time mention is made of double points, and we shall scarcely be wrong if we refer this to the way in which the Nunnation or Tanwin, that is the sounding of an n after the vowels, is expressed in the early writing is simply by doubling the vowel-signs in the same position in which the single points are for an, for un and for placed Secondly, we meet with the distinct assertion that the invention of the inam or discritical signs followed that of the nugat or vowel-points Noldeke thinks the reverse more probable, not only because the letter b (ب) is found already pointed on coins of 'Abdu 'l-Malik, but also because the discritical signs are in the ancient manuscripts, like the letters themselves, written with black ink, while the vowel-points are always of a different colour But the early use of a pointed b does not prove that the other letters were similarly marked at the same time. On the contrary, if such a distinction was once established for the b, which would be most liable to be confounded with one of its four sister forms, the other characters of a like shape could for some time dispense with distinctive signs, as for an Arabian reader accustomed to hear, see, and think certain groups of consonants together, and deeply imbued with an instinctive consciousness of the phonetic laws of his language, the danger of mistaking one letter for another would not be by far so great as it appears to us as for the argument taken from the different colour of the ink, Nöldeke himself remarks that it was natural to use the same tint for the consonants and their distinctive signs, which form only a part of them, while the vowel-points are an entirely new element.

According to a third tradition, it was Yahyā ibn Ya'mar (died A.H. 129) and al-Hasan al-Başrī (died A.H. 110), by whom al-Hajjā; caused the Qur'ān to be pointed, and it is stated that Ibn Shīrin possessed a copy of it, in which Yahyā ibn Ya'mar had marked the vowel points. He was remarkable as a Shī'ah of the primitive class, to use Ibn Khaihkān's expression one of those who, in assort-

g the superior morit of the People of the louss, abstained from depreciating the merit those Companions who did not belong to at lamily It is related by Asim ibn Abi -Najid, the Qur'in reader (died a.s. 127), at al-Hajis; summoned Yahyā on that sount into his presence and thus addressed

"Do you pretend that al-Hasan and al masin were of the posterity of the Apostle i God? By Alish, I shall cast to the ground sat part of you which has the most haur on (that is I shall strike off your head), un see you exculpate yourself " "If I do so," and Yahya, "shall I have amnesty?" "You sail," replied al-Hajjaj " Well," said ahva. "God may His presse he evelted! ahyā, "God, may His praise be exalted!

'And We gave him (Abraham) Isaac and Jacob, and guided both aright, and We had before guided Noah, and of his posterity, David and Solomon, and Job, and Joseph, and Moses and Aaron Thus We reward the lighteous Zachariah, John. Jesus, and Ehas all were just persons.' (Sürah vi. 84, 85) ow, the space of time between Jesus and branam is greater than that which sepaited al-Hasan and al-Husain from Muhamad, on all of whom be the blessing of God id his salvation!" Al-Hajjaj answered, "I ust admit that you have got out of the difmity, I read that before, but did not un-erstand it ' In the further course of con reation, al-Hajjaj said to him "Tell me I commit faults in speaking" Yahya mamed alient, but as al Hajjāj maisted on ving an answer, he at length replied "O nır, siros you ask me, I must sav that you alt what should be depressed, and depress sat should be exalted" This has the immatical meaning. You put in the nomitive (10f4) what should be in the accusa to (nasb), and vice versa but it is at the me time an epigrammetical stricture on al ujaj's arbitrary rulership, which, it is said, m for Yahyā the appointment as Qāzī in arw, that is to say, a honorary banishment m the former's court.

According to other sources, Yahya had quired his knowledge of grammar from in Aswad sd-Duili It is related that, ien Abh Aswad drew up the chapter on agent and patient (fail subject, and ful, object of the verb), a man of the tribe Lais made some additions to it, and that it Aswad, having found on examination it there existed, in the language of the det Arabs, some expressions which could not made to enter into that section, he stopped out and abandened the work | Ibn Khai an thinks it possible that this person was hyā ibn Ya'mar, who, having contracted alliance by eath with the tribe of Lais, s considered as one of its members. But it squally possible that the before-mentioned ar ibn 'Asim whose patronymic was alisi may have been that man, and this pposition would enable us to bring the difent statements which we have quoted mto some harmony. To Abi Aswad the honour can scarcely be contested of having invented the sample yowel-points or sugar Naar ibn 'Asim, walking in his track, may have added the double points to designate the Tanwin. Lastly, Yahyu would have completed the system by devising the sydes, or discritical signs of the consonants, and introduced it to a fuller extent into the writing of the Quran, in which task he may have been assisted by al-Rasan al-Basri, one of the most learned and accomplished Qur'an-readers amongst the Täbian.

But whoever may have been the inventor of the discritical signs in their earlier form, we must again remark that their shape in Cunc manuscripts, like that of the vowelpoints, is essentially different from the dots which are now employed for the same purpose. They have the form of accents (##), or of horizontel lines (#========), or of triangular points, either resting on their basis or with their spex turned to the right ( - 1). As it cannot be our intention to give here an exhaustive treatise on Arabic writing, we pass over the remaining orthographical signs made use of to the old copies of the Qur'an, in order to say a few words on the system of netation which is employed in the Naskhi character and our modern Arabic type

If, with regard to the Oufic alphabet, we have spoken of discritical signs to distinguish between the consonants, and of vowel-points, we must now reverse these expres sions, calling the former discritical points, the latter vowel-signs. For, as already has been seen from the synopus of the alphabet on p 681, the point or dot is there made use of for the distinction of consonants, while the vowels, which in the Greek and Latin alphabets rank as letters equally with the consenants, have no place in that synopsis As this style of writing was to serve the purposes of daily life, it is probable that the want of some means of fixing the value of the consonants was here more immediately felt, and that therefore the use of points for this end preceded the autroduction of the vowel marks, or to speak more accurately, of marks for the short vowels. For the long vowels ā 1, and ū, were, as in the Onfic writing, also expressed by the weak consonants ), and , taken as letters of prolongation

When, later on, the necessity arese to represent the short vowels equally in writing, the point or det, as a distinctive mark, was disposed of, and other signs had to be invented for that purpose. This was accomvented for that purpose. This was accom-pliebed, we are told, by al-Khalil, the celehrated founder of the ficience of Arabic Proceedy and Metric. His device was samply to place the abbreviated form of the beforementioned weak communitathemselves above or beneath the letter after which any short vewel was to be prenounced. The origin of the samual or u (____) from the j is at once evident. The sign for the fitchest or a (____) differe only by its slenting position from the words as all for sall, and the Lasrah or a (-) is derived from the bend towards the right which the letter a takes in its older shape (a.) The Tanwin was then, as in the Cuse writing, expressed by doubling the eiges for the simple vowels _____ for an, ____ or ____ for an, and _____ for is.

There remains a third set of signs supplementary to the Arabic alphabet, which may be called orthographical signs, and which, in their present form, were probably also invented and introduced by al-Khalil, at all events, this is distinctly stated with regard to two of them, the Hamush and the Tashdid. The Hamsah, to be well understood, must be considered in connection with the letter 'ain (E) of which its sign (a) is the abbreviated form. If the latter assertion needed proof against the erroneous opinion, put forth by some writers, that the Hamzah is derived from the , this proof would be afforded by the following anecdote. The Khalifah Harunu 'r-Reshid was sitting one day with a favourite negro concubine, called Khalisah, when the post Abu Nuwes entered into his presence and recited some verses in his praise Absorbed in conversation with the fascinating slave-girl, the Khalijah paid no attention to the poet, who, leaving him in anger, wrote upon ar-Rashid's door —

لقد ماع همری علی بابکم کما ماع عقد علی

Lagad zā'a shī rī 'ala bābīkum, kama zā'o 'īqdun 'ala Khālīsah.

"Forsooth, my poetry is thrown away "t your door, as the jewels are thrown away on the neck of Khalleah"

When this was reported to Hārun, he ordered Abū Nuwās to be called back. On restring the room, Abū Nuwās effaced the final stroke of the gen the word gla (xā'a," is lost "or" thrown away"), changing it thereby into pla (xā'a), written with the Hamsah and entirely different in meaning For when the Khalifah asked "What have you written upon the door?" the answer was now

"Truly, my poetry sparkles upon your door, as the jewels sparkle on the neck of Khālisah."

The fact is, that both the letter am and the Hamsah are different degrees of the distinct effort, which we all make with the muscles of the threat, in endeavouring to prenounce a vewel without a consonant. In the case of the 'am, this effort is so strong for the Arabic organ of speech, that it partakes in itself of the nature of a consonant, and found, as such, from the first, a representative in the written alphabet, while the slighter effort, embodied in the Hamsah, was left to the utterance of the speaker. But when their language became the object of a favourite study with the learned Arabs, this difference not only called for a graphical expression, but led even to a further distinction between what is called Hamzatu 'l-Qat' or Hamzah of Disjunction, and Hamzatu'l-Wasl or Hamzah of Conjunction. We will try shortly to explain this difference

If we take the word polanir, "a commander or chief," the initial a remains the same, whether the word begins the sentence or is preceeded by another word we say amirun gäla, "a commander said" (according to the Arabic construction litewell as for a commander, he said"), as well as yell gele amoun, "there said a commander" (in Arabic literally "he said, namely, a commander"), Here the Hamsah (a), with the Alif (1) as its prop and the fathah or a as its vowel, is called Ham zatu 'l-Qat', because in the latter case it disjoins or cuts off, as it were, the initial a of the word amirun from the final a of the word qala, and the same holds good if the Hamzah is pronounced with t, as in imārah, "commandership," or with s, as in أمرأة unara, "commandors," plural of amer But it would be otherwise with JE al 11 Jomes a of the article with the word amir In المرزقال al-amiru qula, "the commander said," it would preserve its original sound, because it begins the sentence, but if we invert the order of words, we must drop it in pronunciation altogether, and only sound the final a of qāla instead, thus qāla 'l-umuru, " said the commander," and the same would take place if the preced ing word terminated in another vowel, as yaçulu 'l-umuru " says the commander," or ba-qouls 'l-umuru ' by the word of the commander." Here the Hamsah would no longer be written _ but _ (,, ) j(s, etc.), and would be called Hameats '- Wasl or Hamzatu's-Selah, because it joins the two words together in closest connection.

In the article, as it has been stated above, and in the word aman, oath," the original sound of the Hamzatu I Wast is fathan, a , it occurbesides in a few nouns, in several derived forms of the verb, and in the Imperative of the primitive triliteral verb, in all of which cases it is sounded with basrak or a, except in the Imperative of those triliteral verbs whose corist takes sammah or u for the vowel of the second radical, where the Ham uskul, "be allent"). But the reader must always keep in mind that it preserves this original pronunciation only at the beginning of a serience of it is preceded by any other word, the final vewel of that preceding word takes the place of the Hamzab, and if this word terminates in a consonaut, the Hammh is generally pronounced, with a . We say generally because the only exceptions are after the proposition on min, where it is sounded with a, and after the pronounal affires of the second and third person plural, kum and ham, where it takes u

We can pass over more rapidly the other signs of this class, which are the Maddah, the Tashdid, and the Jazmah or Sukun If in consequence of any grammatical operation an Alif, as prop of a Hamzah sounded with futdah, comes to stand before another such Alif, we write \( \bar{\text{f}}, \text{pronounced } \bar{a}, \text{ instead of } \bar{\text{f}}, \\
\text{and the upper horisontal sign is called Maddah or Madd, "lengthening," "prolongation" \\
\text{While thus the Maddah is the sign for the doubling of an Alif, the Tashdid (__ is the sign for the doubling of a consenant (_=bb) \\
\text{if, lastly, a consenant is not to be followed by a wowel, the sign or _ named Inz mah (cutting off) or Sukun (rest), is placed above it, and the consenant is called "quiescent" (saknah), in contradistinction from a "moved" consenant (muha rakuh), that is, one sounded with a vowel (harakah, "notion")

أيط الهجاء

"I write out the Alphabet," and these words, together with the two formulas given on page 682 (,,,,) and collection), and the dot as a discritical sign, contain the whole system of Arabic writing, as it were, in a nut shell.

However indispensable these various supplementary signs may seem to us for fixing the meaning of an Arabic text educated Araba themselves look at them in a different light Although the need for them was from the first most urgently felt for the purpose of securing the correct reading of the Quran, several of the learned doctors of early Islam strongly opposed their introduction into the sacred book as a profane innovation. The great Sunni traditionist, Malk ibn Anas (died A.m. 179), prohibited their use in the copies employed at the religious service in the mosque (ummahatu "I-masahit"), and allowed them only in the smaller copies, destined for the instruction of the voung in schools. In course of time, however, when even the office of reading the Qu'an publicly mere and more frequently devolved upon persons who had not received a special theological training, the necessity of carefully marking the text with these signs all through went on increasing, and became at last a generally acknowledged principle In secular literature and in epistolary intercourse amongst the educated, on the contrary, their use should, according to the competent authorities, be limited to those cases where ambiguity is to be apprehended from their omission If there is no danger of miscomprehension, we are told by Haff Khalifah, it is preferable to omit them, especially in addressing persons of consequence and refinement, whom it would be impolite not to suppose endued with a perfect knowledge of the written language Moreoyer, to a chastened taste, a superabundance of those extraneous signs seems to disfigure the graceful outline of the Arabic character When a piece of highly elaborate penman-ship was presented to 'Abdu Tlah ibn Tahir, the accomplished governor of Khurasan under the Abbaside Khalifah al-Ma'mun, he ex-claimed, How beautiful this would be if there were not so much corrender seed scattered over it " The discritical points of the consonants, of course, are now always added, for they have grown to be considered as integral elements of the alphabet itself Their absence, or their accidental misapplication, gave rise, in former times, to numberless ludi crous or serious perplexities and mistakes, instances of which abound in Muhammadan history Al-Baladori, e.g., relates that the poet al-Farazdaq (died AH 110) intercoded by letter with Tamim, governor of the bonn. daries of Sind, in order to obtain release from military service for the son of a poer woman of the tribe of Tai). The youth name was Hubaish ( , , but as the dia ritical points were not marked in al-Farazana's letter, Tamım was at a loss whether to read Hubaish or Khunais ( , and solved the difficulty by sending home all soldiers whose names contained the dubious letters. A more tragical event is record d by Hājī Khalifah, to which we would fam apply the Italian saying Se non e vero è b trovato Phe Khalifah al Mutawakkel is seid to have sent an order to one of his officials to ascertain the number of Zimmis in his province, and to report the amount Unfortunately, "a drop fell, as the Arabic original expresses it. upon the second letter of the word (ahei, " count "), and the result was, that the officious functionary submitted the ill-fated Zimmis to a certain painful and degrading operation, in consequence of which they all died but two.

On the other hand, the employment of these signs in the Qur'an, together with several others, to mark its division into verses, chapters, sections, and portions of sections, to call attention to the pauses that should be observed in reciting it, and to indicate the number of ruke or inclinations with which the recital is to be accompanied, gave occasion for graphical embellishment of various kinds. Brilliantly coloured ink or a solution of gold to write with, delicately tinted and smoothly pressed pergament or paper, frequently overspread with gold or silver dust, highly finished ornamental de-signs of that fanciful and elegant description which has received the name of arabesques, such are the means which serve to render the copies of the Quran of the halcyon days of Islam gorgeous and oftentimes artistically beautiful Writing became indeed an art. diligently cultivated, and eloquently treated upon in prose and verse by its possessors, to whom it opened access to the most exalted positions in the State Amongst the most celebrated calligraphists are mentioned the Wazir Muhammad ibn Ali ibn Muqlah (died A.H. 828), 'Alī ibn Hilāl, surnamed al-Bauwāb (died AH. 413), and Abû 'd-Durr Yaqût ibn Yaqût ibn 'Abdi 'llah ar-Rûmi al-Must'asam. (died AH 698), whose father and grand-father had excelled in the art before him, but who, according to Haji Khalifah, was never surpassed in it by any of his successors
It was a natural consequence of the general development of the art of writing, that various styles were invented and cul-tivated independently of each other, and it will now be our task shortly to speak of the principal varieties, trying to describe their distinguishing features by help of a few illustrations chosen from Bresnier's Cours de Langue Arabe Along with the fundamental distinction already mentioned, of the Cufic or monumental, and the Naskhi or manuscript style, there runs, in the first instance, that of the Maghrib-Berber or Western, and Mashriq or Eastern style. It must, however be re-marked, that the Western Naskhi stands in closer connection and has preserved a greater resemblance with the Western Cufic, than is the case with the Eastern Naskhi in reference to the Eastern Cufic, as the reader will scarcely fail to perceive on comparing the following specimens

The first is the before-mentioned fragment of the Qur'an, written in the Cufic manuscript style, and provided with the vowel-points as invented by Abu Aswad ad-Du'll (or Nasr ibn 'Asım, see page 682) Like the remainder of our specimens, we accompany it with a transcript in modern type, a transliteration in Roman character, and a rendering into English.

MAGERIB MONUMENTAL CHARACTER.

No 3, an inscription taken from the Al hambra, exhibits a style of monumental writing which can scarcely be called Cufic any longer, so much resembles it the Naskhi character. While in the previous specimen neither vowel points nor discritical signs are made use of, here we find them employed in the shape, which they assume in manuscripts written in that hand. The reader will not have much difficulty in tracing the component letters by comparison with the following transcript and transliteration.

يا وارث الانمار لا عن كلاله تراث جلال تستخف الرواسيا

Yā warışo 'l-anşārı lā 'an kalālutın turaşo jalālın tastakhiffu 'r rawāsıyā

"O thou who inheritest from the Ansurs, and not by way of distant kindred, a neirloom of glory that makes every summit of fame appear low" It will be noticed that the 3 (f) of the word tastakh; it is left without the discritical point which distinguishes this letter from the letter 5 (q). This tallies with a remark of Hājī Khalifah, according to which the discritical points of these two letters may be put or omitted at libitum, and we seem therefore justified in concluding that the necessity for their distinction was latest felt and provided for Hence arises one of the peculiarities which at once mark the difference between the Western and Eastern styles of writing, and which the reader will observe in the paxt three specimens, presenting instances of the Maghrib manuscript character

The first (No 4) is written in a bolder hand, and consequently shows more strikingly the close relationship with the monumental style of the Western Arabs

On comparing the initial letter of either line, it will be found that the one is 3 (in  $q\bar{a}lat$ ), the other 3 (in fa-pttu), but in the Maghrebian original, the former is marked by a dot above, the latter by a dot beneath the character, instead of the superscribed double and aingle point respectively in the tran-script. This is the distinguishing feature script between the two styles previously alluded to, and it seems to prove that the use of the diacritical points for these two letters is of later origin, and dates from a time when the two great divisions of the nation had definitely separated and followed each their own destimes Another point to which we draw at tention, is the different form of the Tashdid, as seen in the word Allah The Maghrib form is \_\_ instead of \_\_ , and while in the The Maghrib Oriental writing the vowel signs are placed over it, the Western style places the sign for the Tashdid and for the vowel frequently side by side, as it is done here.

"Hippocrates neither allows nor forbids a man, who has a desire to drink at mght-time.

to satisfy his desire. If, however, he drinks, and sleeps after drinking, it is better than not to sleep, this being so because sleep counteracts, in this case, the evil effect of drinking, for it is not customary to drink at nighttime, and if one does so, this will of necessity produce  disturbance and derangement in the digestion, just as if cold water were poured into a vessel containing food that is being boiled."

These two fragments scarcely call forth any further remark, except that in the last both forms of the Tashdid are employed, the ordinary form even more frequently than the Maghreban for the latter occurs only twies, in bi-'sh-shurbs, which is the second word in the fourth line, and in ash-shurbs, which is the last word but one in the same line Moreover, it will be useful to notice the peculiar shape which the letters J(a) and J(z) take in the Maghrib character, as in the words spinads towards the end of the second line, and ya'gan near the beginning of the first.

Dasmissing the Maghrib-Berber style of Arshic writing, with its numerous local varieties, as less interesting for the English reader, we now turn to the Oriental style, where we meet again with a bipartition, viz. into the Eastern Naskhi, as it is written in Arabia itself, Egypt, and Syria, and the Tailiq, current in Persia, India, and Central Asia.

No 7 is a specimen of the Naskhi in the more limited sense of the word, meaning the style generally employed m manuscripts, and derived from naskhon nuskhon, "copy"

NASEHI CHARACTER FROM A GOOD EGYPTIAN MANUSCRIPT

قال یا آدم البثهم باسمائهم فلما انباهم باسمائهم قال الم اقل لکم الی اعلم غیب السموات والارض واعلم ما تبدون رما کنتم تکتمون » وال قلنا للملاقکت اسجدوا

Qāla yā Adamu 'nbr'-hīm hī-asma'ī-hīm falammā anba'a hūm bī-asma'ī-hīm qala alam agul la-kum

Annī a'lamu gharba 's-samawâti' wa 'larzı wa a'lamu mê tabdûna

Wa mā kuntum taktumūna Wa 17 quinā is-is-malā's-kats 'esudū "He said 'O Adam, inform them of their names,' and when he had informed them of their names, He said; 'Did I not say to you,

That I know the hidden things of the heavens and of the earth, and know what ye bring to light,

And what ye hide?' And when we said to the angels 'Bow down'.

(Sårah il. 81, 82.)

From this ordinary Naskhi several more ornate manuscript styles are derived, as the Ribani, Yaquii, and Sulus. They are distinguished principally by the relative proportions of the characters, and in the Sulus in particular, of which we give a specimen under No 8, the letters are three times the size of the ordinary Naskhi, while the Rihānī and Yāqūti show intermediate proportions between the two

No B

SULUS STYLL

كنت نبيا والادم بين الماء واللين Kuntu nabiyan wa 'l-adamu basna 'l ma r wa 't-tins

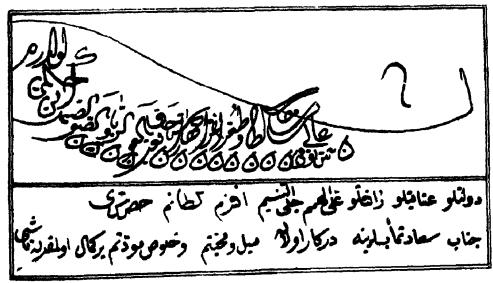

"I was a prophet, when man was yet a muxture of water and clay '

It will be observed that beneath the (m) of the words [a] (al-adamu) and [al-mā'i), in the Sulus fragment, the letter is written a second time in a smaller character and that, moreover in the word [a] it is surmounted by the sign [a], which in Maghrib writing, as we have seen, generally represents the Tashdid This is done in the above-mentioned -ornate styles, especially with those letters which admit of discritical points, viz. [a], [a], [a], [b], [b]. To indicate that no such discritical point is intended, the sign [a] is placed on the top of the letter, or to make still surer of preventing a mistake, the letter itself is repeated in a minute shape at the bottom. Only the letter a(h), as distinguished from b(t), is, in this case, written above the line, because it frequently occurs as abbreviation of b hiwa, "He," or all! Allah, "God," and it would therefore be considered irreverential towards the Deity to write it beneath the other letters. As a feature common to this division of the Eastein Arabic manuscript style, we lastly point out the inclination of the characters from the left to the right, in contradistinction both to the Maghrib and Taliq writing, where the letters are traced perpendicularly, or even with a slight bend from the right to the left

Two other deviations from the pure Naskhî style are the Jan and Diwani, officially employed in Turkey, and exhibited in the specimen No. 9—

No 9

The Jarr fragment in the upper division is a faceimile of the formula which accompanies the seal of the Sultan, and runs as follows.—

نشان شریف عالیشان سامی مکان وطفرای غرای جهان ارای ستان عاقان نقد یالعون الزبانی والمون المعدانی حکمی اولدر که

Nishāni sharifi 'ālīshān sāmi makān va tughrā'i gharrā'i jihān arā'i sitāni khāgān nufiza bi 'l-aun ar-rabbānī wā 'ssaun aş-samadāni þukmi oldur ki

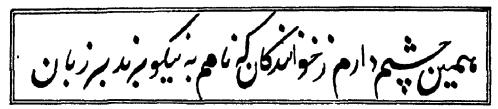

"This is the noble, exalted, brilliant sign manual, the world illuminating and adorning cipher of the Khāqān (may it be made efficient by the aid of the Lord and the protection of the Eternal)
His order is that, etc "

The beauty of this style is considered to consist in its being written either diagonally from the top to the bottom of the page, or ascending eliptically from the bottom to the top

The Diwani style, of which the lower division gives an example, is used in the official correspondence of the Turkish administration. The final letters, and even words, are placed on the top of one another, and its more intricate varieties the letters run together in a fanciful manner, which randers the decipherment of this writing frequently very difficult

Finally, we present in No. 10 a specimen of the Persian Ta'liq writing —

No. 10

TA'LIQ CHARACTER

همین چشم دارم ر خوانندگان که نامم به نیکو برند بر زبان

Hamın chashmı däram zı khwänandagün Kı nämam ba nıkü barand bar zebän

"Such hope I cherish that in minstrel's lay,

With right fair fame my name will live for aye!"

(Firdausi)

From this style of writing the Shikastah is derived, and bears the same relation to it which the Dīwānī bears to Naskhī While in general preserving the peculiar outline of the Ta'liq, it superposes finals and words, and joins letters in a similar way to the Diwānī, with which, however, it centrasts favourably by a far more elegant and graceful delineation of the characters

It remains now only to add a few words on the writing materials which the Arabs, and Orientals in general, make use of From the nature of the character and from the direction of the writing from the right to the left, it will be easily understood that our quill and steel pens would answer the purpose rather indifferently. The bolder stroke requires a broader nib, and, at the same time, the edges of the writing instrument should be smooth enough to glide with ease over the paper, so as to enable the hand to give that fine swing and swell to the curved lines, which form one of the chief beauties of the Arabic writing. These conditions are admirably fulfilled by the qalam or reed pen. For the same reasons their mix is richer and their paper more glossy than those which we employ ourselves. The best ink is said to be made of lamp-black and vinegar or verjuice, to which red other is added, well beaten up and mixed with yellow arsenic and camphor. The paper, before being used for writing, is submitted to the action of the press, or made smooth by placing it on a well-levelled board of chestnut wood, and polishing it with an egg of crystal of about half a pound's weight.

We cannot here enter into further particulars on the subject. The reader who might feel interested in it, will find some curious details in a short poem by Abū 'l-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn al Bauwāb, which De Sacy has published and translated in his Chrestomathic. As mentioned before, this calligraphist was one of the greatest masters of his art, so much so that when he died, A.H 413 or 423, the fellowing lines were written in his praise.

lines were written in his praise —

"Thy loss was felt by the writers of former times, and each successive day justifies their grief. The ink-bottles are therefore black with sorrow, and the pens are rent through affliction."

Ibn Khalikan, from whom we quote, finds these verses very fine Without disparaging his taste, we can happily assure our readers that Ibn al-Bauwabe verses are finer. With regard to the galam, however, he rather mystifies us on the very point which would be most interesting, namely, the manner in which the nib should be cut or made. He says—

"Give your whole attention to the making of your mb, for on this, verily, all else depends "But do not flatter yourself that I am going to reveal this secret, it is a secret which I guard with a miser's jealousy

jealousy
"All that I will tell 18, that you must observe the golden mean between a too much rounded and too much pointed form"

Disappointed as we are at this oracular saying, we will condone him for his niggardly reticence on account of his final lines, with which we will also terminate our article—

"Let your hand devote its fingers to writing only useful things that you will leave behind you on quitting this abode of illusion

"For man will find, when the book of his actions will be unrolled before him, all that he has done during the days of his life"

WUJUD (رجود) An existence Philosophers say existences are of three kinds —

Wayıbu 'l-Wuyad, a necessary existence—God

Mumicinu 'l- Wujud, a possible existence— Creation.

Muniquitu 'l- Wujud, an impossible existence—an Associate with God

WUQUF (وقوف) "Standing" A name given to those ceremonies of the Pilgrimage which are performed on Mount 'Arafah. (Burton, Pilgrimage, vol 11 p 383)

WUZU' (مومو) The ablution made before saying the appointed prayers Those which are said to be of divine institution are four in number, namely to wash (1) the face from the top of the forehead to the chin, and as far as each ear, and (2) the hands and arms up to the elbow, (8) to rub (masah) with the wet hand a fourth part of the head, also (4) the feet to the ankles. The authority for these actions is the Qur'an, Sürah v. 8. "O Believers! when ye address yourselves to prayer, wash your hands up to the elbow, and wipe your heads, and your feet to the ankles." The Sunnis wash the feet the Shi'ahs are apparently more correct, for they only wipe, or rather rub (masah) them. In these ablutions, if the least portion of the specified part is left untouched, the whole act becomes useless and the prayer which follows is vain.

The Sunnah regulations (or those established on the example of Muhammad) regarding it are fourteen in number (i) to make the intention or niyah of wuru, thus "I make this wuzu for the purpose of putting away impurity", (2) to wash the hand up to the wrist, but care must be taken not to put the hands entirely into the water, until each has been rubbed three times with water poured on it, (3) to say one of the names of God at the commencement of the waza', thus "In the name of the Great God," or "Thanks be to God", (4) to clean the teeth (miswak), (5) to runse the mouth three times, (6) to put water into the nostrils three times, (7) to do all the above in proper order, (8) to do all without any delay between the various acts, (9) each part is to be purified three times (10) the space between the fingers of one hand must be rubbed with the wet fingers of the other, (11) the beard must be combed with the fingers; (12) the whole head must be rubbed once, (13) the ears must be washed with the water remaining on the fingers after the last operation, (14) to rub under and between the toes with the little finger of the left hand, drawing it from the little toe of the right foot and between each toe in succession [ABLUTION. PRAYER, WATER.]

YADU 'LLAH (شا عي). "Hand of God." The expression occurs in the Qur'in:--

Sürah xlvin 10 "God's hand is above their hands"

Sürah v. 69 "The Jows say, 'God's hand is fettered."

The expression is a subject of controversy amongst the Muhammadans The Wahhābis maintain that it is wrong to hold that it is merely a figurative expression, but rather that God doth possess a hand in such a manner as it exists, without attempting to explain the manner how. On the other hand, some maintain that it is merely a figurative expression for God's power

YAGHUS (هوبه) An idol mentioned in the Qur'an, Surah lxxi 28. Professor Palmer says it was in the figure of a lion. Al-Baizawi says it was the name of a hero who lived between the days of Adam and Noah, who was afterwards worshipped in an idol of the name.

YA HÜ ( ) . "O He!" that is, "O God" An exclamation often recited by facirs or darveshes in their religious gikrs. The third personal pronoun singular, As

YAHUD (1981), the plural of Yahudi. Heb. Jews The word used in the Qur'an (together with Banu Isra'il) for the Jews [Jews. Judaism]

YARYA ( John) John the Baptist The son of Zachariah, whose birth is mentioned in the Qur'an, Suiah xix 1 in 84, and who is said in the latter Surah to have been sent with glad tidings "to confirm the Word from God (Jesus), a chief and a chaste one and a prophet from the righteous" And in Strah vi. 85, his name occurs with that of Zachariah, Jesus, and Ehas, as one of the "righteous ones" [John the Baptist]

YA'JŪJ WA MA'JŪJ (ياجوى وماجوي )

YALAMIAM (يامام) The mrqat or stage where the pilgrims from al-Yamau assume the pilgrim's garb at the pilgrimage [HAJJ]

YAMAMAH (المحلم) A province in the eastern portion of the Hijāz frequently mentioned in the history of Muhammad western province of Arabia It is considered the most fertile part of the country, and is called the garden of Arabia

YAUMU 'N-NAHR (غرم النحر). "Day of Secrifice" A term used for the Feast of Sacrafice ['IDU 'L-AEHA.]

YAUMU 'S-SABU' (کوم البیع).
The "Day of Sabu'," mentioned in the following tradition (Mishkätz'l-Masābih, book xxiv ch. 16) ---

"Abū Hurairah says, 'Whilst a man was with his goats, behold a wolf came in amongst them, and took a goat, and the man released it. And the wolf said to the man, "Who is to guard these goats on the day of Sabu, when there will be no shepherd but me "And the people said, "The wolf speaks" And the Prophet said, "I believe that the wolf did speak." Abū Bakr and 'Umar also said so'"

'Abdu 'l-Haqq says there is a difference of opinion as to what the Day of Sabu' is, either it is a day of mourrection, or a festival amongst the ancient Arabs, when the flocks were left to themselves.

the day of crying out to one another"

YA'ŪQ (جول) An idol mentioned in the Qdr'ān, Sūrah laxi. 28 Professor Palmer says it was in the figure of a horse. Al-Baizāwi says it is the name of a certain hero who lived between the days of Adam and Noah, and was afterwards worshipped in an idol of the name

YAWNING Arabic tasāwub (تعارب) From the Traditions it appears yawning is regarded as an evil; for Abū Hurairah relates that Muḥammad said, "God loves sneezing and hates yawning As for yawning, it is of the devil Therefore, if any of you yawn, let him suppress it as much as possible If he cannot step it, let him put the back of his left hand upon his mouth, for, verily, when anyone yawns and opens his mouth, the devil laughs" (Mishkāt, book exil oh vi)

YAZĪD (Ag) The son of Mu'ā-wiyah The second Khakifah of the house of Umanyah (Ommiyah), who reigned from A.D 679 to A.D 683 (A.H. 60-64) He is celebrated in Muslim history as the opponent of al-Husain. (See Ockley's Hist Saractus p. 898.)

YEAR. Arabic sanah ( , pl eanūn, eanawāt, 'ām (عام), pla'wām, haul (عول), pl. ahwāl; Persian sal (اللي), pl. salka.

The ancient Arabian year is supposed to have consisted of twelve lunar months, as now observed by the Muhammadans, but about the year AD 412, the Arabians introduced a system of interculation, whereby one month was intercalated into every three years (See M de Perceval, vol 1 p 242)
This system of intercalation existed in the time of Muhammad, but it is related that, at the farewell pilgrimage, the Prophet recited the khutbah on the Day of Sacrifice, and said "A year is twelve months only, as at the time of the creation," and thus again introduced the lunar year (See Mishkut, book xi ch. xi.) The Muhammadan year, therefore, consists of twelve lunar months, without any intercalation to make it correspond with the course of the sun, and amounts very nearly to 354 days and 9 hours Hence the Muhammadan New Year's Day, Nau Roz, will happen every year about eleven days earlier than in the preceding year

There also existed amongst the Arabians a system of commutation whereby the Muharram, the last of the three continuous sacred months [MONTHS], became secular, and Safar sacred Some traditions say that the power also existed of commuting the isolated sacred month Rayab, for the one succeeding it, When this was done, it became Sha'bān. lawful to war in the sacred months of Muharram and Rajab, and Safar and Sha'ban acquired the sacredness of the months for which they had been substituted It is with reference to this custom that Muhammad says in the Qur'an (Surah 1v 36, 37) -

"Verily, twelve months is the number of months with God, according to God's Book, ever since the day when He created the Heavens and the Earth, of these, four are sacred this is the right usage Therefore, wrong not yourselves therein, and attack those who join gods with God, one and all, as they attack you one and all, and know that God is with those who fear Him To carry over a sacred month to another is only an increase of unbelief They who do not believe are led in error by it They allow it one year and forbid it another, that they may make good the number of months which God hath hallowed, and they allow that which God hath prohibited '

This system of commutation is said to have been introduced by Quasir, who wished, by abridging the long three months' constation of hostalities, to humour the warlike Arabs, as well as to obtain the power of making a sacred month secular when it might best suit his purpose, but Sir William Muir is inclined to think that this system of commuta.

tion was an ancient one, and merely restored by Queary (Mur's Makemet, vol i p covii.) Both in India and in Egypt, in the present day, the Muhammadans use the lunar year for their religious observances and the ordinary affairs of life, but for the purposes of agriculture and other calculations, for which the lunar year is inconvenient, they employ

the Julian calendar

To find the number of solar years elapsed since any given Muhammadan date, subtract the given year of the Hijrah from the current year of the Hijrah, and from the remainder deduct three per cent., the remainder will be the number of solar years which have elapsed. Thus, suppose we see a manuscript written AH 681, and wish to know its real age in Christian or solar years, we subtract, in the first place, the number 681 from the current year of the Hijrah, say 1256, and there remains 575, from this last we deduct three per cent, or 17, and there remains 558, which at that period is the real age of the manuscript in solar years,

If the object, however, be to find the precise Christian date corresponding to any given year of the Hijrah, apply the following rule -From the given number of Mussiman years, deduct three per cent, and to the remainder add the number 621 54, the sum is the period of the Christian era at which the given current Muselman year ends For example from A.H. 942, deduct three per cent., or 28 26, and the remainder is 918 74 To this last add 62154, and the sum is 1535 28, which shows that A H 942 ended in the spring of A D 1586. This simple rule is founded on the fact that 100 lunar years are very nearly equal to 97 solar years, there being only eight days of excess in the former period, hence to the result found, as just stated, it will be requisite to add 8 days, as a correction for every century

The following is a more accurate rule Express the Muhammadan date in years and decimals of a year, multiply by 970225, to the product add 621 54, and the sum will be the process period of the Christian era. (Dr

Forbes)

If it is desired to find the year of the Hij rah which comes in in a given year of the Ohristian era , it is sufficient to subtract 621 from the year given, and to multiply the remainder by 10,307 (Murray) (Murray)

(دبع) ZABH Heb TI zebakh

Arabic lexicographers define the word to mean the act of cutting the throat In the language of the law, it denotes the act of slaying an animal agreeably to the prescribed forms, without which its flosh is not lawful for the food of man See Qur'an, Suralı 11 167, 168

"Eat of the good things wherewith we liave provided you, and give thanks unto God, if ye are His worshippers He has only forbidden for you that which is dead, and blood, and flesh of swine, and whatsoever has been consecrated to other than God; but he who is forced, neither revolting nor transgreesing, it is no sin for him for verily God is forgiving and moreiful."

The injunctions in the Traditions are more explicit (Mishket, book xviii ch 1), for Abu Tufail relates that 'Ali was example once saked, "Has the Prophet ever told you anything with regard to religion which he has not told others?" And 'Ali replied." Nothing, unless it be that which I have in the scab-bard of my sword" Then 'All brought out of his scabbard a piece of paper, and thereon was written 'May God curse those who slay without repeating the name of God, m the same manner as the polytheists did in the names of their idols , may God curse those who remove their neighbours' landmarks, may God curse those who curse their fathers may God curse those who harbour innovators in matters of religion.'

According to Sunni law, zabh 18 of two kinds (1) Ikhtiyāri, of choice, and (2) Izti-

rāri, of necessity

The first is effected by cutting the throat above the breast and reciting the words Allahu akbar, "God is most great", and the second by reciting these words upon shooting an arrow or discharging a gun

The latter act, however, is merely a substitute for the former, and accordingly is not of any account unless the former be impracticable, for the proper zabh is held to be by the shedding of blood, and the former method is most effectual for this purpose

It is absolutely necessary that the person who slays the animal should be a Muslim or a kitabi (i e a Jew or a Christian), and that he should do it in the name of God alone, it signifies not whether the person be a man or a woman, or an infant, or an idiot, or an

nucironmessed person

An animal slain by a Magnan is unlawful, as also that slain by an idolater or a poly theist Zabe performed by an apostate from the Muslim faith (who is worthy of death) is also unlawful; but, according to Abu Hanifah, if a Jew or a Christian become an apostate from his own creed, his zabh is lawful, for the Muslum law still regards hum, with respect to gable,

m the same light as formerly

If the slayer wilfully omit the invocation, "In the name of the most great God, flesh of the animal is unlawful , but if he omit the invocation through forgetfulness, it is lawful, although there is some difference of opinion on this subject amongst the Sunni Ash-Shaff'i is of opinion that the doctors animal is lawful in either case, but the Imani Mulik maintains that it is unlawful in both.

Abu Yusuf and all the Hanafi doctors have declared, that an animal slain under a wilful omission of the invocation is utterly unlawful, and that the magistrate must forbid the sale of meat so killed

It is a condition of zabh ikhtiyari that the invocation be pronounced over the animal at the time of slaying it, but in the case of zach exterôre (se when a person slays an anunal in hunting), the condition is that the invocation be pronounced at the time of letting loose the hound or hawk, or of shooting the arrow or gun, or casting the spear

It is a condition of zahh that nothing but the invocation Bismi 'llahı Allahı akbar, "In the name of God, God the most great," should he said That is, no prayer or other matter

must be mentioned

The place for slaying is betwixt the throat and the head of the breast-bone (Arabic labbah), and the vessels it is requisite to cut are four, al-hulqum, "the wind-pipe," al-mart, " the gullet " and al-warden, or al-wadapan, " the two jugular veins"

Ash-Shafi'i holds that if a man slay an ammal with a nail or horn or teeth, the flesh is unlawful, but this is not the opinion of other doctors. (See Durru 'l-Mukhtar and Hıdāyah, ın loco)

Also ZABUR (زاور), pl subur. From the Heb. zubur, pl of zibr zimrāh, "a psalm or chant" (Psa. ixxxi 2, xovii. 5) The title given to the Psalms of David in the Qur'an, where it occurs only three times.

Stratu 'n-Nisa' (iv ) 161 "And to David we gave Psalins (suburan)."

Süratu 'l-Mır'aj (xvn) 57 "And Psalms

Sūratu 'l-Ambiyā' (xx1) 105 "And now, since the exhortation (gikr) was given, have we written in the Psalms (fi'z-zaburi) that my servants the righteons shall inherit the earth."

Both Sale and Rodwell take this last to be a quotation from Psa xxxvii 29 (it appears to be the only direct quotation from either the Old or New Testament in the whole of the Qur'an), and they have both translated the Arabic giler "the law," meaning, of course, the Taurat Amongst Muslim commentators, there is considerable difference of opinion as to what is meant in this verse by zikr and zabūr

The commentator al-Baizāwī says there Said ibn Jubair and Murre three views jaryrd explained the word zabur to mean all inspired books and that by zikr was meant the Preserved Tablet (al-Lauhu l-Mahfuz) Ibn 'Abbas and az-Zahhāk said by zabūr was meant the Taurat, and by zikr those books which came after And Sha'bi said the zaber was the Book of David, and the zikr that of Moses

Al-Baghawî and al-Jalālān decide in favour of the first interpretation, Hussin decides in favour of the third, whilst al-Baixawi leaves it an open question.

Jalalu 'd-din as-Şuyüti gives the word zabür as one of the fifty-five titles of the Qur'an

He said 'So shall it be Thy Lord nath said, Easy is this to Me, for I created thee aforetime when thou wast nothing' He said 'Vouchsafe me, O my Lord! a sign.' He said 'Thy sign shall be that for three nights, though sound in health, thou speakest not to man' And he came forth from the sanctuary to his people, and made signs to them as though he would say, 'Plaise God at morn and 676B.'" Sürah xxi 89 "And Zakatîya", when he called upon his Lord saying. O my Lord leave me not childless but there is no better hear than Thyself So We heard him and gave him Yahyā (John), and We made his wife fit for child bearing"

ZAKAT (زکوة) In its primitive sonse the word zalat means purification. In its primitive whence it is also used to express a portion of property bestowed in alms, as a sanctification of the remainder to the proprietor. It is an institution of Islam and founded upon an express command in the Qur'an (vide Sürah ii 77), being one of the five foundations of practical religion.

It is a religious duty incumbent upon any person who is free, sane, adult, and a Muslim, provided he be possessed in full property of such estate or effects as are termed in the language of the law nesāb, and that he has been in possession of the same for the space of one complete year. The meab, or fixed amount of property upon which zakāt is due, varies with reference to the different kinds of property in possession, as will be seen in the present article

The one complete year in which the property is held in possession is termed haulu 'l hou! Zakāt is not incumbent upon a man against whom there are debts equal to or exceeding the amount of his whole property, nor is it due upon the necessaries of life, such as dwelling-houses, or articles of clothing, or household furniture, or cattle kept for immediate use, or slaves employed as actual servants or armour and weapons deaigned for present use, or upon books of science and theology used by scholars, or upon tools used by craftsmen.

(1) The zakāt of camels Zakāt is not due upon less than five camels, and upon five camels it is one goat or sheep, provided they subsist upon pasture throughout the year, because zakát is only due upon such camels as live on pasture, and not upon those which are fed in the home with forage One goat is due upon any number of camels from five to nine, two goats for any number of camels from ten to fourteen, three goats fer any number from twenty to twenty-four. Upon any number of camels from twenty-five to thirty-five the zakāt is a bini mekhāz, or a yearhng female camel, from thirty-six to forty five, a bent laban, or a two-year-old female camel, from forty-six to sixty, a higgah, or a threeyear-old female camel, from sixty-one to seventy-five, a jaz-ah, or four-year-old female camel, from seventy-five to ninety, two camels' female two-year-old colts, and from nunety-one to one hundred and twenty, two When camels' ismale three-year old colts the number of camels exceeds one hundred and twenty, the sakat is calculated by the aforesaid rule.

(2) The rakat of bulls, cous, and buffalors No zakāt 18 due upon fewer than thuty cattle, and upon thirty cattle which feed on pasture for the greater part of the year, there is due at the end of the year a tabi'ah, or a one-yearold calf; and upon forty is due a musem, or a calf of two years old, and where the number exceeds forty, the zakāt is to be calculated according to this rule For example, upon sixty, the zakāt is two yearling calves, upon seventy, one tabiah and one musim upon eighty, two musims, upon dinety, three tablah, upon one hundred, two tablahs and one musim, and thus upon every ten head of cattle a musim and a tabi'ah alternately Thus upon one hundred and ten kine, the zakat is two mustus and one tabuah upon one hundred and twenty, four tablahs The usual method, however, of calculating the zakāt upon large herds of cattle is by dividing them into thirties and forties, impos ing upon every thirty one tab ah, or upon every forty one musim

(8) Zakāt upon sheep and goats. No zakat is due upon less than forty, which have fed the greater part of the year upon pasture, upon which is due one gost, until the numher reaches one hundred and twenty for one hundred and twenty one to two hundred, it is two goats or sheep, and above this, one for every hundred. The same rules apply to both sheep and goats, because in the Traditions the original word ghanam applies to both species.

(4) Zakāt upon horses When horses and mares are kopt indiscriminately together, feeding for the greater part of the year on pasture, it is the option of the proprietor to give a zakāt of one dīnār per head for the whole, or to appreciate the whole, and give five per cent upon the total value. No zakāt whatever is due upon droves of horses consisting enturely of males, or entirely of mares. There 18 no zakāt due upon horses or mules, unless they are articles of merchandise, nor is it due upon war horses, or upon beasts of burden, or upon cattle kept for drawing ploughs and so forth.

(5) Zakāt upon silver It is not due upon silver of less value than two hundred dirhams, but if one be possessed of this sum for a whole year, the zakāt due upon it is five dirhams. No zakat is due upon an excess above the two hundred dirhams till such excess amount to forty, upon which the zakāt is one dirham, and for every succeeding forty, one dirham Those dirhams in which silver predominates are to be accounted silver, and the laws respecting silver apply to them, although they should contain some alloy, and the same rule holds with regard to all articles falling under the denomination of plate, such as cupe and goblets

(6) Zakāt upon qold. No sakāt is due upon gold under the value of twenty misquis, and the zakāt due upon twenty misgāle is half a misquil When the quantity of gold exceeds twenty misquls, on every four misquis above twenty are due two qurats, and so on in proprotion.

Zakāt is due upon gold and silver bullion, and upon all gold and silver ornaments and utenaile.

(7) Zakāt upon articles of merchandise Articles of merchandise should be appraised and a zakāt of 21 per cent, paid upon the value, if it exceed two hundred dirhams in

(8) Zakāt upon mues, or buried treasures Mines of gold, silver, iron, lead, or copper, are subject to a zakāt of one-fifth (khume), but if the mine is discovered within the precincts of a person's own home, nothing is due And if a person find a deposit of buried treasure, a fifth is due upon it No zakāt is due upon

precious stones

(9) Zakāt upon the fruits of the earth Upon everthing produced from the ground there is a tenth ('ashtr or 'ushr'), whether the soil be watered by the overflow of rivers or by periodical rains, excepting the articles of wood, bamboo, and grass, which are not subject to the tithe. Land watered by means of buckets, or machinery, or watering camels, is subject to a twentieth Honey and fruits collected in the wilderness are subject to tithe

The zakat is received by a collector duly appointed for the purpose, although it is lawful for the possesser to distribute his aims himself if a porson come to the collector, and make a declaration on eath as to the amount of his property upon which sakat is due, his statement is to be credited.

There are seres descriptions of persons upon whom rakat may be bestowed

(1) Facure, or persons possessed of property, the whole of which, however, does not amount to a msab

(2) Miskins, or persons who have no pro-(8) The collector of zakāt (4) Slaves porty whatever

(5) Debtors (6) Fi sabil: 'Uāh, : e in the service of God, or religious warfare

(7) Travellers
The above laws with reference to sakat are those according to the Hansflyzh sect. but the differences amongst the Imams of the Sunnis on this subject are but small. They may be seen upon reference to Hamilton's translation of the Hidiyak, vol. i. p 1.

ZAMZAM (مرحم). The sacred well within the precincts of the mosque at Mak kah. It is supposed to be the identical spring from which Hagar and Ishmael drank in the widerness (Genesis xvi 4), but which is stated in the Scriptures to have been between Kadesh and Bared.

The origin of the word zamzam is uncertain. According to Johnson's Arabic Dictionary, it means the low buzzing sound, made by the ancient fire worshippers, and may therefore allude to the muimining of the water of the well. Some Muslim commentators derive it from zamm' zamm' i.e. "fill! fill!" Hagar's words to Ishmael when she saw the water Salo translates it "Stay! Stay!" and adds that Hagar called out in the Fgyptian language to prevent

Ishmuel wandering

The building which encloses the well Zamzam stands close by the Maqam Hanbali, and was elected in A H 1072 (A D 1661) According to Burckhardt, it is of a square shape, and of massive construction, with an entrance to the north, opening into the room which contains the well. This room is beauticontains the well. fully ornamented with marbles of various colours, and adjoining to it, but having a separate door, is a small room with a stone reservoir, which is always full of Zamzam water This the pilgrims get to drink by passing their hand, with a cup, through an iron-grated opening which serves as a window, into the reservoir, without entering the room. The mouth of the well is surrounded by a wall five feet in height, and about ten feet in diameter Upon this the people stand who draw up the water in leathern buckets, an iron railing being so placed as to prevent their falling in The water is then poured into earthen jars, called daurag, which Captain Barton describes as little amphorm, each marked with the name of the denor and a peculiar cypher. These jars are placed in long rows on the ground, along the paved causeways which lead up to the Kabah, and between which grass appears growing in several places, produced by the Zamzam water occup out of the lare

The Zamzam water is held in great esteem throughout the East It is used for drinking and ablution, but for no baser purposes, and the Makkans advise pilgrims always to break their fast with it Captain Burton says "It is apt to cause diarrhos and beils, and I never saw a stranger drink it without a wry face Sale is decidedly correct in his assertion the flavour is salt-bitter, much resembling an infusion of a teaspoonful of Epsom salts in a large tumbler of topid water Moreover, it is exceedingly heavy' to the taste, for this reason, Turks and other strangers prefer ram-water collected in cisterns, and sold for five furthings a guglet The water is transmitted to distant regions in glazed earthen jure covered with basket-work, and sealed by the Zem Zemis (Zamzamis, or dispensers of the holy water) Religious men broak their lenten fast with it. apply it to their eyes to brighten vision, and unbihe a few drops at the hour of death, when Satau stands by holding a bowl of purest water, the price of the departing soul The copious supply of the well is considered at Meccah miraculous, in distant countries it facilitates the pronunciation of Arabic to the student, and everywhere the nauseous draught is highly menitorious in a religious point of view"

According to the same author, the name has become generic for a well situated within the walls of a mosque, and amongst these, naturally, the Zamzām of al-Madīnah stands nearest in dignity to the Makkah well, with which it is said to be connected by a subterraneous passage. Others believe that it is filled by a vem of water springing directly under the Prophet's grave, whence it is generally called Bi'ru 'n-Nabī, or the Prophet's well. It stands at the south-east angle of an enclosure within the court of the mosque of al-Madinah, called the garden of Fāṭimah, under a wooden roof supported by pillars of the same material

ZEALOTS [GHULAT]

Let "Likening to ZIHAR (الحهار) the back " A form of imprecation which involves the separation of husband and wife until expiation is made. According to the Hidayah zihar signifies the likening of a woman to a kinswoman within the prohibited degrees, which interpretation is found in the comparison being applied to any of the parts or members of the body improper The usual formula is Antito be seen 'alarya ka zahri ummi, 'Thou art unto me as my mother's back "

Before the establishment of Muhammadanism, zihar stood as a divorce, but Muham mad changed it to a temporary prohibition, for which expiation must be performed, vis. either freeing a slave, or two months' last, or feeding sixty persons. Qur'an, Süratu 'l-Mujädılah (lviii ), 1-5 -

"God hath heard the words of her who pleaded with thee against her husband, and made her plaint to God, and God hath heard your mutual intercourse for God Heareth' Beholdeth

"As to those of you who put away their vives by saying, "Be thou to me as my mother's back "-their mothers they are not, they only are their mothers who gave them birth! they certainly say a blameworthy thing and an untruth

"But truly, God is Forgiving, Indulgent. "And those who thus put away their wives, and afterwards would recall their words, must free a captive before they can come together again. To this are ye warned to conform and God is aware of what ye do.

"And he who findeth not a captive to set free, shall fast two months in succession before they two come together And he who shall not be able to do so, shall feed sixty poor mon. This, that he may believe in God and His Apostle These are the statutes of God and for the unbelievers is an afflictive chastise ment ! "

The above injunction was occasioned by Khaulah, the daughter of Sa'labah, having pleaded her case with the Prophet because she had been divorced by her husband Aus ibn as-Samit, by the formula above-mentioned, and which was understood by the Arabs to imply perpetual separation. Muhammad had in the first instance, decreed the divorce in accordance with ancient Arabic law but relaxed his order in consequence of the woman s carnest pleadings

ZIKR (نکر) Lut "Remembering" Heb 33 zākha. The religious ceremony, or act of devotion which is practised by the various religious orders of Faques or Darweshes. Almost every religious Muhamma dan is a member of some order of Fagirs and, consequently, the performance of zikr is very common in all Muhammadan countries, but it does not appear that any one method of performing the religious service of zikr in peculiar to any order

Zikrs, are of two kinds zikr juli, that which is recited aloud, and zikr khafr, that which is performed either with a low voice or mentally

The Naqahbandıvah order of Faqiis naually perform the latter, whilst the Chishtîyah and Qâdıriyah orders celebrate the former There are various ways of going through the exercise, but the main features of each are similar in character The following is a zikr jali, as given in the book Quulu 'l-Jamil, by Maulawi Shah Waliyu 'llah, of Delh: -

The worshipper sits in the usual sitting posture and shouts the word Allah (God), drawing his voice from his left side and then from his throat

Sitting as at prayers he repeats the word Allah still louder than before, first from his right knee, and then from his left side

Folding his legs under him he repeats the word Allas first from his right knee and then from his left side, still louder!

Still remaining in the same position, he shouts the word Allah, first from the left knee, then from the right knee then from the ieft side, and lastly in front, still louder!

Sitting as at prayer, with his face towards Makkah, he closes his eyes, says "In"-drawing the sound as from his navel up to his left shoulder, then he says slaha, drawing out the sound as from his brain, and lastly " :/la 'llahu," repeated from his left side with great energy

Each of these stages is called a zarb They are, of course, recited many hundreds of times over, and the changes we have desoribed account for the variations of sound and motion of the body described by Eastern travellers who have witnessed the perform ance of a gakr

The following is a zikr khaf i, or that which 13 performed in either a low voice or mentally

Closing his eyes and lips, he says, "with the tongue of the heart,

Allahu Sami'un, "God the Hearer"

Allahu Buşirun, "God the Seer Allahu 'Alımun, "God the Knower"

The first being drawn, as it were, from the navel to the breast, the second, from the breast to the brain, the third, from the brain up the heavens, and then again re-peated stage by stage backwards and forwards

He says in a low voice, "Allah, from the right knee and then from the left side

With each exhalation of his breath, he says, "lā ılāhā," and with each inhalation, "illā 'llāhu."

This third zarb is a most exhausting act of devotion, performed, as it is, hundreds or even thousands of times, and is, therefore, considered the most meritorious

It is related that Maulawi Habibu 'llab, living in the village of Gabasanri, in the Gadun country, on the Peshawur frontier, became such an adept in the performance of this zarb, that he recited the first part of the zikr la ilaha with the exhalation of his breath after the unid-day prayer and the second part, illā 'llāhu, with the inhalation of his breath before the next time of prayer, thus sustaining his breath for the period of about three hours!

Another act of devotion which usually sccompanies the zikr, is that of Muraqabah, or meditation

The worshipper first performs gibr of the following -

Allaho haziri, "God who is present with me

Aliaho nazim "God who sees me"

Allaho shahrdi, "God who witnesses me ' Allaho ma'i, "God who is with me."

Having recited this zikr, either aloud or mentally, the worshipper proceeds to meditate upon some verse or verses of the Qur'an Those recommended for the Qadriyah Faqira by Maulavi Shah Waliya 'llah are the follow ing, which we give as indicating the line of thought which is considered most devotional and spiritual by Muslim mystics --

1 Süratu 1-Hadıd (lvii ), 8 — "He (God) is first. He is last

The Manifest and the Hidden, and who knoweth all things,"

2 Sûrstu 1-Hadid (lvn), 4 — "He (Ged) is with you whereseever ye be" 3 Sārālu Qāi (1), 16 —

We (God) are closer to him (man) then his neck-vein."

Süratu 1-Baqarah (11.) 109 -

"Whichever way ye turn, there is the face of God.

5. Sūratu 'n-Nisă' (iv ), 125 -"God encompasseth all things" 6 Süratu 'r-Rahman (iv.), 96, 27 —

"All on earth shall pass away, but the face of thy God shall abide resplendent with majesty and giory "

Some teachers tell their disciples that the heart has two doors, that which is flushly, and that which is spiritual, and that the gikr jale has been established for the opening of the former, and gikr khar i for the latter, in order that they may both be enlightened

To the unmitiated such a ceremony appears but a meaningless rate, but to the Suff it is one calculated to convey great benefit to his mner man, as will appear from the following instructions which are given by a member of the Order respecting the zikr, which he says is a union of the heart and the tongue in calling upon God's name 'In the first place, the Shaikh, or teacher, must with lus heart recite, 'There is no God but Allah, and Muhammad is the Prophet of Allah, whilst the Mund keeps his attention fixed by placing his heart opposite that of the Shaikh, he must close his eyes, keep his mouth firmly shut, and his tongue pressed against the roof of his mouth, his teeth tight against each other, and hold his breath, then, with great force, accompany the Shaikh in the sikr, which he must recite with his heart and not with his tongue. He must retain his breath patiently, so that within one respiration he shall say the 21kr three times, and by this means allow his heart to be impressed with the meditative sikr

"The beart," the same writer continues, "in this manner is kept constantly occupied with the idea of the Most High God, it will he filled with awe, love, and respect for Him. and, if the practiser arrives at the power of continuing to effect this when in the company of a crowd, the zikr is perfect cannot do this it is clear that he must con time his efforts. The heart is a subtle part of the human frame, and 1s apt to wander away after worldly concerns so that the easier mode of arriving at the proceeding is to compress the breath, and keep the mouth firmly closed with the tongue forced against the lips The heart is shaped like the cone of a fir-tree, your meditations should be forced upon it, whilst you mentally recite the zike. Let the La" be upward, the "Ilahu" to the right, and the whole phrase "La slaha illa 'llahu" (There is no God but Allah) be formed upon the fir-cone, and through it pass to all the members of the whole frame, and they feel its warmth By this means the world and all its attractions disappear from your vision, and you are snabled to behold the excellence of the Most High. Nothing must be allowed to distract your attention from the zikr, and ultimately you retain, by its medium, a proper conception of the Tauhid, or Unity of God

"The cone-shaped heart rests in the left breast and contains the whole truth of mare Indeed, it signifies the 'whole truth', it comprises the whole of man's existence within itself, and is a compendium of man, mankind great and small are but an extension of it and it is to humanity what the seed is to the whole tree which it contains within itself . In fine, the essence of the whole of God's book and of all His secrets is the heart of man. Whoever finds a way to the heart obtains his desire; to find a way to the heart is needed by a heartful service, and the heart accepts of the services of the heart. It is only through the fatigues of water and ashes that the Murid reaches the conversation of the heart and the soul, he will be then so drawn towards God that afterwards, without any difficulty, he may without trouble, in case of need, turn his face from all others towards Him He will then knowsthe real meaning of the Tark (the abandonment of the world), the Hagigat (the truth), the Hurriyat (the freedom), and the Zikr (the recital of God's names and praises)

As a curious instance of the superstitious character of this devotional exercise, the Chishtiyah order believe that if a man sits cross-legged and seizes the vein called Lus mas, which is under the leg, with his toes, that it will give peace to his heart, when accompanied by a zikrof the "nafi wa isbat," which is a term used for the Kalimah, namely -

Lā ilūha illā 'llāhu, " There is no deity but God "

The most common form of zilr is a recital of the ninety-nine names of God [MAMES OF GOD] for Muhammad promised those of his followers who recited them a sure entrance to Paradise (Mishkāt, book ex.) and to facilitate the recital of these names, the zilr (or reciter) uses a tashih (or rossry) [TASHH] In addition to the forms of gikr already

In addition to the forms of gikr already mentioned there are three others, which are even of more common use, and are known as Tasbih, Tahmid, and Talbir They are used as exclamations of joy and surprise, as well as for the devotional exercise of gikr

Tasbih is the expression Subhana 'llah' 'Holiness be to God'''

Tahmid, Alhamdu lı-'llah' "Praise be to Takbir, Allahu akbar ' "God is great '"

When the Tashik and Tahmid are recited together it is said thus, Subhāna Uāhi bi-hamdi-hi, ie "Holmess be to God with His praise" It is related in the Hadis that Muhammad said, "Whoever recites this sentence a hundred times, morning and evening, will have all his sine forgiven."

Muhammad said "Repeat the Tashik a hundred times, and a thousand virtues shall be recorded by God for you, ten virtuous deeds for each repetition "

In forming our estimation of Muhammad and Muhammadanism, we must take into consideration the important place the devotional exercise of gikr occupies in the system, not forgetting that it has had the authoritative sanction of "the Prophet" himself

The following is a graphic description of one of these devotional performances, by Dr Eugene Schuyler, in his work on Turkistan

"At about ten o'clock one Thursday evening, in company with several friends, we went to the mosque, and were at once admitted Some thirty men, young and old, were on their knees in front of the qiblah, reciting prayers with loud cries and violent move ents of the body, and around them was a circle, two or three deep, of men standing, who were going through the same motions We took up a position in one corner and watched the proceedings. For the most part the performers or worshippers had taken off their outside gowns and their turbans, for the night was warm and the exercise was violent They were reciting the words 'My defence is in God! May Allah be magnified! My light, Muhammad—God bless him! There is no God but God!" These words were chanted to various semi-musical notes in a low voice, and were accompanied by a violent move ment of the head over the left shoulder towards the heart, then back, then to the right shoulder, and then down, as if directing all the movements towards the heart These texts were repeated for hundreds and hundreds of times, and this zikr nanally lasted for an hom or two At first the movements were slow, but continually increased in rapidity, until the performers were unable to endure it any longer If anyone failed in his duty, or was slower, or made less movement than was required, the persons who regulated the enthusiasm went up to him and struck him over the head, or pushed him back out of the circle and called another into it sionally persons got so worn out with their cries, and so wet with perspiration, that it became necessary for them to retire for a few minutes rest, and then places were immediately taken by others When their voices became entirely hoarse with one cry another was begun, and finally the cry was struck up, 'He hves! He lives ' God lives!' at first slowly, with an inclination of the body to the ground then the rhythm grew faster and in cadence, the hody became more vertical, until at last they all stood up the measure still increased in rapidity, and, each one placing his hand on the shoulder of his neighbour, and then forming several concentric rings, they moved in a mass from side to side of the mosque, leaping about and always crying 'He lives' God lives!' Hitherto, there had been something wild and unearthly in it, but now to persons of weak nerves it became positively painful, and two of my friends were so much impressed as to be obliged to leave the mosque Although I was sufficiently coldblooded to see the ridiculous rather than horrible side of this, I could not help receiving an impression that the devotoes were a pack of madmen, whose motions were utterly independent of any volution of their own.

The intenations of the voice were very remarkable, and were often accompanied by most singular gestures, the hands or a book being often held to the side of the mouth in order to throw the voice as far as possible Often those recitations are merely collections of meaningless words, which always seem to preduce the same effect on the hearers, and are constantly interrupted by cries of Hi, ho.

och, och, ba, ba, and grouns and sobs, and the hearers weep, beat their breasts with their fists, or fall upon the ground."

The dancing and howling darweshes at Constantinople and Cairo have become public sights, and are familiar to those Europeans who have visited those cities

We are indebted to Mr Brown s account of The Dervishes (Trubner and Co , Ludgate Hill) for the following graphic description of one of these public recitals of zikr [FAOTE.]

of these public recitals of zikr [FAOTE.]

The ceremony commences by the recital by the Shaikh of the seven first attributes of the Divinity, called by them the seven mysterions words "He next chants various passages of the Koran, and at each pause the Dervishes, placed in a circle round the hall, respond in chorus by the word 'Allah' (God) or 'Hoo!' (Huwa or Hū, He). In some of the societies they sit on their heels, the elbows close to those of each other, and all making simultaneously light movements of the head and body In others, the movement consists in balancing themselves slowly from the right to the left, and from the left to the right, or inclining the body methodically forward and aft There are other societies in which these motions commence seated, in measured cadences, with a staid countenance, the eyes closed or fixed upon the ground, and are continued on foot singular exercises are conscerated under the name of Murakebeh (exaltation of the Divine glory) [muraqabuh, 'meditation'], and also under that of the Tevheed (celebration of the Divine unity) [Tauhid], from which comes the name Tevheed khaneh given to the whole of the halls devoted to these religious

"In some of these institutions such as the Kadirees, the Rufa'ees, the Khalwettees, the Bairamees, the Gulshences, and the 'Ushakees, the exercises are made, each holding the other by the hand, putting forward always the right foot, and increasing at every step the strength of the movement of the body. This is called the Devr (Daur), which may be translated the 'dance or 'rotation.' The duration of these dances is arbitrary,—each one is free to leave when he pleases Every one, however, makes it a point to remain as long as possible. The strongest and most robust of the number, and the most enthustastic, strive to persevere longer than the others, they uncover their heads, take off their tui bans, form a second circle within the other, entwine their arms within those of their prethren, less their shoulders against each other gradually raise the voice, and without ceasing reseat 'Yà Allah'' (O God), or 'Yà Hoo'' (O Ie), increasing each time the movement of the body, and not stopping until their entire strength is exhausted

"Those of the o ier of the Rufa'ees excel in these exercises. They are, moreover, the only ones who use fire in their devotions. Their practices embrace nearly all those of the other orders, they are ordinarily divided into five different scenes, which last more than three hours, and which are preceded, accompanied, and followed by certain cere-momes peculiar to this order. The first commences with praises which all the Dervishes offer to their sheakhs, seated before the altar Four of the more ancient come forward the first, and approach their superior, embrace each other as if to give the kiss of peace and next place themselves two to his right, and two to his left. The remainder of the Dervishes, in a body, press forward in a procession, all having their arms crossed, and their heads inclined Each one, at first, salutes by a profound bow the tablet on which the name of his founder is inscribed Afterwards, putting his two hands over his face and his beard, he kneels before the Sheikh, kisses his hand respectfully, and then they all go on with a grave step to take their places on the sheep-skins, which are spread in a half-circle around the interior of the hall So soon as a crele is formed, the

Dervishes together chant the Takbeer (Takbir, the exclamation Allāku akbar, 'Ged is exalted') and the Fatiha (Fātišah, the first chapter of the Qur'an) Immediately afterwards the shaikh pronounces the words 'La ilāha ill' Allah' (There is no deity but Ged), and repeats them incessantly, to which the Dervishes repeat 'Allah!' balancing themselves from side to side, and putting their hands over their faces, on their breasts, and their abdomen, and on their knees

"The second scene is opened by the Hamdee Mchammadee, a hymn in honour of the Prophet, chanted by one of the elders pisced on the right of the sheakh. During this chant the Dervishes continue to repeat the word 'Allah' moving, however, then bodies forward and aff. A quarter of an hom later they all rise up, approach each other, and press their clows against each other, balan-

reverse motion,—the right foot always firm, and the left in a periodical movement, the reverse of that of the body, all observing great precision of measure and cadence. In the midst of this exercise, they cry out the words 'Ya Aliah'' followed by that of 'Ya Hoo!' Some of the performers sigh, others sob, some shed tears, others porspire great drops, and all have their eyes closed, their faces pale, and the eyes languishing

"A pause of some minutes is followed by a third scene. It is perfor ied in the middle of an Hahee, chanted by the two elders on the right of the sheikh. The Hahees are spiritual cantigues, composed almost exclusively in Persian by shell's deceased in the odour of sanctity. The Dervishes then hasten their movements, and, to prevent any relaxation, one of the first among them puts him self in their centre, and ex ites them by his example. If in the assembly there be any strange Dervishes, which often huppens, they give them through politoness, this place of bonour, and all fill it successively, the one after the other shaking themselves as aforesaid. The only exception made is in favour of the Mevievees, these never purform any other dance than that peculiar to them own order, which consists in turning round on each heel in succession

"After a new pause commences the fourth scene. Now all the Dervishes take off their turbans form a circle, bear their arms and shoulders against each other, and thus make the circuit of the hall at a measured pace, striking their feet at intervals against the floor, and all springing up at once. This dance continues during the Ilâhees, chanted alternately by the two elders to the left of the sheikh. In the midst of this chant the cries of 'Ya Allah!' are increased doubly, as also those of 'Ya Hoo! with frightful howlings, shrieked by the Dervishes together in the dance. At the moment that they would seem to stop from sheer exhaustion, the sheikh makes a point of exerting them to new efforts by walking through their midst, making also himself most violent movements He is next replaced by the two elders, who double the quickness of the step and the agitation of the body, they even struighten themselves up from time to time, and excite the envy or emulation of the others in their astonishing efforts to continue the dance, until their strength is entirely exhausted

"The fourth scene leads to the last, which is the most frightful of all, the wholly prostrated condition of the actors becoming converted into a species of ecstasy which they call Halet (Halah) It is in the midst of this abaudonment of self or rather of religious delulum, that they make use of red hot grons Several cutlasses and other instruments of sharp pointed iron are suspended in the mohes of the hall, and upon a part of the wall to the right of the sheigh lear the close of the fourth scene, two Dorvishes take down eight or mue of these instruments, beat them red-bot and present them to the should. He, after reciting some prayers over them and invoking the founder of the Order Ahmed er Rufa'ee, breathes over them, and raising them slightly to the mouth, gives then to the Dervishes, who ask for thom with the greatest Then it is that 'bese fanatics, eagerness transported by frenzy, seize upon these irons, gloat upon them tenderly, hak them, bute them, hold them between then treth and end by cooling them in their mouthal Those who are unable to procure any seize upon the outlasses hanging on the wall with fury, and stick them into their sides arms, and

"Thanks to the furv of then frenzy, and to the amazing boldness wurch they deem a merit in the eyes of the Divinity, all steically bear up against the pain which they expe rience with apparent gaiety If, however, some of them fall under their sufferings they throw themselves into the arms of their con fières, but without a complaint or the least sign of pain Some minutes after this the sheikh walks round the hall visits each on of the performers in turn, breathes upon their wounds, rubs them with ashva, recites prayers over them, and promises them speedy cures It is said that twenty four hours afterwards nothing is to be seen of their wounds

"It is the common opinion among the Ru fa'ess that the origin of these bloody practices can be traced back to the founder of the Order They protend that one day, during the transport of his frenzy, Ahmed Ruffice put his legs in a burning basin of coals, and was immediately oured by the breath and saliva and the prayers of 'Abdul Kadır Ghilance, they believe that their founder received this same prerogative from neaven, and that at his death he transmitted it to all the sheaklis his successors. It is for this reason that they give to these sharp instruments, and to these red-hot irons, and other objects employed by them in their mysterious frenzy, the name of Gul, which signifies 'rose, wishing to indicate thereby that the use made of them is as agreeable to the soul of the elect Dervishes as the odour of this flower

may be to the voluptuary

These extraordinary exercises seem to have something prodigious in them, which imposes on common people, but they have not the same effect on the minds of men of good sense and reason The latter believe less in the sanctity of these pretended thaumaturges than in the virtue of certain secrets which they adroitly use to keep up the illusion and the credulity of the spectators, even among the Dervishes themselves It is thus, perhaps that some assemblies of these fanatics have given, in this age of light, and in the heart of the most enlightened nature, the ridiculous spectacle of those pious and barbarous buffooneries known by the name of convulsions At all times, and amongst every people of the earth, weakness and credulity entiresiasm and charlatanry, have but too frequently profaned the most holy faith, and objects the most worthy of our veneration.

"After the Rufa'ces, the Sa'dees have also the reputation of performing miracles, pretty much of the same sort as the preceding. One reads in the institutes of this Order, that Sad ed Deen Jebanes, its founder, when cut ting wood in the vicinity of Damasous, found three snakes of an enormous length, and that after having recited some prayers and blown upon them, he caught them alive, and used them as a rope with which to bind his fagot To this occurrence they ascribe the pretended virtue of the sheikhs and the Dervishes of this society, to find out snakes, to handle them, to bite them, and even to eat them, without any harm to themselves Their exercises consist, like those of the Rufa'ces and other Orders, at first in scating themselves, and afterwards in rising upright, but in often changing the attitude, and in re doubling their agitation even until they become overcome with fatigue, when they fall upon the floor motionless and without know-Then the sheakh, aided by his vicars, ledge employs no other means to draw them out of this state of unconsciousness than to rub their arms and legs, and to breathe into their ears the wor is 'La ilaha ill' Allah '

"The Mevievees are distinguished by the singularity of their dance, which has nothing in common with that of the other societies. They call it Sem a (Sama') in place of Devr (Dour), and the halls consecrated to it are called Sem's khaneha Their construction is also different. The apartment represents a kind of pavilion, sufficiently light, and suc-tained by eight columns of wood. These Dervishes have also prayers and practices peculiar to themselves Among them the public exercises are not ordinarily made by more than nine, eleven, or thirteen individuals. They commence by forming a circle, seated on sheep-skin apread upon the floor at equal distances from each other, they remain nearly a half-hour in this position, the arms folded, the 'eves closed, the head inclined, and absorbed in profound meditation

"The sheakh, placed on the edge of his seat on a small carpet, breaks silence by a hymn in honour of the Divinity, afterwards be mystes the assembly to chant with him the first chapter of the Koran Let us chant the Fatsha, he says, in 'glorifying the hely name of God, in honour of the blessed religion of the prophets, but above all, of Mohammed Mustapha, the greatest the most august, the most magnificent of all the celestial envoys, and in memory of the first four Caliphs, of the sainted Fatimah, of the chaste Khadeeja, of the Imams Hasan and Husam, of all the martyrs of the memorable day, of the ten evangelical disciples, the virtuous sponsors of our sainted Prophet, of all his zealous and faithful disciples, of all the Imams, Multahids (sacred interpreters), of all the doctors, of all the holy men and women Let us chant also in of Mussulmanism honour of Hazreti Mevlana, the founder of our Order, of Hazreti Sultan ul 'Ulema (his father), of Sayid Burhan ed Deen (his teacher), of Sheikh Shems ed Din (his consecrater), of Valideh Sultan (his mother) of Mohammed 'Allay ed Deen Elendi (his son and vicar), of all the Chelebees (his successors), of all the sheakhs, of all the Dervishes, and all the protectors of our Order, to whom the Supreme Being deigns to give peace and merov Let us pray for the constant prospenty of our hely society for the preservamercy tion of the very learned and venerable Chelebes Efends (the General of the Order), our master and lord, for the preservation of the reigning Sultan, the very majestic and clement Emperor of the Mussulman faith, for the prosperity of the Grand Visier and of the Sheikh ul Islam, and that of all the Mohammedan militia, of all the pilgrims of the holy city of Mekkeh Let us pray for the repose of the souls of all the institutors, of all the sheakhs, and of all the Dervishes of all other Orders, for all good people, for all those who have been distinguished by their good works, their foundations, and their acts of beneficence Let us pray also for all the Mussul mans of one and the other sex of the east and the west, for the maintenance of all prosperity, for preventing all adversity for the accomplishment of all salutary vows, and for the success of all praiseworthy enterprises finally, let us ask God to deign to preserve in us the gift of His grace, and the fire of holv

"After the Fatiha, which the assembly chant in a body, the Sheikh recites the Fatiha and the Salawat, to which the dance of the Dervishes succeeds Leaving their places all at once, they stand m a file to the left of the superior, and, approaching near him with slow steps, the arms folded, and the head bent to the floor, the first of the Dervishes, arrived nearly opposite the Sheikh, salutes, with a profound inclination, the tablet which is on his seat, on which is the name of Hazreti Mevlana, the founder of the Order Advancing next by two springs forward to the right side of the superior, he tr_ne toward him, salutes him with reverence, and commences the dance, which consists in turning on the left heel, in advancing slowly, and almost meensibly making the turn of th hall, the eyes closed, and the arms open He is followed by the second Dervish, he by the third, and so on with all the others, who and by filling up the whole of the hall, each repeating the same exercises separately, and all at a certain distance from each other

"This dance lasts sometimes for a couple of hours, it is only interrupted by two short pauses, during which the Sheikh recites different prayers Towards the close of the exercises, he takes a part in them himself, by placing himself in the midst of the Dervishes, then isturning to his seat, he recites some Persian verses expressive of good wishes for the prosperity of the religion, and the State The General of the Order is again named, also the reigning Sultan, in the following terms . The Emperor of the Mussalmans and the most august of momarchs of the house of 'Othman, bultan, son of a sultan, grandson of a sultan, Sultan -..... Khan,' &c Sultan —

" Here the poem mentions all the princes of blood, the Grand Vizier, the Muftee, all the Pashas of the empire, the Ulemas, all the Sherkhs, benefactors of the Order, and of all the Mussulman peers, invoking the benediction of heaven on the success of their arms against the enemies of the empire. 'Finally, let us pray for all the Dervishes present and absent for all the friends of our holy society, and generally for all the faithful, dead and living, in the cast and in the west

"The ceremony terminates by chanting the Fatiha, or first chapter of the Koran" (John P Brown, The Dervishes, or Oriental Spiritualism p 218 segg)

These coremonies of gikr would at first night sppear to have little in common with original Muhammadanism, but there appears to be little doubt that the practice of reciting the word Allah and other similar expressions, com menced in the days of Muhammad himself, and this even the Wahhabis admit, who at the same time condemn the extravagances of the Howling and Dancing Darveshes of Turkıstan, Turkey, and Egypt.

A chapter is devoted to the Prophet's injunctions on the subject in all large books of traditions, called Babu 's-Zukr, from which the following sayings of Muhammad have been selected '--

Whenever people sit and remember God, they are surrounded by angels which cover them with God's favour, and peace descends upon them, and God remembers them in that assembly which is near him.

Verily there are angels who move to and fro on the roads and seek for the remem-berers of God, and when they find an ac-sembly remembering God, they say to one another," Come ve to that which ye were seeking" Then the angule cover them with their wings as far as the iswest heaven, called the region of the world. The Prophet said :-- When the angels go to the court of God, God asks them, while knowing better than they, " What do my servants say and do?" Then the angels say, "They are reciting the Tasbih, the Takbir, the Tahmid, and the Tamjid for Thee" And God says, "Have they seen Me?" The angels say, "No, by God, they have not seen Thee" Then God says, "What would their condition be if they had seen Me?" The angels say, "If they had seen Thee, they would be more energetic in worshipping Thee and in reciting the Tamiid, and they would be more excessive in repeating the Tasbib." God says, "Then what do they want?" The angels say, "Paradise." Then God says, "Have they seen Paradise?" The angels say, "We swear by God they have not" Then God says, "What would their state have been had they seen Paradise?" The angels say, 'If they had seen Paradise, they would be very ambitious for it and would be excessive wishers of it, and very great desirers of it "God says, "What thing is it they seek protection from "The angels say, "From hell fire" God says, "Have they seen the fire?" The angels say, "No, by God, if they had seen the tire-God says, "How would they have been had they seen the fire?" The angels say, " If they had seen the fire, they would be great run-ners from it, and would be great fearers of it" Then God says, . I take ye as witnesses that verily I have pardoned them" One of the angels said, "There is a person amongst them who is not a rememberer of Thee and is only come on account of his own needs"

There is a polish for everything that takes rust, and the polish for the heart is the re-membrance of God, and there is no act that redosms from God's pumshments so much as the remembrance of Him The Companions said, "Is not fighting with the infidels also like this?" He said, "No. although he hke this?" fights until his sword be broken."

"Shall I not inform you of an action which is better for you than fighting with infidels and cutting off their heads, and their cutting off yours?" The Companions said, "Yes. inform us" The Prophet said, "These actions are remembering God"

'Abdullah ibn Aus said —An 'Arabi came to the Prophet and asked, "Which is the best of men?" The Prophet said, "Blessed is the person whose life is long and whose actions are good." The 'Arabi said, "O Prophet! which is the best of actions, and the most rewarded?" He said, "The best of actions is this, that you separate from the world, and die whilst your tongue is moist in repeating the name of God."

A man said, " O Prophet of God, really the rules of Islam are many, tell me a thing by which I may lay hold of rewards." The Prophet said, "Let your tongue be always most in the remembrance of God"

" Verily there are nmety nine names of God , whoseever counts them up shall enter into Paradise." And in another tradition it is added, "God is Witr and like Witr

When Za 'n-Nan (Jonah) the prophet prayed his Lord, when he was in the fish's belly, he said, "There is no Deity but Thee I extel Thy holiness Verily I am of the un-just ones" And a Musselman who annell-And a Musselman who supplicates God with this petition will have his prayer granted

The best expressions are these four Subhana Allahı al-Hamdu Lıllahı, La ılaha illā 'llāhu, and Allāhu akbar, and it does not matter with which of them you begin

Verily I like repeating these four expressions O Holy God! Praise be to God! There is no derty but God! and God is Great! better than anything upon which the

No one can bring a better deed on the Day of Resurrection (unless he shall have said the like or added to it) than he who has recited, "O Holy God! Praise be to Thee!" one hundred times every morning and evening

There are two expressions light upon the tongue and heavy in the scale of good works, and they are, "O Holy God! Praise be to Thee!" and "O Holy God! the Mighty One''

That person who shall say, "There is no derty but God, who has no partner, to whom is dominion and praise and power," one hundred times, shall receive rewards equal to the oman spating of ten slaves, and one hundred good actions shall be written for him, and one hundred of his sins shall be blotted out, and those words shall be a protection to him from the devil and his wickedness in that day in which he shall have repeated them, until the might Non can anyone perform a better deed for the Day of Resurrection than this, unless he has done even more

Moses said, "O my Lord, teach me how I am to call upon Thee" And God said, "O Moses, recite 'There is no deity but God!'" Then Moses said, "O my Lord every one of Thy people say this" And God said, "O Moses, if the seven heavens and their inhabitants and the seven earths were put into one scale, and this expression, 'There is no deity but God,' mto another, these words would exceed in weight "

Reciting "O Holy God" is half the scale of good works, and reciting "God be praised," fills the scale. The recital of "There is no delty but one," removes the curtain between the worshipper and his God

He who recites with an unsulted heart "There is no deity but God," shall have the doors of heaven open for him until he reaches the throne of God, as long as he abstains from great sins

The ejaculation, "There is no power and strength but in God," is medicine for ninetynine pains, the least of which is melancholy

"There are two qualities which, being pracused by anyone, shall cause him to enter Paradise, they are small and easy, and it is easy for anyone to practise them. One of them is this saying 'God is holy' ten times after every prayer, 'Praised be God' ten times, and 'God is great' ten times " And verily I saw the Prophet counting these words on his hand, and he would say, " Then those words are one hundred and fifty with the tongue in the day and night, but they are one thousand and five hundred in the scale of actions, reckoning ten for one And the second is this when he goes to his bed-chamber, let him say, 'God is holy,' and 'God be praised,' and 'God is great,' then that is one hundred on the tongue and a thousard in the scales Then which of you is it that commits two thousand five hundred vices in the day and night, so that these words may cover them ' The Companions said, " If when we repeat these words we have so many rewards, why should we not say them?" The Prophet said, "The Devil comes to one of you when at prayers and says to him, 'Remember so-and-so, till you have finished your prayers, and the Devil comes to you m your bed-chamber, and is always making you sleep '

ZIMMAH (Los), pl zimam, from the root zamm, "to blame" A compact, covenant, or contract, a league or treaty, any engagement or obligation because the breaking thereof necessitates blame, and a right or due, for the neglect of which one is to be blamed The word is also synenymous with aman, in the sense of security of life and property, protection or safeguard, and promise of such hence white 'z-zimmah, or, with suppression of the noun uhlu, simply az-zimmak, the people with whom a compact or covenant has been made, and particularly the Kitabis, or the people of the book se Jews and Christians, and the Majusi or Sabeans, who pay the polltax called jazyah [JAZYAH ] An individual of this class—namely, a free non-Muslim subject of a Muslim Government, who pays a poll- or capitation-tax, for which the Mus-lims are responsible for his security, personal freedom, and religious toleration—is called grammi (see the following article)

In the Qur'an the word zimmah occurs ence, in the sense of clientship, or good faith as oppposed to ties of blood Sürah ix 7-10

"How can they who add gods to God be in league with God and with His Apostle, save those with whom ye made a league at the sacred temple? So long as they are true to you, be ye true to them verily, God loveth those who fear Him

"How can they? muce if they prevail against you, they will not regard, in their dealing with you, either ties of blood or good fauth. With their mouths they content you, but their hearts are averse, and most of them are perverse doors

'They sell the signs of God for a mean price, and turn others aside from his way. of a truth, evil is it that they do!

"They respect not with a believer either ties of blood or good furth and these are the transgressors"

In modern language, the word semmeth has frequently the meaning of conscience (Compare Lane's Arabic Dictionary, in loco)

ZIMMI (محل), a member of the Ahiu 'z-Zimmah, a non-Muslim subject of a Muslim Government, belonging to the Jewish, Christian, or Sabean creed, who, for the payment of a poll- or capitation-tax, enjoya scenity of his person and property in a Muhammadan country

One of the most urgent duties enjoined by Muhammad upon the Muslim or true believer, was the Jihad fi Sabih Tlahi, or exertion in the road of God, se warfare for the apread of Islam, amongst the infidels within and without Arabia [JIHAD], thus the whole world came to be regarded as divided into two great portions, the Daru 'l-Harb and Daru I Islam [DARL 1-HARB, DARU L-ISLAM] the territories of War and the territories of Peace These two divisions, one of which represented the land of unfidelity and darkness, the other that of light and faith, were supposed to be in a continual state of open or latent belligerency, until the Daru 7 Islam should have absorbed the Daru I-Harb and faith conquered anbelief Difidelity, however, admits of degrees. Its worst shape is idolatry, that is, the worship of idols instead of or besides the one true God, and this, again, 14 a crime most abominable on the part of Arabs, "sure the Prophet was sent amongst them, and manufested himself in the midst of them and the Qur'an was delivered down in their language" Of an equally atrocious character is the infidelity of apostates, "because they have become infidely, after having been led into the way of faith, and made acquainted with its excellence" in the case of neither, therefore, is a compromise admissible they must accept or re-embrare the faith, or pay with their lives the full penalty of their crime

With regard to the idolaters of a non-Arabic of 'Ajam country, which latter expression in the times of early Islâm particularly applied to the Persian Empire, ash-Shāi'i maintains that destruction is incurred by them also, but the other learned doctors agree that it is lawful to reduce them to slavery thus allowing them, as it were, a respite during which it may please God to direct them into the right path, but making, at the same time, their persons and substance subservient to the cause of Islâm.

The least objectionable form of infidelity in the even of Muhammad and his followers, is that of the Kitäbis or people of the Book (akiu 'l-kitābi, i.a. the Jews, as possessors of the Old Testament, or Taurāt, and the Christians, to whom, moreover, the Injil (Gespel) was revealed. As they are not guity of an absolute denial, but only of a partial perversion of the truth, only part of the punishment for disbelief is their due, and it is imposed upon them in the shape of a tribute, called poll- or capitation- tax [JAAYAH], by means of which they secure protection for their property, personal freedom, and religious toleration from the Muslim Government. The same privilege is extended to the Majusi or Sabeans, whose particular form of woiship was more lemently judged by Muhammad and the Traditionists than that of the idolators of Persia.

This is the state of things if a country inhabited by such infidels be conquered by a Muslim arm; theoretically, the inhabitants, together with their wives and children, are considered as plunder and property of the State, and it would be lawful to reduce them to slayery. In practice, however, the milder course prevails, and by paying the stipulated capitation-tax, the subdued people become, in the quality of Zimnis, free subjects of the conquering power, whose condition is but little inferior to that of their Muslim fellow-subjects.

The relations of an alien or Harbī—that is, one who belongs to the people of the Daru 'l-harb—to a Muslim community which he visits, in time of peace, for the sake of traffic or any other legitimate purpose are regulated by that high conception of the duties of hospitality, which was muste with the ancient Arab, and which prompted him to defend and honour (ven a mortal enemy, as soon as he might have crossed as a chance guest the threshold of his tent

On entering the territory, an alien can claim a guest s protection from the first met Muslim, he it even the lowest peasant, and having obtained this protection, he is entitled to remain in the country unmolested for the term of a whole year Tue authorities, however, must within the year give him notice that, if he should remain until its completion, capitation-tax will be imposed upon him, and in such notice the permission for his stay may be limited to some months only, if for some reason or other it should appear advisable or necessary to do so If the alien continue in the country beyond the full or limited time prescribed, he becomes spso facto hable to the capitation-tax, and if, after thus becoming a Zimmi, he he desirous of returning to his own country, he may be prevented, as now being bound to the Muslim Government by a contract of fealty. In similar manner an ahen becomes a Zummi upon purchasing tribute land and paying the impost on it, and is then hable to captitation-tax for the ensuing An alien woman turns Zimmiyah by year marrying a Zimmi, because thereby she undertakes to reside in the Muhammadan (See Hamilton's Hidayah, vol ii p 196.)

Zimmis do not subject themselves to the laws of Islam, either with respect to things which are merely of a religious nature, such as fasting and prayer, or with respect to those temporal acts which, though contrary to the Muhammadan religion, may be legal by their own, such as the sale of wine or swine's The construction of places of worship in the Muslim territory is unlawful for them, unless within their own houses, but if churches and synagogues originally belonging to Christians and Jows be destroyed or fall to decay, they are at liberty to rebuild and repair them. This is the rule with regard to cities, because, as the tokens of Islam, such as public prayer, festivals, &c , appear there, Zimmis should not be permitted to exhibit the tokens of midelity in the face of them. in villages and hamlets, on the other hand, where the tokens of Islam do not appear, there is no occasion to prevent the construc tion of Christian and Jewish places of wor-(See Hamilton's Hidayah, vol u p 219)

Save some slight restrictions with regard to dress and equipage, Zimmis are held in all transactions of daily life pretty much on a footing of equality with Muslims Like children, women and slaves, a Zimmi has no legal share in the booty but only a discretionary allowance out of it, if he has taken part in the fight. If he has acted as a guide, and his services as such have been attended with any eminent advantage, he may, however, receive even a larger share than a Muham madan combatant (Hamilton's Hidayah

vol n, p 178)

Every marriage that is lawful between two Muslims, is lawful between two Zimmis Marriages that are not lawful between two Muslims are of several kinds Of these there is the marriage without witnesses. When a Zimmi marries a Zimmiyah without witnesses, and such marriages are sanctioned by their religion, the marriage is lawful. So that, if they should afterwards embrace the Muslim faith, the marriage would still be established And in like manner, if they should not embrace that faith, but should both claim from the judge the application of the rules of Islam, or one of them should make such a claim, the judge is not to separate them There is also the marriage of a woman during her 'iddah on account of another man ['IDDAH] When a Zimmi mairies a woman in her 'iddah for another man, that man being a Muslim, the marriage is invalid, and may he objected to before their adoption of the Muhammadan religion, even though their own religion should recognise the legality of marriage in the state of "ddah, but if the 'addah were rendered incumbent on the woman on account of an infidel, and marriages in a state of 'adduk are accounted lawful in the religion of the parties, it cannot be objected to while they remain in a state of infidelity, according to general agreement If under these chequinstances they afterwards adopt the Muslim faith, the marriage remains fixed and established, according to Abu Hanifah, whose decision is considered valid in spite of the different opinions of Abu Yusuf and Muhammad, and the judge is not to separate them, though both of them or only one of them should adopt the faith, or both or only one of them should bring the matter before the judge In the Mabsüt it is stated that the difference between the masters was only when the reference to the judge, or the adoption of the faith, takes place during the subsistence of the 'sddah', but where it does not take place till after the "adda has expued, the parties are not to be separated according to all their epinions (Baillie's Digest of Machummudan Law, Hunt

If a Zimmi marry a Zimmivah making the dewer consist of wine or pork, and one or both should afterwards embrace the faith before the wife has obtained seisin, according to Abu Hamfah, the woman is entitled to receive the actual article, if it has been "identically specified,' but if not, the estimated value of the wine or her proper dower in heu of the pork, as the case may be Abū Yusuf maintains that she is to have her proper dower, and Muhammad the estimated value in all cases If a Christian Zimmi marry a Christian Zimmīvah, without specifying any dower, or on a specified dower consisting of carmon (flesh of an animal not lawfully slain), such as may be deemed lawful by members of their profession and have sexual intercourse with her, or divorce her without consummation, or die without consummation, according to Abu Hanifah, she is not entitled to any dower, although both parties may have embraced the faith in the interim, but according to Abū Yūsuf and Muhammad, she will take her proper dower if the husband consummate the marriage, or die without consummation, and will be entitled to a present if she be divorced without consummation. (A Rumsey, Moshummudan Law of Inheritance, p 378)

When one of an infidel married couple embraces the Muhammadan faith, Islam is to be presented to the other, and if the other adopt it, good and well if not, they are to be sepa rated If the party is silent and says nothing. the judge is to present Islam to him time after time, till the completion of three, by way of caution And there is no difference between a discerning youth and one who is adult, so that a separation is to be made equally on the refusal of the former as of the latter, according to Abu Hanifah and the Imam Muhammad But if one of the parties be young and without sufficient discernment, it is necessary to want till he has understanding, and when he has understanding, Islam is then to be presented to him, and if he adopt it, well, if not, a separation is to be made without waiting for his arriving at pa berty And if he be mad, Islam is to be pre sented to his parents and if they, or one of them, should embrace it, good and well, if not, a separation is to be made between the married parties If the husband should embrace the faith and the wife refuse, the separation is not accounted repudiation, but if the wife should embrace the faith and the husband decline, the separation in consequence is considered a repudiation, since the cause of

When a sepaseparation proceeds from him ration takes place between them by reason of refusal, and it is after consummation, she is entitled to the whole dower; and if it is before consummation and through his refusal, she is entitled to half the dower; but if through her own refusal, she has no dower at all If, however, the husband of a Kitabiyah adopt the faith, their marriage remains unaffected in accordance with the general principle, that the marriage between a Muslim and a Kitabiyah is originally lawful. (Bailley, Hanifeea Code, p 180)

When a Zimmi has repudiated his Zimmiyah wife three times, and then behaves to her as he had done before the repudiation, without marrying her sgain, or saying the words of the contract over her, or when his wife has obtained a And or release [KHUL'], and he then acts to her as before without renewing the contact—they are to be separated, even though they should not bring the matter to the judge But if he repudiates her three times, and then renews the contract of marriage with her without her being married to another, they are not to be separated (Ib.)

The child follows the religion of the better of its parents Hence, if one of them be a Muslim, the child is of the Muslim religion. The mother could not be so ab initio, but only in consequence of conversion to the Muhammadan faith, for a Mushm woman cannot lawfully be the wife of any other than a man of her own religion So also, if one of them should subsequently embrace Islam, having an infant child, the infant would become Muslim by virtue of the parent's conversion, that is, when there is no difference of dar, by both of the parents being either within the Daru'l-Islam or the Daru 'l-Herb, or by the child being in the former at the time that its parent embraces the Muslim faith in the foreign country, for he then becomes constructively one of the Muslim people, but when the child is in the foreign country, and the parent within the Muslim territory, and he adopt the faith there, the child does not follow him, and is not a Muslim A Majusi is worse than a Kıtabi and if one of the parents be a Majūsī and the other Kıtübī, the child is a Kıtâbî, and may be lawfully married by a Muslim, to whom also things slaughtered by the child would be lawful

Generally, an infidel cannot sakerst from a believer, nor, on the other hand, can a behever inherit from an infidel , but infidel subjects of a Muslim state can inherit from one another. And it is immaterial, for such a purpose, whether they be of the same religion or not, all unbelievers being, in this respect, considered as of one class. A Muslim may, however, make a bequest to a Zimmi and a Zimmi to a Muslim, as well as to another infidel, whether of the same or of a different religion, not being a hostile alien. The testamentary power of a Zimmi is subject to the same limitations as that of a Muslim, so that bequests to a person entitled by inheritance are invalid, and bequests to any other person are invalid so far as they exceed one-third of the testator's property This for the reason that, on entering into the comsect of Zimmah, he has agreed to conform to the laws of Islam in all temporal concerns (See A Rumsey, Mochummidan Law of In heritance, p. 222)

The will of a Zimmi for secular purposes is valid, according to all opinions than secular purposes are of four different kinds First, there are purposes which are urbah, or a means of approach to Almighty God, both with Zimmis and Muslims, and bequests for these purposes are valid, whether they be to a set of particular persons or not Thus, wuen a Kitabi has directed by his will. that slaves be purchased and emancipated on his account, whether with or without a speci fication of individuais, or that a third of his property be bestowed in charity on beggars and the indigent, or expended in lighting a lamp in the Baitu 'l-Muqaddas or Holy Temple of Jerusalem, or in making war against the infidel Tartars the bequest is valid

Second, there are purposes which are sinful both with the Zimmis and the Muslims, and bequests for these purposes are valid, if they are to a set of particular persons, and the bequest is a gift without regard to the purposes but if the persons are not particularised the bequest is void. If, therefore, a Zimmi should bequeath, for instance, a third of his property for the support of dissolute women, singers, and the like, the bequest is valid, if such persons are particularised and it is a gift to them, but if they are not particularised, it is vo d.

Third, there are purposes which are qu bah with the Muslims, but sinful with the  $\mathbf{Z}$ immis. In this, as in the previous case, the bequest is a gift and valid if in favour of a set of particular persons, but it is void, if the persons are not particularised Hence, if the third of a man's property is to be expended in sending a set of Muslims on pilgrimage, or building a masjid, and the persons are parti cularised, the bequest or gift is valid and considered to be coupled with a counsel to accomplish the stated purpose, leaving them at liberty to perform the pilgrimage or erect the most ue, or not, as they please Fourth and last, there are purposes which are emful with a Muslim, but gurbah or meritorious with a Zimmi, and bequests for these are valid, according to Abn Hanifah, whether the persons be particularised or not, but void, according to Abu Yusuf and the Imam Muhammad, when they are not specified for instance, a Kitābi bequeath a third of his property for the erection of a church or synagogue, or bequeath his mansion to be convarted into a place of worship of his religion, the bequest, socording to the two disciples, is void, as sinful in the eyes of a Muslim, unless it is for a particular class of persons, when it is a gift to them, but, according to Abu Hanifah, it is valid under all circumstances This, however, subject to the condition stated above, that the erection of such buildings takes place in villages and not in | place of the departed teaches the living.

towns, the bequest in the latter case being inoperative (See Bailley, Hangesa Code, p. 678 )

If a Jew or a Christian, being in sound health, build a church or a synagogue, and then die, such building is an inheritance, according to all the doctors, and therefore descends to the heirs in the same manner as any other of the founder's property From the point of view taken by the two disciples this is evident enough. But with regard to Abu Hanifah's doctrine, the question may be raised What is the difference between the building of a church or synagogue in the time of health, and the bequeathing it by will, that Abu Hanifah should hold it inheritable in the former instance, and not in the latter This "objection" This "objection" is met in the Hidayah with the "reply" "that it is not the mere erecting (of the church, &c) which extinguishes the builder's property, but the exclusive dedication of the building to the ser vice of God, as in the case of mosques erected by Mussulmans, and as an unfidel place of worship is not dedicated to God indisputably, if therefore still remains the property of the founder, and is consequently inheritable (in common with his other effects), whereas a bequest, on the contrary, is used for the very purpose of destroying a right of property (Hudāyah, Grady's Translation p 696)

ZINA' (علاء) [ADULTERY]

(رندین) ZINDIQ A term now used to express a person in a hopeless state of infidelity Some say the word is derived from the Persian Zan din, i e a woman's religion. Others assert that it is a term of relation to the word Zand or Zend, which means "explanation," ie the explanation of the book of Zardusht or Zorouster (See Lane's Arabic Dictionary, in loco)

ZIPPORAH SAFURA'

ZIYARAH (زيارة), from the root zaur, "to visit," visitation, particularly of the temb of the Prophet, and of the grave of any martyr or saint of the Muhammadan faith. In India and Central Asia the word, always pronounced ziyarat, is, by way of abbrevia-tion, used for ziyarat-gan, i.e. for the place of such visitation, or the shrine connected with it

Although it is held by Wahhabis and other Muslum purstans that the Prophet forbade the visitation of graves for the purposes of devotion, the custom has become so common, that it may be considered part of the Muhammadan religion. And, indeed, it is difficult to believe that a .'eligious teacher of Muhammad's cast of mind should have in principle opposed a practice which is an natural to the However much he may have human heart objected to the clamorous wailings and lamentations over the dead, in which the pagan Arabs of the ignorance, especially the women, indulged, he was not likely to be insensible to the solemn lesson which the resting7 7 or to stifle in his followers the plous remem-brance of beloved friends and kindred who have gone before We see, therefore, no resson to doubt the genuineness of the following traditions, which we translate from a manuscript of the Munkan, belonging to the Library of the India Office (Arabic MSS., No. 2143, New Catalogue, 154), and which the compiler of that work has taken from such authorities as Muslim, Ibn Mājah, at-Tirmizī, do

Buraidah related, the Apostle of God said "(Fermerly) I forbade you to visit the graves, but you may visit them now "(Mushm) but you may visit them now Abu Hursirah related the Prophet visited the grave of his mother, and he wept and caused those who were around him to weep also. Then he said "I begged leave from my Lord to ask forgiveness for her, but it was not granted me, then I begged leave to visit her grave, and it was granted ine, visit therefore the graves, for they remind you of death " (Muslim.)

The Apostle of God used Buraidah related to instruct them, when they issued forth to the burnal-places, to pronounce the words "Peace be upon you, O ye people of these abodes from amongst the Believers and the Resigned, and we, if God please, are surely overtaking you to ask salvation from God for us and you." (Mushm) Ibn 'Abbas related The Prophet passed by some graves in al-Mudinah, and he turned his face towards them and said "Peace be upon you O ye people of the graves, may God forgive us and you, ye are the van of us and we (following) in your steps "

'Ayishah related that when the turn of her night had come on the Prophet's part, he used to step out towards the end of the night into al-Baqi (the burish ground of al-Madinah) and to say "Peace be with the abode of a be-lieving people, and the time that has been promised you as your appointed term may come to you on the morrow (speedily), and we, if please God, are overtaking you O God, grant forgiveness to the people of Baqi'u 'l-Garqad." She asked "What shall I say, Q Apostle of God, to wit, on visiting the graves?" He replied "Say, Peace be upon the people of these abodes from amongst the Believers and the Resigned, and God have compassion on those of us that go before and those that follow, and we, if please God, are overtaking you." (Muslim)

Muhammad ibn Nutam related, the Prophet said "He who visits the grave of his father and mother, or of either of them, on every Friday, his sms are forgiven, and he is written down as one pious" (Bathaqi)

Ibn Mas'ud related, the Apostle of God said " I had forbidden you to visit the graves, but now ye may visit them, for they detach from this world and remind of the world to come."

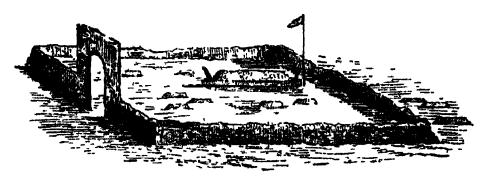

(Ibn Mājah.)
Abn Hurairah related "The Apostle of God sursed women visiting the graves." To this the compiler of the Mishkät adds. At Tirmin calls this tradition a well-supported and genuine one, and says. " Some of the learned are of epinion that this happened before the Prophet permitted the visitation of th but that when he did so, both men at were included in the permission; again allege, that he only disapp women visiting the graves, because but little given to patience and fear "

In the face of these texts we canno that the practice of visiting the grav a marked feature in the religious li Muhammadans, and that the teml founder of Islam and the burial-pla chief confessors have become the c great devotional reverence. tion, as follows -

"They will ask thee of Zu'l-garnam. Say I will recite to you an account of him Verily We (God) established his power upon the earth, and We gave him a means to ac-complish every end, so he followed his way, until when he reached the setting of the sun, he found it to set in a miry fount, and hard by he found a people We (God) said, O Zü'l-qarnain! whether thou chastise or whether thou treat them generously'- As for him who is impious' he said, 'we will chastive him,' then shall he be taken back to his Lord, and He will chastise him with a grievous chastisement. But as to him who believeth, and doeth that which as right, he shall have a generous recompense, and We will lay on them our easy behests.
